(7) The fact that a ruling will be published and the benefit of its principles claimed by taxpayers similarly situated is the strongest possible deterrent against making unsound rulings.

(8) During the course of the hearings there has been a great deal of evidence tending to show that it is the policy of the bureau to fix taxes by bargain rather than by principle. Rulings based upon bargains can not be published as precedents. The best and most persistent trader gets the lowest tax and gross discrimination is the inevitable result of such a policy.

PUBLICITY OF RECORDS

The unsatisfactory condition developed by this investigation are the inevitable result of the delegation of almost unlimited discretion to be secretly exercised. It is believed that but few of the unsound settlements to which attention has been called would have been made if it were not for the belief that they would never become public.

Congress in imposing a system of taxation, the administration of which necessarily involves the exercise of so much discretion, assumes some duty to the public to see that such discretion is not abused.

DISCRIMINATIONS

(1) The bureau has, without authority, made retroactive the provisions of sections 327 and 328 of the 1918 revenue act in regard to abnormalities of invested capital and income in determining taxes for the year 1917.

(2) No scientific basis has been set up by the bureau for determining when a company is entitled to special assessment.

(3) The grounds for special assessment granted by the bureau are in some cases economically unsound and in other cases result in nullifying those provisions of the act limiting the allowance of good-will values in invested capital, excluding borrowed capital from invested capital, providing for the taxation of gains due to appreciation after March 1, 1913, and providing for the valuations of stock issued on reorganization. In certain cases the results which would be obtained from the application of the war-profits tax are also nullified.

(4) The bureau's methods in administering the special assessment provision of the act have resulted in gross discrimination between taxpayers.

Section 326 of the revenue act of 1918, page 198, qualified the restriction upon the value of property exchanged for stock to its par value. Examples: Phelps-Dodge Corporation, Pond Creek Coal Co., United States Graphite Co., Union Sulphur Co.

BORROWED CAPITAL ILLEGALLY INCLUDED IN INVESTED CAPITAL

Both the 1917 and 1918 acts specifically provide that borrowed capital on property can not be included in invested capital. The 1918 act and the published rulings of the Bureau of Internal Revenue provide that liabilities carried in open book account are borrowed capital within the meaning of that term as used in the act.

Section 207 of the act of October 3, 1917, provides that—

As used in this title, "invested capital" does not include * * * money or other property borrowed * * *.

Section 326 (c) of the revenue act of 1918 provides that—

As used in this title, the term "invested capital" does not include borrowed capital.

Five cases are cited in which the taxpayer included borrowed capital as invested capital, all of which were disallowed by the tax units or commissioners and sustained by the board of appeals.

That these published rulings can not be accepted as conclusive of the practice of the Income Tax Unit and that there is gross discrimination in dealing with this subject is shown by the allowances to the Star Co., of New York.

APPRECIATION INCLUDED IN INVESTED CAPITAL

The published regulations and rulings of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, as well as the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, construe the term "invested capital," as defined in section 207 of the revenue act of 1917 and section 326 of the revenue act of 1918, as meaning the capital contributed to or paid into an enterprise plus any net profits earned but not drawn out of the business. (Secs. 831–840, Regulations 45, A. R. R. 517, Cumulative Bulletin No. 4, La Belle Iron Works v. United States, 256 U. S. 377.)

These rulings and regulations specifically hold that in determining the earned surplus to be included in invested capital due deduction from operating earnings must be made to cover sustained depletion, and that appreciation in the value of the property can not be offset against depletion sustained in determining invested capital is held by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case above cited.

That the decision of the Supreme Court, as well as its own rulings, were ignored is illustrated in the case of Anaconda Copper Co. It will be seen that the Internal Revenue Department has manifested an utter disregard as to a uniform method of taxation, but has willfully, knowingly, and intentionally shown favoritism and discrmimination, laying the foundation for corruption and fraud. Verily the power to tax is the power to destroy.

EXPIRED PATENTS AS INVESTED CAPITAL

The Pressed Steel Car Co. was organized in 1899 to take over the assets and business of the Schoen Pressed Steel Co. and Fox Pressed Steel Equipment Co. The authorized capital stock was $25,000,000, of which $1,500,000 was sold for working capital and $23,500,000 was exchanged for the property and business of the old concerns, consisting of patents, $10,000,000; good will, $5,000,000; other assets, $8,500,000. The invested capital for 1917 was determined to be $37,000,000, consisting of $25,000,000 paid-in capital and earned surplus of $12,000,000. In computing the earned surplus no deduction was made to cover depreciation of the patents, all of which expired in 1917. Under the 1918 act patents are made intangible property, and intangible property acquired for stock is limited by congressional statute to 25 per cent of the outstanding capital stock for invested capital purposes. Under these specific provisions the patents and good will as invested capital, to the amount of $15,000,000, could not be included in the revenue bill in 1918 as invested capital for an amount in excess of $6,250,000.

Mr. Gregg stated that the practice followed in this case had been followed in thousands and thousands of cases.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS

The committee says (p. 219), considered from every angle:

We contend that the policy of granting corporations relief by special assessments because the said corporations pay its officers too small salaries, is unsound, illegal, and ridiculous. Efficient management of a corporation is not an abnormal condition demanding relief from taxation. The bureau contends this is a correct basis. The revenue act of 1918, section 200, sets up certain restrictions concerning the right of assessment under the name of personal-service corporation. The bureau evidently considers this provision of the statute too strict, so it proceeds to nullify the effect of these restrictions by special assessment. Why did the bureau not ask Congress to amend this section 200 if it was unjust, instead of trying to accomplish that purpose by applying the special assessment? Ask the commissioner.

From the decisions of the United States Supreme Court I have quoted those that have gone the farthest and strongest with respect to the delegation of legislative power, upon which those desiring to make such grants can base their claims. The Couzens investigating committee has developed that under the grant of power to make rules and regulations the Internal Revenue Department has had but little respect for the statutes as enacted by Congress, or even for its own rules. It has acted upon its own momentary whims and desires. The cases cited by the Couzens committee refer only to large incomes. The millions of small taxpayers who can not employ expert advice and help, because it would be cheaper to pay the increased assessment than to pay the expert, as usual, go unnoticed and bear their burden in silence.

Mr. Chairman, I want right here to answer Senator COUZENS and his committee and put it into the RECORD where they can see it, and I want my colleagues on this floor to pay attention thereto, especially the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, chairman of Ways and Means Committee. Why should the bureau come to Congress, why should it not have changed the law to meet its ideas? Has not Congress abdicated to it the right to do these things?

Has not the gentleman from Iowa twitted me because of my ignorance in not knowing that Congress had this right? Did he not deny to Congressmen the right to debate the question? Did not the Senate which authorized Senator COUZENS's committee to make this investigation strike from the House revenue bill the requirement that the Internal Revenue Department should publish their rulings and report them to Congress?

Mr. Chairman, what they should have done was to have joined me in 1924 in striking from the bill section 1101. Are we, as a whole, afraid of the Internal Revenue Department? Unless a halt is called, unless Congress soon asserts and reassumes its powers, it will not be long ere the executive branch will not take the trouble to ask us to rubber stamp its wishes even in part.

Mr. Chairman, there are more than 50 cases cited by the committee with explanations. For want of time these have not been intelligently and fully discussed. This investigation has fully justified the position that I have heretofore taken and now take, that Congress should write its own laws and quit granting blanket delegations of power to the executive branch to make rules and regulations that have the binding force of law. If Congress expects ever to reestablish itself in the confidence of the public it must stop passing the buck. It must function and function in the interest of the general public. It must stand upon its hind legs and tell special interest to stand aside. By special interest I do not mean only big capital, I mean any person or coterie of persons, any minute organization or combination of organizations that may chance to hang around the lobbies demanding that the Treasury door be opened to them by direct or indirect methods.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are we going to do about it? The court says Congress can not delegate its legislative power. Does Congress intend to admit its inability to function and abdicate to the executive branch the lawmaking power? We enact an average of 400 to 500 statutes annually, or 6,500 laws in the past 13 years, during which time the executive branch has gotten into full swing in the lawmaking business. By the 85 departments, bureaus, boards, and commissions, to all of which Congress has abdicated, in part, its power to make rules and regulations and decisions, "New names for an old thing," there have been promulgated in the same period of time a probable 100,000 or more laws, all carrying penalties upon American citizens for violation. Many of them unwritten and unpublished by men unknown to the taxpayer, appointed, some under civil service, who can not be reached by the voter. Unintentionally perhaps somebody has violated his oath of office, somebody has betrayed the trust of the people, somebody has neglected his duty. It seems to me that every man in every branch of the Government in any manner responsible for and indorsing this system should be held to account. The people ought to know what we are doing to them in order that one or both of the great political parties may at their next national conventions write into their platforms a plank condemning this practice as unwarranted and unlawful. Some Congressmen seem to think that because the Supreme Court declares that a thing may be done we are bound to do it, but we are not. We are supreme within our delegated powers, and self-respect should prompt us to do our duty. The taxing power should be held rigidly to laws written by Congress. The Ways and Means Committee should be enlarged and divided into subcommittees. The Appropriations Committee should be abolished and responsibility distributed. Oh, I know the arguments for its existence.

Mr. Chairman, my answer is that the representatives of 8,400,000 people appropriate all of the money of 115,000,000, the representatives of 106,000,000 of whom, practically have no voice in the matter. The creation of the Budget Commission has been hailed as the greatest piece of constructive legislation of the century; in my opinion it is the first step in turning over to a single head the taxing power, which though useful at the moment, will in time lead to the greatest abuse, for history teaches that the man intrusted with vast powers in any field of endeavor is an exception who has not abused that power. Indeed the Congress has, I believe, reduced in some measure the appropriations recommended in every Budget that has been presented, and yet the Congress has been censured for its extravagance, while the President has been lauded for his economy. Following the example of Congress, of the courts, and its own practices, this Budget stepping-stone will sooner or later lead to the demand as a right by the Executive to exercise the taxing power without restraint or check by Congress. Even now it is almost impossible to get a congressional committee to report a bill authorizing the payment of an honest debt by the Government unless agreeable to the executive branch. Already Congress has delegated to the Executive the right to raise or lower duties at will, to fix through the Budget Commission that which we may spend. In short, the power to reward his friends and punish his enemies. Where are the friends of the people? The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], in a speech upon this floor, aptly said, "The people have no representation." Congress has surrendered under whip and lash to the Executive, representing big interests on one hand and loud-mouthed minorities seeking special interest on the other. The masses are ignored except to pay the bill.

What ought to be done? Mr. Chairman, the self-respect of congressmen should prompt them to change the rules of this House which hamstring and hog-tie its Members as a whole to the dominance of a very few. Responsibility should be distributed as a means of checking the concentration of power and to preserve the reserved rights of those whom we are supposed to represent.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I yield to no one in my admiration for the great city of New York, one of the wonder cities of the world and one that history will always record as a marvel of the existing civilization. It will always have a place with the great metropolises which have secured the admiration of past ages and with those even mightier cities that are yet to come.

In the main I agree with the views expressed by Mr. LAGUARDIA, but I can not agree with that gentleman entirely when he suggests that New York ought to be given a great deal of credit for paying enormously of the revenues of the Federal Government. New York, and I repeat we all have an admiration and an affection for the imperial city of the Western Continent, only pays upon the income which she derives from all parts of the United States. The suit of clothes on my back, the shoes that I wear, the underclothes I have on, and the hat I have out there in the cloakroom, all came from New York, although I live in the city of New Orleans. That same thing may be said by millions of people who reside in all parts of the United States.

For many reasons and from many standpoints New York is well situated and is a great and populous city and will long remain so, and we are proud of it. We are not envious of it

But there are a great many reasons which are not necessary for me to dwell upon, but which are clearly obvious, why we should not give undue consideration to the claims of the big cities but should correctly appraise the metropolis and the taxes paid to the Federal Government from there as a collecting agency, as it were, for incomes, revenues, and returns from all parts of the United States. I might mention, however, that her banking houses are aided enormously by the balances that business and financial concerns carry there and that insurance rate premiums, fire and life, and railroad rates derived from every village and town from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Canadian line to the Gulf, give her an artificial advantage which combined with her natural advantages makes her invincible. She occupies a magnificent position, and for that reason is the legal domicile of many large corporations and industries that drain the country of vast wealth, and therefore ought to pay the income taxes upon the prodigious revenues it derives from all parts of the United States of America.

But what I really rose to say, Mr. Chairman, was that a few weeks ago there appeared an article in a magazine published in Chicago, called "Liberty," which is beginning to enjoy a tremendous vogue. It is probably a rival of the Saturday Evening Post. Its editorials are short, pithy, and contain a great deal of information. And this editorial to which I refer received the commendatory approval of all the newspapers of the United States, judging from the excerpts that I have seen in the New Orleans papers that I have read. It states that it is more important to have a surplus which might be invested in public works than to grant a tax reduction.

That paper represents in all probability the conservative thought of some of the biggest financial interests of the United States. It is suggested that the great danger this country wanted to guard against was nonemployment; that it is more important to keep our workmen employed, those who toil and earn their bread by the sweat of their brow—it is far more important that millions and millions of our countrymen should know where they are going to lay their heads, and know that they are going to have something of a revenue to sustain them in life, than to be concerned over the reduction of taxes to men who, to use an old expression, not offensively, were born with silver spoons in their mouths, were rocked in golden cradles, and who dwell in palaces of wealth during their lifetime. We have to concern ourselves with the vast majority who can not pay income taxes. According to the returns of our Department of Labor, our countrymen, 9 out of 10 of them, have nothing with which to meet a rainy day; so that I say, I think, never having been a worshiper of Mammon, believing that those able to pile up millions and millions and who come into the world so equipped as to make for success in that direction are not in need of our special concern, that that editorial contains more human wisdom, understanding of life, governmental philosophy, and economic knowledge than anything your Committee on Ways and Means heard during their entire session, and I say that most respectfully of the committee. I believe the Government need not concern itself too seriously over those fortunate few who pick apples of gold from pictures of silver. I would like to give my unqualified and admiring approval to that editorial and say that I believe it is far more important for our country to use a surplus so as to relieve the woes and miseries of the humbler classes in the United States, and far more important to pass and grant a flood relief bill than to fret about a reduction which sum might be profitably invested by our country in the manner I have suggested.

My friends, it would be merely a repetition of a sad story for me to tell you about the great suffering of the people of the Mississippi Valley during the recent devastating flood, when 700,000 people were rendered homeless and hundreds of millions of property destroyed. I know that it is almost unnecessary for me to say that if we are not given the protection we are entitled to, we might as well abandon the valley and seek other homes, for our efforts to secure the fruits of our labor and toil will be fruitless. That grim terror of leaving our homes forever, that specter of the flood wiping us out, country and city, has been with us night and day for more than two generations. If the Nation through the Federal Government does not do its full duty some historian of the future ought to entitle that chapter "The Nation's disgrace."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. But during the period of the slow but sure evacuation of the valley, industry, finance, agriculture, and commerce would feel the tremendous loss of that vast purchasing power which lies in that vast region and which to a large extent makes for the prosperity of the North and South Atlantic Coast States. New England and other sections of the North which sell to the river States their goods would feel the tragic result. It is far more necessary and wiser to use any surplus as an aid to the disheartened agriculturists and the workers and enough to keep up our river and harbor work and our public-building work and road work, to provide for flood relief and against those disasters and calamities which attack all nations soon or late, than to add a few dollars more to coffers that are bursting full. I repeat, I am more concerned in keeping the masses of our people employed than in granting a reduction of taxes to those who have more money than they know what to do with at this moment, even though that may be deemed desirable by financiers and economists. [Applause.] Use the surplus to take up the slack in dull times, in periods of industrial depression, by putting men who would otherwise be out of employment to work on public works, and when industry revives slow up on public work and return to activity in that direction at the next cycle of depression.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has again expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has called my attention to an error in my statement with respect to the publication of the rules and regulations. I find he is correct; but it emphasizes the fact that the Internal Revenue Department, in withholding the publication of 17,143 rules and regulations, has not followed the mandate of the law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the few remarks which I have to make are on the general tax bill. None of us seem to be disappointed with, or disaffected in particular about, what the committee has reported, and as I have listened to the remarks this afternoon I have heard of only one or two amendments that may possibly be offered, showing our satisfaction in the main with the committee's work on the particular bill. But at this time we ought to have an opportunity of expressing ourselves if we do not fully agree with the underlying idea of raising our money by this particular method of taxation. It is very interesting for me—as one of those who has never been fully in harmony with this method—to read what those who are the friends or the fathers of the bill have to say about it. I have been very much interested in reading in the hearings during the last week the many warnings of our friend from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], who, I think, is indeed very sound on the matter of income taxation, although I sometimes have the suspicion—having seen it work—that the only purpose of having an income tax in a State was simply to relieve intangibles from paying that share of the burden which they ought to pay, knowing that it must remain for real property to pay that vicious property tax. So you can not blame us for sometimes having that suspicion, even about those whom you are apt to follow and who you know really are sincere in the matter of the income tax.

Yesterday a tribute was paid here by the leader of the Democratic Party to our friend, as we sometimes familiarly call him, "Tommy" Adams. I have known of him for many years. We all value his opinions. He was one of the founders and is certainly one of the friends of the income tax. One of the purposes of my rising here is to insert in the RECORD the words of Professor Adams, which appeared in the press of yesterday:

> The administration of the Bureau of Internal Revenue he criticized as a "standing indictment against our political intelligence and our capacity for efficient administration."
> He asserted that on June 30, 1927, there were 18,313 cases pending before the Board of Tax Appeals, and it would take the board four years to clear its docket even though no new cases should come before it.
> He said this congestion was due to the "legalistic idolatry" of the American mind and the constant change in personnel due to low wages. The remedy, he said, lay in a few simple changes that the business men or the engineer would recognize after even a superficial study.

I am inclined, however, to disagree with his last statement. There are 226 pages in this bill, and there are many pages, I am sure, that are exceedingly complicated and difficult to understand, although they may be necessary. We have, indeed, adopted a method of determining net incomes which is itself difficult and complicated.

I have here a statement from a prominent official of the Federal Government—one who is a recognized authority in the matter of the income tax—a statement that is a terrible indictment of this method of raising money, and I want this to go in the RECORD:

> Already suffering from technical "congestion of the brain," the Federal tax law must either be simplified or die of complications. Four hundred million dollars, the annual toll paid by private citizens and corporations for advice and accounting merely to prepare returns, exceeds fourth of total tax yield.

If that is not indictment enough, and if it does not carry a suggestion that we ought to try to think of some other method of raising money, I do not know what is or would.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That would be something of an indictment if it were so.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will enlarge upon that statement by saying that $100,000,000 was estimated for the hiring of attorneys; $300,000,000 for accounting and the time of officials of corporations and individuals in keeping their books in such a condition that they could properly make a tax return. I do not think the gentleman's imagination would be overdrawn in believing that it costs individuals and corporations combined this sum of $400,000,000.

The one who made this assertion is the man who had charge of our income tax in Massachusetts, and was recognized by us to be easily the foremost man on the subject of income tax in our State. We could not pay him salary enough, and for the last several years he has represented private individuals and corporations, with offices both in Boston and Washington. He states here that he realizes it costs the citizens of Boston at least $3,000,000, and he goes on to explain that it is reasonably easy to get a proportional cost for the whole country.

I do not know what better authority we could get, but I do not care if it were only $200,000,000, half of the amount he suggests; we all know that the total sum is outrageously high and that there ought to be some other and simpler method which would not place so great a burden on the taxpayer.

You can not fairly determine net income, and you know you can not determine it. When the gentleman from Illinois answered the question about providing a deduction on account of sickness or on account of the education of children, he said that the taxpayers would abuse such permission, that they would enlarge on such bills, and it would be impossible to determine the truth. Think of the risk the Government must run on the deductions allowed upon tremendous and complicated business transactions. He has to take the word of the department down there on those big things, but the department can not be trusted to O. K. and dissect a doctor's bill or a bill for the education of children.

Criticisms of this nature should be welcome in a general discussion, for if they were not made the impression might prevail that we have the best method available to meet the expenses of our Government.

Many think the income tax law ought to be reserved for the States. However, we have made such a mess of it the States have not seen fit to take any leaves out of our copybook recently and enact more income tax laws. They have learned that the procedure is too complicated.

Some day, Mr. Chairman, I hope you will be able to frame a bill that we may merely ask the taxpayer, "How much are you worth? What is the market value of what you are worth," and not force him to go through the very complicated procedure of trying to determine—something which you can not determine in many cases—his net income, and that at a great cost to him.

I do not believe in an exemption of $3,500. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] that there should be fewer exemptions but that we should have more liberal deductions. Everybody should pay something, his proportionate share of the expenses of his government, so that we may have a broad base on which to stand. The present method is altogether too unfair. Even politically speaking, it is not wise to have too many exemptions and place the whole burden on 4.2 per cent of the people.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes, certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the gentleman understands that the suggestions made when I had the floor were that these deductions should be in addition to the present exemptions. The gentleman does not think for a moment that any of the gentlemen who made those suggestions propose to reduce the exemptions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there is much else I would like to say. I have waited five years for an opportunity to say this. [Laughter and applause.] I have waited all the afternoon to say what I have said; and on the general proposition I want to say to you, sir, that some of us outside of the committee are thinking very deeply about it, and some day we hope to find a different and more equitable method. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will take only a moment. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has just taken his seat, I want to say that the same line upon which he has already spoken has been repeated here and still more often in the press and elsewhere. The difficulties with reference to the income tax are great, but people do not pay any attention to the hardships under ordinary taxation. They do not think about the hardships under a State property tax taking away the property of the poor man for improvements. The income tax takes nothing except out of the profits. The property tax sometimes takes the whole property. The poor man working for wages is taxed for public improvement and often his property is entirely consumed, although it does him no good. He gets out of work, is making nothing, but he must pay the tax just the same. He, perhaps, holds simply the title to the property. It is mortgaged for nearly its whole value, and in almost every State he has to pay the tax on the whole property, although he owns nothing but an equity. All of these hardships we hear nothing about; they talk about the hardships of the tax that is taken out of the profits that people have made, and it is the easiest tax that is paid. I am not finding fault with the gentleman from Massachusetts as much as I am with gentlemen on the outside.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have no objection to the amount that is paid under the income tax. I want to get at it in a different way. It is not the amount, it is the irritation and the expense of paying it is my objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, I understood the gentleman's remedy would be to go out and ask the individual how much he was worth. How easy it would be to take 50,000,000 people and find out how much each individual was worth. That would be a simple matter; there would be no trouble about it—find out what each individual was worth and then levy a tax; that would be a simple matter. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I would have a sworn return as you do to-day under the income tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER].

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and if I have any time remaining I yield it to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BERGER].

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, all of the Members of the House who have had the floor so far have spoken for the men and women who are paying the income tax. They have spoken for the well to do and the rich.

HOW ABOUT THE OTHERS?

Now I want to say a few words for the men and women who do not earn enough to pay an income tax. I may be the only one to speak in their behalf—although they are the people without whose toil and effort the income-tax payers could not exist for a single day—they are the people without whom civilization could not exist for a single day.

I could not get a copy of the bill until yesterday, and therefore I shall not go into details, some of which require considerable study and can not be understood offhand. Furthermore, copies of the hearings on the bill did not become available until last night, and I did not have the time, of course, to read through 1,014 pages since last night.

Nevertheless, I found it extremely interesting as far as I went, and I hope that all you gentlemen will read it. To me it was as interesting as a novel. However, not having had sufficient time to read the bill or study the hearings, I can not make as extended a speech as I would like to. [Laughter.]

We do things on a grand scale in our country. We dispose of $4,000,000,000 in five hours' general debate.

ELEPHANT AND DONKEY VIE IN SERVING THEIR MASTER

There is one remarkable circumstance that must impress itself even upon a casual observer, and that is this: It is simply wonderful how you Republicans and Democrats agree. We again have a coalition revenue bill as we had two years ago. This bipartisan harmony is simply wonderful. [Laughter.]

The elephant and the donkey both agree to serve their plutocratic masters. This is so much the more remarkable since this could be the time, if ever, that my friends of the Democratic side could have a chance to show some reason for their existence. But they do not want to show any reason. Evidently they have no reason. [Laughter.]

As for the Republican Party, that is surely the capitalist party par excellence. And Mr. Mellon is its leader in financial matters and makes it do his bidding. And it does his bidding well. [Laughter.]

THE STEADY DRIVE TO UNTAX THE PROFITEER

Ever since the war both old parties have made a drive to untax wealth and untax the profiteers.

They have done this in various ways. They have done it by the repeal of the excess-profits tax. By the reduction of the supertaxes. By the substitution of a flat rate of 12½ per cent on "unearned increment," which flat rate is to be further reduced in the bill before us. By the virtual repeal of the estate tax two years ago. By the huge Treasury refunds to individuals and corporations of great wealth.

According to the well-known statistician, Mr. Basil Manly—the Republican-Democratic coalition has reduced taxation upon great wealth and profiteering corporations by the enormous sum of $2,885,357,155 during the years 1922, 1923, and 1924. This is not counting the effects of the revenue bill of 1926, which was more favorable to the plutocrats than any of the previous revenue bills.

The revenue bill of 1926 reduced the surtaxes on incomes of over $50,000 by $108,000,000, according to the estimates of the Treasury Department. It reduced the estate tax by almost one-half and allowed a credit of 80 per cent of State inheritance taxes. This saved the big fortunes of our country at least $75,000,000 a year. The same bill also provided for making a retroactive repeal of the high tax rates of 1924 and refunding all taxes paid under them.

To this should be added the huge refunds allowed to individuals and corporations by the Mellon administration. From July 1, 1921, to April 30, 1925, these refunds amounted to $459,000,000. Of these refunds the Couzens committee has reported that its investigations indicated that $308,000,000 represented improper allowances.

PLUTOCRATS SAVE MORE THAN THREE BILLION DOLLARS

Thus the aggregate amount saved to our plutocracy by the Harding-Coolidge administration, under the leadership of Secretary Andrew Mellon, and with the help of the Democratic Party, is more than $3,000,000,000. The plutocrats in turn showed their appreciation by contributing liberally to the campaign funds of both old parties, as shown in Supplement A of this speech.

The bill before us is still going ahead with the program of untaxing wealth.

In all of this time that the Republican administration, aided by the Democratic group in Congress, were lifting the burden from the shoulders of the wealthy profiteers—the interests of the working class and of the poor people in general were not considered at all. That class does not seem to exist in the minds of our rulers. But even the middle class is not taken care of, as one can readily see by examining the hearings.

MR. MELLON'S MELON FLAVORED BY DEMOCRATIC LEMON

The bill before us is simply another melon which Mr. Mellon, of the Republican Party, proposes to cut for the benefit of plutocracy. And the Democratic Party is simply willing to go Mr. Mellon one better.

There is my distinguished and brilliant friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. He was willing to accede to the demands of the United States Chamber of Commerce and reduce the taxes of our ruling class by $400,000,000. In other words, the Republican melon that is to be cut to the tune of $225,000,000 is to be flavored by the Democratic lemon to the amount of $400,000,000. [Laughter.]

EVEN MIDDLE CLASS IS NOT PROTECTED IN OUR CONGRESS

I said that even the middle class is not represented as it should be. Of course the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], did put up some resistance against the United States Chamber of Commerce and against the so-called Taxpayers League, which, as a matter of fact, is a tax dodgers' and tax liars' league.

My friend, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], helped Mr. GREEN to oppose the demands of these groups. But their opposition was feeble, very feeble, indeed. So on the whole even the middle class is not protected at all in this Congress.

It is important, to fully understand the tax question, that we realize that there are two opposite theories of taxation contending in our country.

GRADUATED INCOME TAX PREVENTS SHIFTING OF TAXES

One is the progressive theory of taxation, which is that the largest share of Federal revenues be raised by direct taxes in proportion to the ability of the individuals and corporations to pay them, and in such manner that they can not be shifted to the shoulders of the public.

This is the principle of the graduated income tax, of the graduated estate tax, and of the graduated tax upon excess profits. This principle has been tried out in the modern countries of western Europe and has been found to be scientific, practical, and efficient. And it is advocated not only by the socialists but also by the progressives of all parties in every country.

THE TAX THEORY OF THE PRIVILEGED CLASS

Then there is the opposite theory of taxation—the reactionary theory—which holds that the greatest possible share of the Federal revenue should be raised by indirect taxation. It is the old theory of the privileged classes. Under the pretext of imposing a flat rate upon the rich and poor alike—they can easily shift the tax on the backs of the masses, since the masses naturally consume the largest quantities.

This is the principle of the high tariff, of the sales tax, of the tobacco tax, and also of the flat tax rate on corporations in our country. All of these taxes can easily be shifted onto the great mass of American consumers. This method of taxation is out of date, unscientific, and unjust. It has been discarded by every modern and truly civilized nation of Europe. It is now only advocated by those who seek to relieve wealth of its just burden.

This reactionary system of taxation, however, is still advocated in the bill before us. It is the result of the alliance between the conservative Republicans and the conservative Democrats, just as the bill two years ago was the result of the same compact.

THE MEANING OF THE TERM "NATIONAL INCOME"

Now, we are told that this is the richest country on earth. Undoubtedly that is true. The gross income last year was $90,000,000,000. This was the national income. It was the value of our production.

In other words, that means the income of Mr. Ford, Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Mellon, of the General Motors, of the gentleman from Texas, myself, and 117,000,000 others constituting our population.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman better correct that statement.

Mr. BERGER. Why?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The report shows what the income is. The production of this country was $90,000,000,000, not the income.

Mr. BERGER. Exactly. Economists use the words "national income" to cover what are really the gross annual receipts of the people of the United States. It is the gross income. It is the general production, controlled by General Motors, Mr. Ford, and the entire capitalist class. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and myself do not control much of it.

BUT WHO HAVE THE RICHES?

And that is exactly where the other side of the question comes in. How is this gross income distributed; how is it divided?

Now, gentlemen, I will give you some official figures.

According to the reports of the Department of Labor, of the 117,000,000 people the "poorest" class alone comprises 76,000,000 people, and they receive about 38.6 per cent of the national income—less than $460 per person. This class includes not only manual and office workers but also the small business man, many managers, engineers, and the like.

According to Prof. Irving Fisher, who, in order to make the figures as favorable as possible, accepts the highest estimate of our national income as $90,000,000,000 for 1926, 93,000,000 people out of the 117,000,000 people comprising our population in 1926 had about $500 income each.

These 93,000,000 people comprise the combined "poorest" and "lower middle-class" groups in the study made in Prof. Willford I. King's Four Population Groups.

FOUR-FIFTHS OF NATION HARDLY MAKE EXPENSES

This means that, according to Professor Fisher, professor of economics at Yale University—the American people as a whole are not prosperous.

In fact, an examination of our living costs will show that four-fifths of our people, or more than 90,000,000 people out of our 117,000,000, are hardly making necessary expenses.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics has prepared a budget which it states represents a "minimum of health and decency." The average cost in several cities of this minimum budget in 1926 was found to be $2,432.39.

Assuming the income of those in this class of 93,000,000 to be on an average $500 each, or $2,500 for a family of five—and these are the most favorable figures—the overwhelming majority of our people—93,000,000 out of 117,000,000—get no more than enough to afford them the very "minimum of health and decency."

TWO-THIRDS OF PEOPLE DO NOT GET "MINIMUM OF HEALTH AND DECENCY"

The situation grows worse, of course, when the "lower middle-class" group is left out and the "poorest" group alone is considered. That group, representing 76,000,000, had an average income of $2,300 in 1926. That income, the National Industrial Conference Board has estimated, would be little more than enough to buy the minimum requirements of an average family of five among industrial or office workers. And the conference board's budget allows nothing for emergencies—for a vacation, for unemployment, for old-age savings of any kind, for sickness.

So that is how much 76,000,000 out of our 117,000,000 people get from the prosperity and our national income—not enough to allow for a vacation, or for unemployment, or for old-age savings of any kind, or for sickness.

But that is not the worst feature of this so-called prosperity.

BETWEEN TEN AND TWELVE MILLION PEOPLE ALWAYS ON VERGE OF STARVATION

Besides and below these 76,000,000 people who get so little of our great national income, there is the "submerged tenth"—from 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 people—who are on the verge of starvation all the time.

Is it not a tragic joke that we are the most prosperous country on the face of the earth, that we are so rich that we do not know what to do with our money, but that of the approximate 90,000,000 of the poor class, 76,000,000 can not get enough for more than a bare living, and that about 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 are always on the verge of starvation?

The joke will probably appeal strongly to these people when they read President Coolidge's statement that "the test which now confronts the Nation is prosperity."

MR. EDGERTON'S GREATEST FEAR

And then comes Mr. Edgerton, president of the Manufacturers Association, and says:

> The abnormally high wages and the low living costs of the so-called working classes are a danger to our country.

Get that? "The so-called working classes." And did you get "the abnormally high wages"?

Let us quote a few illustrations.

SOME INSTANCES OF "ABNORMALLY HIGH WAGES" CITED

In the steel mills of Chicago workers earn $3.12 a day when they are employed—and they are not always employed.

Railroad workers in 1926 had an average income of $17 a week; and there are 200,000 such laborers.

In the lumber industry of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Oregon the average earnings were $17.77 per week, and the lowest-paid laborers get only $10.48 a week. "Abnormally high wages."

In the mining industry the average wage was $22.78 a week, but the lowest paid received $10.34 a week; and many of them did not work half of the time. "Abnormally high wages," of the "so-called working classes."

THE SOCIAL EFFECTS OF THIS CONDITION

The obvious results in the case of these 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 people, who do not get enough to live on, it was said at a recent conference of social agencies, are "sickness, either chronic or acute, probably malnourishment, tuberculosis, delinquency."

One of the serious social effects of such low earnings as those referred to is the effect upon poor health. Numerous studies recently made by the United States Public Health Service indicate clearly that both sickness and death are more frequent among those with low incomes than among those with incomes adequate to comfortable living.

A study of infant mortality made by the United States Children's Bureau, which gives the mortality rates by earnings of the father, shows that there is a general decrease in mortality as the earnings of the family increase.

That, gentlemen, is the state of prosperity with which no less than 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 American people were "blessed" in 1926.

WHERE THE RICHES OF THE RICHEST COUNTRY GO

But where do these $90,000,000,000—our national income—go to? Let us see.

The tax on incomes was lower in 1925 than in 1924, but though the rate was lower, the sum collected by the Government was 6 per cent greater in 1925 than in 1924.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BERGER. Give me 15 minutes more?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; just as long as the gentleman wants.

Mr. BERGER. Oh, I could go on for an hour, but I doubt whether you would have the patience to listen to me that long. In any event, Mr. Chairman, somebody ought to say these things in this House.

I just remarked that the tax rate was lower in 1925 than in the year before, yet the sum collected was larger. That sounds impossible, but the reason is simple.

SMALL INCOMES BECOME SMALLER; LARGE INCOMES GROW LARGER

The big decrease was in the number of those that had less than $5,000 income. They paid little or no tax. But the big incomes had increased so much more.

In 1924, 75 men paid on incomes of $1,000,000 or more. In 1925, 207 paid on incomes of $1,000,000 or over.

Forty and five-tenths per cent of the total income tax was paid by people with incomes of more than $100,000 each.

Ten thousand persons on the top of the list paid as much as 2,337,000 taxpayers at the bottom of the list. As a matter of fact, 0.29 of 1 per cent paid more tax in total than some 95 per cent of the total number paying a Federal income tax.

THE THREE CLASSES

Of course, these incomes are reinvested. That is how the concentration of wealth proceeds.

In 1915 the Commission on Industrial Relations divided our people into the following classes: The "rich," 2 per cent of the people, own 60 per cent of the wealth. The "middle class," 33 per cent of the people, own 35 per cent of the wealth. The "poor," 65 per cent of the people, own 5 per cent of the wealth.

This statement was based on an extensive study of available information made by Prof. Willford I. King, a statistician of conservative views, and published as a report of that commission.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. What department?

Mr. BERGER. It was a special commission on industrial relations.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. A Government commission?

Mr. BERGER. Yes; it was a Government commission.

Now, these conditions have not been improved since in favor of the poor classes. We had a war since, as you all know, and you also know what that war meant. The war created 23,000 millionaires which we did not have in 1915.

DEFINITION OF "INCOME" BENEFICIAL TO RICH

Moreover, this classification is simply more or less a matter of definition. The word "income" as applied to individuals is given both in law and custom different meanings which is rather unjust to the individual.

INCOME FOR CORPORATIONS MEANS INCOME AFTER DEDUCTIONS ARE ALLOWED

Income as defined for corporations and business establishments generally means net profit—means the profit after liberal deductions for expenses of operation, maintenance, depreciation, replacements, and all other items have been made. This is considered an absolutely correct procedure. It should be a legitimate means of insuring the conservation of the property devoted to the business, although it is now being used to a large extent by public-utility corporations and other capitalist interests to conceal a considerable share of their profits.

DEFINITION OF "INCOME" FOR WAGE EARNERS ALLOWS FOR NO DEDUCTION

Income as defined for individuals, however, and especially income for wage and salary earners, means gross earnings with no deductions for the maintenance and the replacement of the human machine. In the accounting of individual income there are no allowances for expenses of operation, or replacement, or depreciation, or preservation of the human machine. Everything that comes into the possession of the wage or salary earner during the year is counted as income.

This difference in definition is not only a matter of custom but has become embedded in law. And because of this fact, the income tax bill before us and all the income tax laws that we have had until now discriminate grossly against individuals—particularly against workmen, salary earners, and professional men.

In order to put individual income accounting on the same basis as corporation accounting, we should count as income only the surplus over the earnings necessary for the support of a family of the average size, together with savings sufficient to provide for his old age and the rearing of a family and the wear off that comes with old age and death. Thus we would insure the maintenance and replacement of the human machine.

CONCENTRATION OF WEALTH HASTENS DOWNFALL OF PRESENT SYSTEM

I hear some gentlemen saying, "All of that may be true—it is probably true—but what's the use of saying it."

The answer is simple. Policies and methods as are in use in our country can have only one result—they will hasten the concentration of wealth in a few hands and surely bring about the downfall of the entire system. And it may bring about a catastrophe similar to the revolution in France at the end of the eighteenth century or similar to the revolution which took place in Russia 10 years ago.

WE WANT A CHANGE, BUT NO CATASTROPHE

We Socialists desire, of course, that the capitalist system disappear. We expect to replace it by a more reasonable and more beneficial organization of society. But we Socialists want to avoid a sudden catastrophe—if it be possible to avoid it.

Remember, gentlemen, our ruling class had "good times" when the surtax was 60 per cent. Why not restore the 60 per cent again and prevent the abnormal concentration?

The fact remains that unless you find some way to stop this fearful concentration of wealth in a few hands, you are bound to have a revolution that will destroy not only capitalism and the capitalist class, but it may destroy civilization.

The best evidence of the concentration going on at the present times is the fact that we now have no less than ten billion-dollar corporations.

They are the United States Steel Corporation, the Southern Pacific Railroad, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, the New York Central Railroad, the Union Pacific Railroad, the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, the General Motors Co., the Ford Motor Co., and the American Telegraph & Telephone Co.

And this in face of the fact that 82 per cent of our people do not earn enough money to pay an income tax at all, although the exemptions are only $1,500 for a single person and $3,500 for a married couple.

Now, if we had a real opposition party in this country, such a party would advocate the abolition of all nuisance taxes, including the tax on the automobile, including the taxes on tickets, and any and all sales taxes, but would demand the doubling of the taxation on the incomes in the higher brackets.

TRYING TO OUT-MELLON MELLON

However, instead of that, this afternoon we were told in a speech by a prominent Democrat, the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN], that we should still further lower the taxes on the corporations. He even proposed an amendment to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to give back some of the money already collected from the corporations.

He said:

> We must get out of our heads the idea that when we reduce the corporation tax we are reducing taxes for a few people. We used to have the idea that a reduction of the corporation tax benefited only a few people. My estimate is that 75 per cent of the aggregate reduction goes to the stockholders of corporations. It goes to 3,000,000 people.

ALLEGED DIFFUSION OF STOCK OWNERSHIP A MYTH

I disagree with the gentleman from New York in this respect. Stockholders do not number 3,000,000, and the bulk of them own only a small percentage of the total stock of the big corporations of our country.

The report of the Federal Trade Commission on "National wealth and income," issued in 1926, tells us about the holdings of common and preferred stock by the employees in the various manufacturing companies. We are told that "of the total value of stock of all companies reporting employees had 1.5 per cent of the common stock and 1.9 of the preferred stock."

In the United States Steel Corporation, for instance, which has a comparatively very large distribution of its stock among its employees, 1.5 per cent of the stockholders hold 57 per cent of the stock. And in the International Harvester Co., which also makes a great showing of selling stock to employees, 207 stockholders have 83 per cent of the stock.

So much for the stock ownership by employees, which has been advertised very extensively during the last few years.

Employees, of course, represented a much larger proportion of the total number of stockholders than they did in the total value of the stock. In other words, the average holding of the employee stockholder was very small.

NOR DOES MIDDLE CLASS OWN MUCH STOCK

But the middle class of our Nation does not own any considerable share either.

The concentration of ownership goes on in spite of the so-called stockholding schemes. For instance, 1.3 per cent of the number of stockholders in the railroads of this country hold more than one-half of the outstanding stock.

In the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey 1 per cent of the stockholders own 64.2 per cent of the stock.

All the figures published invariably show that a very small percentage of the stockholders own more than half of all the stock in the big corporations of our country.

MIDDLE CLASS FURNISHES THE LAMBS TO BE FLEECED

The middle class may occasionally furnish some of the lambs to be fleeced in Wall Street by venturing in stock speculations, but the middle class does not share in the control of our big corporations.

In the United States there are probably not more than one or two million belonging to the stockholding class if duplications are eliminated. The rest of the 110,000,000 people own no stocks or bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. How about the inheritance tax?

Mr. BERGER. I would double that.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I thought your party believed in it.

Mr. BERGER. It does.

Your Florida politicians and capitalists will bust the State of Florida. Very soon you will not have money enough to build roads, and not money enough to keep your working people in the poorhouses when they get old.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. There are only four States that pay more inheritance taxes than Florida.

Mr. BERGER. They still must pay the Federal inheritance tax, of course. But all the millionaires who want to defraud their respective States of the legitimate estate tax go down to Florida and register there—very much in the same manner as the same people break the Mann Act and register in another State for another illegitimate purpose.

MONEY NEEDED FOR SOLUTION OF MANY PROBLEMS

Again, I say, we ought to abolish nuisance taxes and double the taxes in the higher brackets. We then would have money enough to pay an old-age pension for the needy workers of 55 and over. We would have money enough to take care of the Mississippi and all other rivers. We would have money enough for reforestation, and even money enough to do away with illiteracy in the United States. And if we did not want to do anything else, we could pay our war debts, at least.

POVERTY IS NO LONGER NECESSARY

Dean Kimball, of Cornell University, in a speech to the American Society of Engineers, said:

For the first time since the world began we are in touch with the abolition of poverty through the tremendous output of our products.

In other words, that means that for the first time in the history of the world we can produce nearly enough of everything for everybody. All we have to do is advance the science of distribution sufficiently that it will parallel the science of production. Then for the first time in the history of the world we could, in our country at least, give and assure every willing worker the full value of his product—and the full satisfaction of all his reasonable needs.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 7

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint Resolution 9, memorializing Congress to amend the river and harbor act so as to provide for maintenance of a uniform stage of water in the headwaters of the Mississippi River throughout the year

Whereas the river and harbor act passed by Congress in 1880 provided for the creation of storage reservoirs to impound the high waters of the Mississippi river during the spring and early summer and to release them during the late summer and fall so as to produce a greater flow in said river during the low-water season in the interests of navigation and disregarding the conservation and propagation of fish life in the headwaters of the Mississippi; and

Whereas the raising and lowering of the water in the storage reservoirs created by the War Department under said act has resulted in destroying much of the natural feeding, resting, and breeding grounds of migratory birds and has affected the value of the property of riparian owners and interfered with the natural propagation of game fish and has resulted in the freezing of many thousands of game fishes in shallow bays during the winter months: Be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That Congress be, and it hereby is, memorialized to so amend said river and harbor act that the wild life of the State of Minnesota may be protected and propagated, and that said act be amended so as to provide for the maintenance of a uniform stage of water or a definite, fixed, and permanent low-water level in said headwaters throughout the year: Be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice President of the United States and to each Representative in Congress from the State of Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Senate Joint Resolution 9

Whereas the Illinois River Valley has suffered ever increasing flood stages during shorter intervals of time to such an extent that the valuable properties within its borders are being jeopardized to an alarming extent; and

Whereas the necessities of drainage throughout the State of Illinois, also the State of Indiana, and the needs of sanitation and industry of the cities on the upper river have added huge volumes of excess waters to the natural precipitation of the Illinois River Basin; and

Whereas the Federal Government has maintained dams in the river for the purposes of navigation and will create a more comprehensive deep waterway in compliance with present Federal legislation; and

Whereas the problems of flood control are so great and far-reaching and complicated that it is impossible for local interests to solve them and inexpedient for the State of Illinois to interfere or participate with the War Department in the development of the Illinois River; and

Whereas the War Department of the United States now in charge of the river for navigation purposes is the only agent and governmental department capable of successfully working out the necessary methods for controlling the flood menace which is now a permanent factor in the Illinois River; and

Whereas a bill, H. R. 14838, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, proposes that the War Department be authorized to expend Federal money for flood-control purposes in the Illinois River Valley along the lines followed by the Mississippi Commission on the lower Mississippi River: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate of the fifty-fifth general assembly (the house concurring herein), That it is recognized that the War Department of the Federal Government is the only and capable governmental department that can successfully solve the problems involved and give the necessary flood control protection that will safeguard all the interests involved in the valley without conflicting with any other agency; and be it

Resolved, That the attention of the Congress of the United States be called to the seriousness of the situation and the wisdom and expediency of the measures proposed in the above-named bill; and be it

Resolved, That we most earnestly entreat both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States that such proposed flood control legislation be enacted into law at the earliest possible date consistent with the necessary preliminary surveys; and be it

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of the United States by the secretary of state.

Adopted by the senate March 2, 1927.

FRED E. STERLING,
President of the Senate.
JAMES H. PADDOCK,
Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house of representatives March 9, 1927.

ROBERT SCHOLES,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. H. MCCANN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint Resolution 25, memorializing Congress to grant Federal aid in the construction of interstate bridges

Whereas the boundaries dividing the several States in many instances consist of natural water courses and rivers; and

Whereas the cost of interstate bridges is very great since the rivers in many instances are wide and the engineering and construction problems difficult to solve; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States vests in Congress control over all interstate communication, and the Federal Government is vitally interested in developing national highways cutting across State lines: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin earnestly requests and petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to give Federal aid for the construction of interstate bridges; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be forwarded to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to the Wisconsin Senators and representatives therein.

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Fred E. Lukens, secretary of state of the State of Idaho, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial 4 with the original thereof adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the nineteenth legislative assembly of the State of Idaho and filed in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Idaho February 25, 1927, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Idaho. Done at the capitol at Boise, Idaho, this 16th day of April, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.]

FRED E. LUKENS,
Secretary of State.

House Joint Memorial 4, to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent: That—

Whereas that Snake River between Lewiston and Homestead, Idaho, is the only means of transportation to serve an area approximately 100 miles long and 14 miles wide, which area is rich in mineral deposits and has great potential possibilities for the raising of agricultural crops and stock; and

Whereas the said river can now be safely navigated only during periods of high water by reason of obstructions therein consisting of large boulders at some eleven places and extensive and important developments both in the State of Idaho and the State of Oregon are for that reason being retarded and prevented; and

Whereas the opening of the channel in the Snake River for safe navigation at all times of the year can be done only by the Federal Government: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Idaho indorse and approve of the opening up of the Snake River for safe navigation, as aforesaid, and that the Congress of the United States be memorialized to make an appropriation sufficient for that purpose; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho is hereby instructed to forward this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to send copies to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

This memorial passed the house on the 14th day of February, 1927.

W. D. GILLIS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This memorial passed the senate on the 18th day of February, 1927.

O. E. HAILEY,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within memorial 4 originated in the house of representatives during the nineteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

C. A. BOTTOLFSEN,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Senate Memorial 3

To the PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

Whereas the State of Florida and the counties of Dade and Monroe have caused to be dug a sea-level canal across the Peninsula of Florida from the waters of the Atlantic Ocean at Miami to the waters of the Gulf of Mexico at Poinciana, saving all but 9 miles of the total distance; and

Whereas it is hoped and expected that this 9-mile gap will be completed and opened within the near future, thus establishing a sea-level water route across the State of Florida: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and hereby is, memorialized to pass the necessary legislation looking to the investigation and survey of this cross-State waterway, in order to disclose the feasibility and propriety of its being taken over by the Federal Government for improvement, operation, and maintenance, to the end—

(1) That the benefits and protection afforded by the Atlantic inside waterway route from Boston south and through the Florida East Coast Canal now terminating at Miami may be immediately extended across the peninsula of Florida to the Gulf of Mexico.

(2) That small shipping, in passing from the Atlantic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico, may be relieved of the necessity of rounding Cape Sable with its attendant dangers and hazards.

(3) That the water-route distance for such shipping between points on the Atlantic Ocean and points on the Gulf of Mexico may be shortened.

(4) That this sea-level canal which traverses the heart of the Everglades may be developed to its maximum usefulness in serving as an artery of water transportation for this vast agricultural empire which is about to be opened; and

(5) That this canal developed to its full capacity, with its outlets to the east and to the west, may be utilized in the draining of thousands of acres of Everglades lands, and the ultimate reclamation of the Florida Peninsula south of the Tamiami Trail; be it

Resolved further, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL, and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, GREEN, and YON are hereby most earnestly requested to extend their efforts toward the accomplishment of the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of the State of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the Presildent of the United States, to the Congress of this Nation, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the governor May 7, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA, Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Memorial 3, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled memorial on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.]

H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint Resolution 23, memorializing Congress to provide for earlier seating of Senators and Representatives elect

Whereas Members of Congress are elected in November of even-numbered years, but under the present Constitution of the United States do not meet in regular session until December of the year following; and

Whereas in the so-called "short" session of Congress, which convene in December following each general election, there are always many Members who were defeated for reelection and repudiated by their constituents; and

Whereas this provision of the Constitution operates to prevent the will of the people from being expressed in legislation within a reasonable time: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin hereby earnestly requests and petitions Congress to adopt and submit to the States the so-called "Norris amendment" to the Constitution of the United States for the earlier commencement of the terms of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress, and for the convening of Congress in January of the year following its election.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution duly attested by the presiding officers and chief clerks of the senate and assembly be forwarded to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress and to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives therein.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

STATE OF IDAHO,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Fred E. Lukens, secretary of state of the State of Idaho and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that the attached is a full, true, and complete transcript of Senate Joint Resolution 7 enacted by the nineteenth session of the Legislature of the State of Idaho and filed in this office the 11th day of March, 1927.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Idaho. Done at Boise, Idaho, the capital of Idaho, this 27th day of April, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] FRED E. LUKENS,
Secretary of State.

Senate Joint Resolution 7

Whereas under the existing conditions newly elected Members of Congress do not take their seats in Congress, unless at a special session, until the elapse of more than a year after their election; and

Whereas Members of Congress who are not reelected continue to serve and vote for their constituents for the duration of the short session of Congress, although their successors have been elected; and

Whereas such conditions are not productive of the best interests of the people of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Idaho, That the Legislature of the State of Idaho earnestly petition Congress to submit a constitutional amendment to the several States which would provide that Members of Congress should take their seats within a short time after their election; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the governors of each of the several States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act

Whereas the voters of the State of Wisconsin at a recent referendum registered their disapproval of prohibition by a majority of approximately 176,000 votes; and

Whereas the people of Wisconsin have emphatically expressed themselves in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; and

Whereas a nation-wide test on the question of modifying the Volstead Act would afford the means of accurately measuring the sentiment of the entire country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature hereby goes on record as respectfully memorializing Congress to provide the necessary machinery for the holding of a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the proper officers of the assembly and senate, be transmitted to the Presiding Officers of each House of Congress.

President of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, proposing an application to Congress to call a constitutional convention for the purpose of amending the Constitution of the United States to make subject to taxation all evidence of indebtedness of the United States, the several States, municipal corporations, counties, and all taxing subdivisions and taxing units thereof, together with the interest on and income from such evidence of indebtedness

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Idaho:

SECTION A. That with the concurrence of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States of the United States application is hereby made to Congress to call a constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, said proposed amendment to read as follows:

"AMENDMENT NO. 20

All evidence of indebtedness of the United States, the several States, municipal corporations, counties, and all taxing subdivisions and taxing units thereof, together with interest on and income derived from such evidence of indebtedness, shall be subject to taxation by the United States, the several States, municipal corporations, counties, and all taxing subdivisions and taxing units thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused to be affixed the official seal of the secretary of state at Annapolis, Md., this 2d day of June, in the year of our Lord 1927.

[SEAL.] DAVID C. WINEBRENNER, 3d,
Secretary of State.

Joint Resolution 5, requesting Congress to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that all amendments to said Constitution shall be submitted to a referendum vote

Whereas under the present method of amending the Constitution of the United States it is possible for amendments to be adopted when the majority of the people are opposed to them; and

Whereas under recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States construing the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States the people of every State have, in effect, been deprived of any opportunity to express their views, whether directly through a referendum or indirectly by the requirement that an election should intervene between the submission of an amendment by Congress and its ratification by the legislature of any State; and

Whereas it is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and of American liberty that any serious change should be made in our form of government without the consent of the governed: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, earnestly requested to submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that thereafter all such amendments shall be submitted to a referendum vote and that no amendment shall become a part of the Constitution unless it receives a majority of the votes cast for and against it in three-fourths of the States; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit under the great seal of this State a copy of the aforegoing resolution to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Representatives from Maryland in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Joint Resolution 12, requesting Congress to make provision for the removal of explosives stored in the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot, Curtis Bay, Md.

Whereas great quantities of explosives are now stored by the Ordnance Department of the United States Army in the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot, immediately adjacent to Baltimore city; and

Whereas the presence of such explosives at such place is a menace to the lives and property of the people of the city of Baltimore; and

Whereas the Governor of Maryland and the mayor of Baltimore city and the Association of Commerce of Baltimore city and other citizens have requested the Secretary of War to provide for the removal of said explosives, and the Senators and Representatives from Maryland have urged upon Congress the enactment of legislation providing for such removal, but no provision for such removal has been made, and such menace to the lives and property of the citizens of Baltimore city continues: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Congress of the United States be requested to take appropriate action to bring about the speedy removal from the Curtis Bay ordnance reserve depot of the explosives there stored; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit under the great seal of this State a copy of the foregoing resolution to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Secretary of War, and to each of the Representatives of Maryland in both Houses of Congress.

House Joint Resolution 17

Whereas the adjusted war veterans' compensation act, adopted by the United States Congress, which provided for the issuance of adjusted service certificates to the veterans of the World War contemplated that banks throughout the country would make loans on said certificates to the veterans; and

Whereas untold hardships and embarrassment are being suffered by the veterans because the great majority of the banks refuse to make loans on said certificates; and

Whereas the United States Veterans' Bureau now has on hand funds totaling over $300,000,000 which could be used in making loans to veterans on their adjusted service certificates; and

Whereas it would be beneficial alike to the war veterans and to the banks if the funds in the hands of the United States Veterans' Bureau could be used in making loans to the veterans: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of Illinois (the Senate concurring herein), That the efforts of the veterans of the World War to authorize, by appropriate legislation, the United States Veterans' Bureau to use the funds under the control of said bureau for the making of loans direct to said veterans upon their adjusted service certificates be, and the same are, hereby approved; and be it further

THE STATE OF MARYLAND, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

I, David C. Winebrenner, 3d, secretary of state of the State of Maryland, under and by virtue of the authority vested in me by section 59 of article 35 of the Annotated Code of Maryland, do hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution 3, of the acts of the General Assembly of Maryland of 1927.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused to be affixed the official seal of the secretary of state at Annapolis, Md., this 14th day of March, in the year 1927.

[SEAL.] DAVID C. WINEBRENNER, 3d,
Secretary of State.

Joint Resolution 3 and memorial of the General Assembly of Maryland to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled requesting the repeal of Title III of the revenue act of 1926, known as estate tax law

Whereas except in times of national stress the imposition of inheritance and estate taxes has been considered as being within the sole province of the several States; and

Whereas in the past the Federal Government has entered this field of taxation only because of war contingencies; and

Whereas the present Federal estate tax is the successor to a tax first imposed in 1916 because of the threat of war and was subsequently continued primarily as a war measure; and

Whereas the World War has long since ended and the proceeds at present derived by the Government from the Federal estate tax constitute a comparatively small factor in Federal revenue; and

Whereas the Federal Government has no occasion for remaining in any field of taxation essentially local by nature except for the purpose of revenue to meet the financial requirements of its Budget; and

Whereas there is no emergency or other pressing need which should militate against the prompt and immediate withdrawal of the Government from the exercise of a taxing power which is logically and primarily a matter for the determination of each individual State: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled be, and they are hereby, requested and urged to repeal Title III of the revenue act of 1926 known as the estate tax law, to the end that the Federal Government surrender back to the State governments a sphere of taxation properly belonging to them and which should only be invaded, if at all, in times of great national necessity; and be it further

Resolved, That the Representatives from the State of Maryland in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested to urge and support the repeal of the above-mentioned law; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Maryland be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit under the great seal of this State a copy of the foregoing resolution and memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Representatives from Maryland in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

Approved March 11, 1927.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 7

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That—

Whereas the people of Florida, by an overwhelming majority, adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the State from levying in the future any inheritance or income tax; and

Whereas the State's finances are in such an admirable condition that, although it has no severance tax, no corporation tax, no corporation stock-transfer tax, no franchise tax, no income tax, and no inheritance tax, it has no bonded indebtedness of any kind or character, does not owe a dollar, and has as of the 1st of April in its treasury in excess of $11,466,280.05 in cash, thus demonstrating beyond question that the levying of an inheritance or an income tax is absolutely unnecessary in this State; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in enacting the present revenue law, providing therein for a Federal inheritance tax, but allowing those States that have inheritance taxes a credit to the extent of 80 per cent of the taxes so paid, the avowed purpose of which was to force the States of Florida, Alabama, and others similarly situated to levy an inheritance tax; and

Whereas taxing the dead, either by Federal legislation or State legislation, is a capital levy and should not be resorted to except in time of war or other grave emergency; and

Whereas an inheritance tax, if it is to be written into law at all, is a prerogative of the State, a political question exclusively within the province of the State; and

Whereas Congress by giving to the respective States that have inheritance taxes credit for 80 per cent of the taxes so paid admits and concedes that the Federal Government does not need the revenue; and

Whereas the action of Congress, in endeavoring by Federal legislation to coerce a sovereign State into enacting legislation contrary to the wishes of the people of that State in a question of purely local concern, is unprecedented, arbitrary, indefensible, and contrary to the very fundamentals of our American form of government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we protest against the passage of a Federal inheritance tax, and especially one in the form of that which has been passed, and we regard such action upon the part of Congress as unnecessary, uncalled for, indefensible, without justification, and contrary to the fundamental principles upon which the Republic is founded; that we reaffirm our confidence in the wisdom of the people of Florida in adopting the constitutional amendment prohibiting the Legislature of Florida in the future from ever levying any State income or inheritance taxes; and that the State of Florida declines to be coerced into repealing the constitutional provision forbidding the levying of taxes upon the estates of dead men, but avows its intention of forever maintaining and continuing the constitutional amendment in question; be it further

Resolved, That we call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to demand the repeal of the Federal inheritance tax and that they continue to take such vigorous action as may in their judgment be deemed best to bring this about; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to all Members of Congress, the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, the chairman of the United States Senate Finance Committee, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, the press of this State and of the Nation.

Approved by the governor April 23, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Senate Concurrent Resolution 7, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled resolution on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 15th day of November, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint Resolution 37

Whereas war between nations under existing international law is a lawful institution, and any nation, with or without cause, may declare war against any other nation; and

Whereas war is the greatest existing menace to society, and the next great war is almost certain to be more terrible than any previous war and is likely to engulf and destroy civilization: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That war between nations should be outlawed as an institution or means for the settlement of international controversies by making it a public crime in international law, and that every nation should be encouraged by solemn agreement or treaty to bind itself to indict and punish its own international war breeders or instigators and war profiteers under powers similar to those conferred upon our Congress under Article I, section 8, of our Federal Constitution, which clothes the Congress with the power to define and punish offenses against the law of nations; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States and Congress be and are hereby memoralized to take the necessary steps to make this country the leader in the movement for the outlawry of war through agreements with other nations and through legislation curbing all instigators of war and war profiteers; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of each House of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.
HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.

Joint Resolution 38, memorializing Congress to adopt Senate Concurrent Resolution 15, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, relating to "dollar diplomacy"

Whereas Senate Concurrent Resolution 15 has been introduced in the Sixty-ninth Congress, second session; and

Whereas such resolution provides as follows:

"Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to direct the Departments of State, Treasury, and Commerce, the Federal Reserve Board, and all other agencies of the Government which are or may be concerned thereunder, to refrain henceforth, without specific prior authorization of the Congress, from—

"(1) Directly or indirectly engaging the responsibility of the Government of the United States, or otherwise on its behalf to supervise the fulfilment of financial arrangements between citizens of the United States and sovereign foreign governments or political subdivisions thereof whether or not recognized de jure or de facto by the United States Government; or

"(2) In any manner whatsoever giving official recognition to any arrangement which may commit the Government of the United States to any form of military intervention in order to compel the observance of alleged obligations of sovereign or subordinate authority, or of any corporations or individuals, or to deal with any such arrangement except to secure the settlement of claims of the United States or of United States citizens through the ordinary channels of law provided therefor in the respective foreign jurisdictions or through duly authorized and accepted arbitration agencies." Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That Congress be, and is hereby, respectfully petitioned and urged to adopt Senate Concurrent Resolution 15; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Joint Resolution 39, memorializing the National Government to submit to arbitration the Mexican and Nicaraguan controversies

Whereas difficulties have arisen between Mexico and the United States relative to the retroactive and confiscatory provisions of the land laws of Mexico as affecting the claims of certain private citizens of the United States; and

Whereas the attitude of the United States Government toward Mexico and Nicaragua has been in spirit, at least, a violation of the Monroe doctrine; and

Whereas the President of Mexico has signified his willingness to submit to arbitration the controversies arising out of the land laws of that country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the Government of the United States discontinue its present policy of interference in these countries and make every effort to submit the matters in controversy between the United States and the Governments of Mexico and Nicaragua to arbitration; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress, and each Wisconsin Member thereof.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorials of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

House Memorial 1, directed to the President and Congress of the United States requesting the establishment of military schools or camps for the purpose of training aviators upon the present Government fields of Dorr and Carlstrom, located near Arcadia, in De Soto County, Fla.

Whereas the people of the State of Florida are intensely interested in the public welfare and common defense of the Nation; and

Whereas the training of aviators is essential to insuring the public welfare and maintaining the common defense of the Nation; and

Whereas the people of the United States now own in the State of Florida two flying fields, to wit, Dorr and Carlstrom, located near Arcadia, in De Soto County, Fla.; and

Whereas said fields are not being used now as aviation training camps; and

Whereas the facilities of said fields for flying are unsurpassed by any in the world, due to the region about the camps and the atmospheric conditions most conducive to the safety for flying; and

Whereas the Florida climate is equal and mild and the location of the camps naturally healthful; and

Whereas the said flying fields of Dorr and Carlstrom form an ideal location for the training of aviators: Be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the President of the United States and Congress be, and they are hereby, earnestly solicited to take such steps as may be necessary, either by the legislative or executive branches of the Federal Government, to establish at the fields of Dorr and Carlstrom, located near Arcadia, in De Soto County, Fla., Government schools or training camps for the purpose of training and equipping aviators for the use of aerial service in the United States Army, or for other public service; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be furnished by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States.

A joint resolution proposing a memorial to Congress indorsing the support by the Government of adequate appropriations for the support of the National Guard and the Organized Reserves

Whereas there is located in Florida two separate regiments of the Florida National Guard which is maintained to a large extent by Federal appropriation of money; and

Whereas there is also located in the State of Florida various units of the Organized Reserves constituted under the provisions of the national defense act of 1920; and

Whereas the National Guard forms an essential and necessary organization for use in peace time, as evidenced by its services during the recent hurricane disaster in Florida, as well as an adequate fighting organization in the event of war; and

Whereas the people of Florida desire to see the National Guard and the Organized Reserves of the United States supported by adequate appropriations reasonably sufficient to enable these organizations to accomplish the purpose of their organization, said appropriations to be as liberal as may be consistent with the welfare of the public and the general good: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Legislature of the State of Florida herein memorializes and requests its two Senators in the United States Senate and its four Representatives in the Congress of the United States to use all honorable means in their power to prevent the handicapping or crippling of the National Guard or Organized Reserves by the withdrawal of any existing appropriations therefrom, and that they use all honorable means in their power to secure for the use of the National Guard and Organized Reserves as liberal an appropriation for the training of such National Guard and reserves as may be consistent with the welfare of the Government, and that a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the United States Senators from Florida and to each of the Congressmen from Florida, to the President and Vice President of the United States, and to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, and to the Chief of the Militia Bureau of the War Department, all duly certified to and under the great seal of the State of Florida.

Enrolled Senate Concurrent Resolution 6 (ch. 265)

A concurrent resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to appropriate funds to carry out certain recommendations of the Chief of Staff of the United States Army made in furtherance of the national defense act of 1920

Whereas the President of the United States in a recent message to the Congress of the United States has stated that the Army and Navy of the United States should be strengthened and that a people who neglect their national defense are putting in jeopardy their national honor; and

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
Office of Secretary for the Territory.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of Senate Joint Memorial 9 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1927, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

[SEAL.] KARL THEILE,
Secretary of Alaska.

Senate Joint Memorial 9

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, do most respectfully and earnestly represent that—

Whereas large portions of the Territory of Alaska are well adapted as grazing lands for musk oxen; and

Whereas musk oxen formerly naturally inhabited Alaska, but were exterminated many years ago; and

Whereas in those portions of Alaska suited to musk oxen it has not yet been proven to be commercially successful to raise cattle or sheep; and

Whereas it appears that the raising of musk oxen can be successfully inaugurated in the Territory in regions in which cattle and sheep raising has not been proven successful; and

Whereas musk oxen are valuable for both their meat and hides, and are therefore promising substitutes for cattle and sheep: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, petitioned to pass a bill and appropriate money authorizing the introduction of musk oxen, similar to the provisions of Senate Bill 4936, introduced by Senator NORBECK in the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session.

The carrying out of the recommended work will be of great immediate and ultimate benefit to the Territory and prove to be a well-paying investment.

Therefore your memorialists respectfully urge the action recommended.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, TERRITORY OF ALASKA,
Office of the Secretary for the Territory.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial 8 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1927, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

House Joint Memorial 8

To the President and Congress of the United States, and to the War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represents:

That the completion of the Government highway from Skagway, Alaska, to the international boundary line at the summit of the White Pass, will become the American terminal portion of an international high road from that port to the highways and waterways at the headwaters of the Yukon River, and furnish an outlet of that rich mining region to that terminal; such a highway will give free access to automobiles and other vehicles to the mining regions around Atlin and White Horse, British Columbia, and thence down the Yukon River, via Dawson, to eastern Alaska; it will be of great benefit to Skagway and will tend to bring the trade of the upper Yukon interior out to that American port, and will tend to increase population, prospecting, and the development of mining along the upper Yukon and around Skagway and in eastern Alaska.

That the construction of said highway, of which the Government has now constructed about one-fourth part, will give American tourists quick and easy entry from Skagway over the magnificent White Pass scenic route into the Lake Bennett, Atlin, and White Horse regions, and connect the highways in those regions with the terminal at Skagway, and be of great advantage in trade to the said port of Skagway.

That the Alaska road commission has heretofore had control of work on said project, and ought to be allowed and authorized to complete the same; that the people of Alaska have confidence in the said Alaska road commission and its ability to do good and effective road work;

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully petitions for the completion of the Skagway highway to the summit of White Pass, and that it be so completed by the Alaska road commission out of funds appropriated by the Congress of the United States for the construction of roads, trails, and bridges in Alaska.

And your memorialist will ever pray: Be it

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the honorable Secretary of War, and to the Hon. DAN SUTHERLAND, Delegate from Alaska, Washington, D. C.

Senate Joint Memorial 7

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, does most respectfully and earnestly represent that:

Whereas all of Alaska is well adapted to the raising of game and fur-bearing animals; and

Whereas certain valuable fur-bearing animals native to Alaska have been exterminated over considerable areas of Alaska, and on other areas well adapted to raising certain fur-bearing and game animals, such animals do not naturally occur; and

Whereas fur-bearing and game animals are one of the important resources of the Territory and can be made to be of much greater value to the Territory by the stocking of lands with animals adapted to such habitats, and the proper protection and upbuilding of the wild fur-bearing and game stock indigenous to the Territory; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has by specific act retained jurisdiction over the game and fur-bearing animals of the Territory and has thereby prevented the Territory from taking an active part in the upbuilding of the wild life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, petitioned to assist in these matters by—

1. Appropriating funds and authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture or the Alaska Game Commission to adopt and carry out a program of stocking lands of Alaska with valuable fur and game animals, similar to the program adopted by the Territory (ch. 51, Session Laws of 1925), for the beginning of which the Territory appropriated $10,000.

2. Increasing the appropriation for the protection of fur and game in Alaska and providing a special appropriation for the obtaining of needed transportation equipment to enable the Alaska Game Commission to carry on adequate wild-life protective work in Alaska.

Such expenditures will be of great immediate and ultimate benefit to the Territory and prove to be a well-paying investment.

Therefore your memorialist respectfully urges that these proposals be adopted.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Office of the Secretary for the Territory.

I, Karl Theile, secretary of Alaska and custodian of the great seal of said Territory, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial 6 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, 1927, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy of said original now on file in my office.

House Joint Memorial 6

To the honorable the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in regular session assembled, respectfully represent:

That the future growth and development of the greater portion of the Territory of Alaska is largely dependent upon the successful operation and maintenance of the Alaska Railroad; that during the comparatively few years since its completion this railroad has been the chief factor in bringing into interior Alaska large and important mining and other interests, some of which involve the expenditure of many millions of dollars, and which are, with good reason, expected to give permanent employment to a great many people and to result in the ultimate settlement, development, and prosperity of Alaska;

That freight and passenger traffic over the Alaska Railroad is showing a steady and gradual increase, but, in the opinion of your memorialists, it is greatly hampered because of the fact that no protection whatever is afforded either the traveling public or the employees of the railroad against the dangers and hazards incident to railroad travel, as the United States has elected, in the operation of the railroad, to avail itself of its sovereign right not to be sued in any matter or action arising out of the operation of the road;

That your memorialists believe that it is a matter of simple justice and right that the United States should in no wise differ in its status from any other common carrier and should be willing to make reparation and should compensate, so far as it is possible to do so, any person suffering injuries or any financial loss by reason of the operation of the said railroad, or by reason of any accident arising out of the operation thereof, on the same basis as if the United States were a common carrier.

Wherefore your memorialists pray that a law be enacted by the Congress by the provisions of which the United States shall consent to be sued in all actions founded upon any contract, express or implied, with the Government of the United States in connection with the operation of the Alaska Railroad, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated, whether founded in tort or otherwise, arising out of the operation of the said Alaska Railroad, in respect to which the party would be entitled to redress against the United States either in a court of law or equity if the United States were suable; declaring the Alaska Railroad to be a common carrier and subject to all the laws of the United States pertaining to common carriers; that such actions may be prosecuted in the courts of Alaska, and that the judgments which may be rendered therein against the United States may be paid in the same manner as judgments rendered in the United States Court of Claims.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Senate Joint Memorial 5

To the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the representatives of the people of the Territory of Alaska in session assembled, do respectfully petition:

That whereas there are certain areas of the public lands in Alaska that are adapted to the grazing of cattle and other livestock; and

Whereas the great agricultural western section of the United States was developed largely by the governmental policy of granting settlers title to the land; and

Whereas a governmental policy of leasing land is not an American policy because Americans have always obtained title to the land upon which they live; and

Whereas the grazing homestead act of Congress has aided in building up the old frontier of the United States and we believe will operate to stimulate the grazing industry in Alaska, we therefore petition the Congress to extend the provision of that act to this Territory as an inducement to agriculturists to preempt our public lands.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 1

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in eighth regular session assembled, do most respectfully represent that—

Whereas the construction of roads is a necessary requirement for the proper development of Alaska; and

Whereas the Fifth Alaska Territorial Legislature realizing the advantages and necessity of such improvement on Seward Peninsula, authorized the purchase of the Seward Peninsula Railroad; and

Whereas this railroad, now designated as the Nome-Shelton tramway, has proven of inestimable benefit to the southern part of Seward Peninsula; and

Whereas under authority of the act of Congress approved June 30, 1921, the Alaska Road Commission submitted a report printed in House Document No. 514, Sixty-seventh Congress, fourth session, recommending the extension of the Nome-Shelton tramway in connection with related road and trail development on the Seward Peninsula; and

Whereas House Joint Resolution 60, Sixty-eighth Congress, first session, authorizing the adoption of the above-mentioned report, was approved by the House Committee on the Territories, passed the House by unanimous consent on January 28, 1925, but failed of passage in the Senate because it was not considered; and

Whereas House Joint Resolution 73, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, in identical terms, was approved by House Committee on the Territories, passed the House on February 2, 1927, but failed of passage in the Senate because it was again not considered in the closing days of a short session: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That your memorialists most respectfully urge that Congress give the proposed extension of this tramway their most earnest and favorable consideration; and therefore be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of Alaska be instructed to send copies of this memorial and supporting petition to the President of the United States, the Senate and House of Representatives, to the Secretary of War, and to the Hon. DAN A. SUTHERLAND, Delegate for Alaska.

Passed by the house March 31, 1927.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolutions of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

Concurrent resolution

Whereas the lessees of tracts of Hawaiian home lands on the island of Molokai have made remarkable progress in the development of their tracts notwithstanding the inadequate water supply for irrigation purposes; and

Whereas with proper irrigation the lessees of said tracts would be enabled to cultivate their tracts more properly and increase their financial returns for their efforts; and

Whereas by providing an increased water supply for irrigation purposes the value of the tracts would increase and the taxes therefrom would be greater; and

Whereas it would be to the financial advantage of the Territory in the form of increased returns from taxation to provide a more adequate water supply: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be requested, through the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, to extend to the Territory of Hawaii the provisions of the reclamation act; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Governor of Hawaii, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

ALBERT E. LLOYD,

Concurrent resolution

Whereas the women of the Territory of Hawaii have shown an interest in civic affairs and in the administration of justice at least equal to that shown by the men; and

Whereas it has been proposed that women should be permitted to serve as jurors; and

Whereas it is but proper that the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii should consider the advisability of enacting a law to permit women to serve on juries; and

Whereas such a law would be in direct conflict with the provisions of section 83 of the organic act: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the Senate concurring), That Congress be requested to so amend the provisions of section 83 of the organic act that the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii may enact a law permitting women to serve on juries; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

Concurrent resolution

Whereas the annual compensation paid to the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii is $10,000; and

Whereas the governor, on account of the peculiar geographical position of the Territory of Hawaii, has been compelled to expend large sums of money to entertain distinguished visitors from the mainland of the United States and from foreign countries visiting the Territory and passing through Honolulu; and

Whereas the present compensation provided for the governor of the Territory, under the peculiar circumstances existing in Hawaii, is inadequate: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii, regular session of 1927 (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be respectfully requested to increase the annual compensation of the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii from $10,000 per annum to $12,000: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

Whereas the people of the Territory of Hawaii are interested in and in favor of allowing boxing exhibitions to be carried on in the Territory of Hawaii, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be requested to amend section 320 of the penal laws of the United States (35 Stat. L. 1150) by changing the last paragraph of said law to read as follows:

"The provision of this section shall apply to all of the Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, but shall not include the Territory of Hawaii"; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the chairman of the Committee on Territories of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following communications from the Secretary of the Interior, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 5, 1927.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I transmit herewith a copy of a letter from Hon. W. R. Farrington, Governor of Hawaii, submitting for consideration a copy of Joint Resolution 4, passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii at its fourteenth biennial session and signed by the governor April 20, 1927, in relation to the claim of the Territory of Hawaii on behalf of the University of Hawaii for recognition by the Federal Government of its right to share in the benefits of certain acts of Congress.

Respectfully,

HUBERT WORK.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Honolulu, May 24, 1927.

The honorable SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I transmit for your consideration and presentation to the House of Representatives, United States Congress, where it may possibly be referred to the appropriate committee, Joint Resolution 4, passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii at its fourteenth biennial session and signed by the governor of the Territory. This joint resolution is entitled "Declaring the claim of the Territory of Hawaii on behalf of the University of Hawaii for recognition by the Federal Government of its right to share in the benefits of certain of the acts of Congress."

The people of the Territory of Hawaii feel that their Territorial university, beginning, as the State universities have done, with a college of agriculture and mechanic arts, is the proper center for the continuation of those activities contemplated by the United States Congress through the so-called Hatch and Adams fund provided for the study of agricultural problems and the promotion of scientific research in relation thereto.

Hawaii has, since it became part and parcel of the United States, contributed to the Federal Treasury over $100,000,000 in excess of the Federal expenditures within the Territory, except, of course, the expenditures of the establishments of the Army and Navy. The people of the Territory are pleased to bear their share of national burdens as required by the revenues derived through customs and the bureau of internal revenue. Having established their position as contributors to the Federal revenue in larger amounts than many of the States of the Union, they are of the opinion that they should derive benefits from national legislation in the same proportion that the various States are benefited by specific legislation, especially in relation to agricultural industry.

Yours respectfully,

W. R. FARRINGTON,
Governor of Hawaii.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

This is to certify that hereto attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution 4 of the regular session of 1927 of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, the original of which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the Territory of Hawaii to be affixed.

Done at the capitol in Honolulu, this 12th day of May, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint Resolution 4, declaring the claim of the Territory of Hawaii on behalf of the University of Hawaii for recognition by the Federal Government of its right to share in the benefits of certain of the acts of Congress

Whereas the Congress of the United States by an act approved March 2, 1887 (24 Stat. L. 440), made provision for agricultural experiment stations to be established under the direction of the college or colleges or the agricultural departments thereof in each State or Territory which had been established or which might thereafter be established in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862 (12 Stat. L. 503), entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," or any of the supplements to said act; and

Whereas the said Congress has further endowed agricultural experiment stations so established and directed under the provisions of an act of Congress approved June 7, 1888 (25 Stat. L. 176), and an act approved March 16, 1906 (34 Stat. L. 63), and an act approved February 24, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 970); and

Whereas the Congress has further made provision for and endowed agricultural extension work in the several States of the Union by the provisions of an act approved May 8, 1914 (38 Stat. L. 372), entitled "An act to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture"; and

Whereas the Territory of Hawaii has established as a part of the University of Hawaii a college in accordance with the provisions of said act of the Congress approved July 2, 1862, and its supplements, and the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii has given its assent to the provisions of all acts of the Congress providing for agricultural experiment stations in connection with colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts, such assent being expressed in section 4 of Act 203 of the session laws of 1919 (sec. 403 of the revised laws of Hawaii, 1925); and

Whereas all of the States of the Union and some of the present States when they were Territories have received the benefits provided by the Congress for such agricultural experiment stations, and the Territory of Hawaii is clearly within the purport and intent of these acts and the best practice as applied to other Territories, but has thus far been denied said benefits: Therefore be it

Enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, The Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii hereby reaffirms the declarations and claims specifically set forth in the act of said legislature approved April 26, 1923, entitled "An act to define and declare the claims of the Territory of Hawaii concerning its status in the American Union and to provide for the appointment of a commission to secure more complete recognition of such claims by the Federal Government," referring especially to the high standard of educational institutions and educational policies in which American ideals and American programs have prevailed for a hundred years, and does further reiterate and express its confidence in the intent of the Congress to do full justice to the Territory of Hawaii, and its belief that the failure of the Territory of Hawaii to receive for the use of the University of Hawaii the benefits provided by the aforesaid acts of Congress for the establishment of agricultural experiment stations in connection with the University of Hawaii and the endowment of agricultural extension work will be speedily remedied when the Congress is fully informed of the facts.

The Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii hereby makes formal request of the Congress that in future annual appropriations made to carry out the provisions of the above-cited acts to establish and endow agricultural experiment stations, the Congress of the United States include the sums necessary to provide for the participation of Hawaii in the benefits of said acts.

The Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii hereby respectfully requests the Congress of the United States to so amend said act approved May 8, 1914 (38 Stat. L. 372), as to include the Territory of Hawaii within its scope on a parity with the several States, and does further request that in future annual appropriations made to carry out the provisions of said act the Congress include the sums necessary to make said amendment effective.

To the end that the conditions herein recited may be remedied, the Governor of Hawaii, in association with the Delegate to Congress from Hawaii, is requested to present and urge the claims of the Territory of Hawaii as above set forth to the next session of the Congress of the United States and the executive departments of the Federal Government.

Approved this 20th day of April, A. D. 1927.

W. R. FARRINGTON,
Governor of the Territory of Hawaii.

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, TERRITORY OF HAWAII,

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.
(Through the honorable the Secretary of the Interior).

DEAR SIR: I transmit for your information and presentation to the United States Senate in the usual manner certified copy of Joint Resolution 1, passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii in regular session of 1927, entitled:

"Declaring the project of rehabilitation of the Hawaiian race, as provided by the Hawaiian homes commission act, 1920, and as administered by the Hawaiian homes commission a success, requesting the Secretary of the Interior to approve the extension of the activities of the commission under said act, urging the Congress of the United States to extend the provisions thereof to all of the islands of the Hawaiian Group, and recommending certain amendments thereto."

Very respectfully,

W. R. FARRINGTON,
Governor of Hawaii.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
December 5, 1927.

Respectfully forwarded to the President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

HUBERT WORK, Secretary.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

This is to certify that hereto attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution 1 of the regular session of 1927 of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, the original of which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the Territory of Hawaii to be affixed.

Done at the capitol in Honolulu this 12th day of May, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint Resolution 1, declaring the project of rehabilitation of the Hawaiian race, as provided by the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, 1920, and as administered by the Hawaiian Homes Commission, a success, requesting the Secretary of the Interior to approve the extension of the activities of the commission under said act, urging the Congress of the United States to extend the provisions thereof to all of the islands of the Hawaiian group, and recommending certain amendments thereto

Whereas by act of Congress of July 9, 1921, known as the Hawaiian homes act, 1920, large areas of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii were set aside to be administered by the Hawaiian Homes Commission, created by said act for the benefit of native Hawaiians in order to rehabilitate the Hawaiian race and prevent the decrease and possible extinction thereof; and

Whereas the Hawaiian Homes Commission was organized and became operative on September 16, 1921; and

Whereas under said act the activities of the commission were limited to the island of Molokai and to the lands of Keaukaha and Panaewa in Waiakea, South Hilo, and the land of Waimanu on the island of Hawaii; and

Whereas nearly all of the available lands on the island of Molokai suitable for cultivation under present conditions and portions of the lands of Keaukaha have been allotted to and settled upon by native Hawaiians; and

Whereas the Hawaiians who have taken up tracts of Hawaiian home lands have been successful, as evidenced by the following:

(a) One of the outstanding features of the work is that to date not one person that has settled on the land has left it.

(b) The 116 families occupying homesteads on the island of Molokai are making comfortable homes, their lands in most instances being profitably cultivated, and while there is no excessive wealth or luxury they are steadily making payments on the loans granted under the agreement of the lease.

(c) The house lots near Kaunakakai on Molokai and at Keaukaha on Hawaii have proved one of the best features of the commission's activity; especially on Hawaii have these lots served the intended purpose of getting working people out of the tenements.

(d) Cooperative marketing for handling the vegetables, poultry, and work is beginning to take shape among the homesteaders; and

Whereas of a total population of 650 native Hawaiians in the homesteaded areas on Molokai there have been 38 births and 11 deaths; of the deaths, 3 were from pulmonary tuberculosis, one from accident, 1 from poisoning, 1 born defective, 1 unattended, and 4 from removable causes, thus making a mortality rate of less than 1 per cent; and

Whereas on the basis of such success the commission's activities should be extended; and

Whereas under section 204 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission act further authorization of the Congress of the United States and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States must be secured before the commission could further use, lease, or otherwise dispose of Hawaiian home lands to native Hawaiians under the provisions of the act: Therefore be it

Enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the project of rehabilitation of the Hawaiian race, under the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, as administered by the Hawaiian Homes Commission, is hereby approved and declared a success;

That the Secretary of the Interior of the United States be respectfully requested to give his approval to the extension of the activities of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, under the Hawaiian Homes Commission act, 1920, to all of the islands of the group, and that the Congress of the United States authorize the extension of the said project of rehabilitation to the Hawaiian Homes Commission lands on all of the islands of the Hawaiian group, as set forth in the said act;

That the Congress of the United States amend section 204 so as to authorize, and the Secretary of the Interior of the United States approve, the immediate selection by the commission of all of the available lands named in section 203 for allotment and settlement by native Hawaiians, provided that the land so selected shall not be allotted for settlement until existing leases expire: Provided, That the commission may return such portion of the available lands to the commissioner of public lands as may not be immediately needed for the purposes of the act, to be leased by the commissioner of public lands as provided in subdivision D of section 73 of the organic act, such lease to contain a withdrawal clause and the lands so leased may be withdrawn for the purposes of the said act upon the giving of five years' notice of such withdrawal: And provided further, That the commission shall not lease, use, nor dispose of more than 20,000 acres of the area of Hawaiian home lands for settlement by native Hawaiians in any five calendar-year period.

Approved this 13th day of April, A. D. 1927.

Governor of the Territory of Hawaii.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Honolulu, May 24, 1927.

The honorable the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.
(Through the honorable the Secretary of the Interior.)

DEAR SIR: I transmit for your information and presentation to the United States Senate in the usual manner certified copy of Joint Resolution 2, passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii in regular session of 1927, entitled:

"Memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to exempt all officials and employees of the Territory of Hawaii and its political subdivisions from the payment of Federal income taxes."

Very respectfully,

W. R. FARRINGTON,
Governor of Hawaii.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

This is to certify that hereto attached is a true and correct copy of Joint Resolution 2 of the regular session of 1927 of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, the original of which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the Territory of Hawaii to be affixed.

Done at the capitol in Honolulu this 12th day of May, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] RAYMOND C. BROWN,
Secretary of the Territory of Hawaii.

Joint Resolution 2, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to exempt all officials and employees of the Territory of Hawaii and its political subdivisions from the payment of Federal income taxes

Whereas under the revenue act of 1921 of the Congress of the United States the officials and employees of the Territory of Hawaii and its political subdivisions are compelled to pay taxes upon income derived from the Territory or its political subdivisions; and

Whereas the officials and employees receiving compensation from the various States of the Union are exempt from the payment of income taxes; and

Whereas, although the United States Government has the power to tax the income from salaries derived from the Territory of Hawaii or its political subdivisions, such taxation amounts to a discrimination in favor of the officials and employees of the various States of the Union as against the officials and employees of the Territory of Hawaii: Now therefore be it Enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States is hereby formally requested, through the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii, to amend section 213 of the revenue act of 1921, so as to exempt from taxation thereunder all income in the form of salaries derived by the officials and employees from any Territory or the political subdivisions thereof if the laws of the Territory require the payment of a tax on such salaries.

Approved this 15th day of April, A. D. 1927.

(Signed) W. R. FARRINGTON,
Governor of the Territory of Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following communication from the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, together with resolutions of the legislature of the Territory, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF HAWAII, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Honolulu, April 15, 1927.

The honorable PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: I inclose for your consideration a copy of a concurrent resolution passed by the members of the Fourteenth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, requesting an amendment to the act under which various States of the Union have been invited to display in Statuary Hall of the Capitol of the United States, two statues of distinguished sons.

The Territory of Hawaii now makes its appeal for recognition to the end that statues of Jonah Kuhio Kalanianaole, for 20 years Delegate to Congress from the Territory and a member of the former royal family of the Hawaiian monarchy, and Hon. Sanford Ballard Dole, President of the Republic of Hawaii, first governor of the Territory of Hawaii, and judge of the United States District Court of Hawaii, may be placed in Statuary Hall.

Hawaii has since its annexation to the United States carried all the financial responsibilities of a State. It is to-day practically a State, except that its executive and judicial officers are appointed by the President of the United States; its laws may be changed by the Congress of the United States, and its representation in the Congress is through a Delegate who has no vote in Congress.

These leaders whom our citizens desire to especially honor gave a lifetime of service to their country. They were pioneers in a great outpost. They deserve recognition in the same way that honor is done to other famous sons of our Nation.

Yours very truly,

W. R. FARRINGTON,
Governor of Hawaii.

Concurrent resolution

Whereas by act of Congress of July 2, 1864, it is provided that the President of the United States shall invite the various States of the Union to display in Statuary Hall of the Capitol of the United States not more than two statues of distinguished sons; and

Whereas the act limits the privilege to the various States of the Union; and

Whereas it would be fitting and proper for the privilege to be extended to the Territory of Hawaii, and that the said Territory present the statues of Jonah Kuhio Kalanianaole, Prince of the Hawaiian Kingdom and former Delegate to the Congress of the United States for a period of nearly 20 years, and Sanford Ballard Dole, President of the Republic of Hawaii and first Governor of the Territory of Hawaii: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be requested to amend said act so as to include the territories, and that the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii use his good offices to request the President of the United States to invite the Territory of Hawaii, as provided by said act, to place in Statuary Hall of the Capitol of the United States the statues of Jonah Kuhio Kalanianaole and Sanford Ballard Dole; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii be requested to forward a copy of this resolution, with his approval thereof, to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Hawaii.

THE SENATE OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,
Honolulu, Hawaii, April 12, 1927.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted in the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii on April 11, 1927.

ALBERT E. LLOYD,
Clerk of the Senate.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE TERRITORY OF HAWAII,

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Arizona, ss:

I, James H. Kerby, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true, correct, and complete copy of Senate Memorial 4, of the eighth legislature, regular session, State of Arizona, 1927, "To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled to make appropriations for roads over Indian reservations"; all of which is shown by the original bill on file in this department.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at Phoenix, the capital, this 12th day of March, A. D. 1927.

[SEAL.] JAMES H. KERBY,
Secretary of State.

Senate Memorial 4, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled, to make appropriations for roads over Indian reservations

Your memorialist, the Eighth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in regular session convened, respectfully represents:

That of the 73,000,000 acres of land comprising the State of Arizona, approximately three-fifths are reserved by the Government of the United States;

That over these reserved lands the State of Arizona exercises no supervision nor jurisdiction;

That 20,000,000 acres of these lands are reserved by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of the Indians in the State of Arizona;

That the above condition exists in many States;

That these Indian reservations are so situate as to prevent a systematic development and extension of county, State, or national highways without the cooperation and assistance of the Government of the United States;

That the Congress of the United States in enacting a most beneficient national road law has wholly failed to make any provisions for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon the lands reserved by the Federal Government to the use and benefit of its Indian wards;

Whereas adequate transportation facilities are a vital factor in the prosperity and civilization of any country, and are essential to the development of its agriculture and manufacture, to the working of its forests and mines, and to the spread of education and enlightenment among its citizens; and

Whereas the public roads of Arizona are for a large percentage of her citizens, and especially for the 42,000 Indian wards of the Federal Government, the only avenues of transportation leading from the point of production to the point of consumption or rail shipment, and these avenues are only now in the process of their development; and

Whereas a very large portion of the State of Arizona is held in reserve by the Government of the United States to the use and benefit of its Indian wards, and these reservations are so situated as to prevent any economic or systematic road-building activities on the part of the State government as continuous highways are rendered impracticable; this is especially true on the Apache Indian Reservation, as practically the entire long and important stretch of road from Rice to Springerville is on the reservation; and

Whereas a further inequity results from the fact that traffic in its development takes no account of reservation and State boundaries, and the State government is powerless to provide for the extension of its highway system through the adjoining and intervening reservations; and

Whereas the improvement of highways should be commensurate with their importance, and a system of highways upon the Indian reservations in Arizona, would form the only avenue by which the Indian nations could transport their products to a market, or over which the many thousands of tourists from all parts of the United States could pass to view the marvelous beauties of our natural and historical wonders: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, That the development of the material resources of the Indians of Arizona can best be furthered, their material prosperity best enhanced, their education and civilization more readily achieved, and that close association with civilization which has proved to be the efficient means of equipping them to share in the responsibilities of life most certainly assured, by means of highways constructed and maintained over and upon the lands reserved by the Government of the United States to their use and benefit; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to enact any legislation which may be necessary to provide adequate and continual appropriation for the construction and maintenance of highways over and upon Indians reservations in Arizona joining to and in conjunction with the system of State highways;

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to Representatives of Arizona in Congress and Chambers of Commerce in the State of Arizona; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

President.

Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Grant Hinkle, secretary of state of the State of Washington and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of House Joint Memorial 5 with the original copy of said House Joint Memorial 5, now on file in this office, and find the same to be a full, true, and correct copy of said original and of the whole thereof, together with all official indorsements thereon.

House Joint Memorial 5

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled, most respectfully represent and petition your honorable body as follows:

Whereas the Federal Government has an established school under the direct supervision of the Department of the Interior, known as the Tulalip Indian School, at Tulalip, Wash., for the education and training of the Indian children; and

Whereas the Tulalip Indian School only provides an eighth-grade course for all such pupils, and those who desire a high-school education must attend Indian schools in other States at an additional expense; and

Whereas it is necessary, in order to provide such higher education, to establish a high school at Tulalip, Wash.: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Washington in legislative session assembled do respectfully request the Congress of the United States to pass legislation making provision for the construction of permanent and adequate buildings at Tulalip, Wash., for an Indian high school; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state, under the seal of the State of Washington, transmit to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States at Washington, D. C., to the Secretary of the Interior, and to each Senator and Congressman from the State of Washington a full, true, and correct copy of this joint memorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Joint Resolution 28, memorializing the Congress of the United States to make a general survey of the conditions of the Indians and to enact into law the La Follette-Cooper bill, relating to the administration of Indian affairs

Whereas Senate Resolution 341, now pending in the United States Senate, details the deplorable condition of the American Indian and the need for a general survey for the purpose of correcting any abuses in the administration of Indian affairs and of recommending such changes in the law as will promote the security, economic competence, and progress of the Indians; and

Whereas there has been introduced a bill in the Congress of the United States known as the La Follette-Cooper bill, providing for the administration of the education, health, and public welfare of the Indians by the several States; and

Whereas there are several thousand Indians within the State of Wisconsin and it is the opinion of this State that the American Indian is entitled to have his needs taken care of: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature respectfully memorializes the United States Senate to authorize the Committee on Indian Affairs to make a general survey of the conditions of the Indians as provided by Senate Resolution 341 and also memorializes Congress to enact into law the La Follette-Cooper bill, providing for administration by the several States of all funds appropriated for the education, health, and public welfare of the Indians; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the proper officers of the assembly and senate, be transmitted to the presiding officers of each house of Congress and to the Senators and Representatives from this State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE, STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Robert Byrne, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was adopted by the twentieth legislative assembly on the 28th day February, 1927.

Dated at Bismarck, N. Dak., this the 28th day of February, 1927.

[SEAL.] ROBERT BYRNE, Secretary of State.

Concurrent resolution

Be it resolved by the senate and house of representatives:

Whereas during a period of the World War the United States Government established an arbitrary price upon the value of wheat cereal; and

Further, the Government organized and maintained a corporation which purchased and took over, handled, and resold all of the wheat grown in the United States, and prescribed certain rules and regulations concerning the sale, distribution, and consumption of the same; and

Further, that during the years 1919 and 1920 the United States Government made urgent requests of the farmers and wheat growers of the United States to put forth an effort to increase and swell the volume of wheat for consumption in the United States and for export, in order that a famine situation might be averted; and

Further, that contrary to the implied promise of the United States Government that it would continue to support the market for wheat, and would maintain the price of wheat in 1919 and 1920 upon relative price level with that which was guaranteed and maintained during the period of the actual continuance of the operations of the World war; and

Further, that the Federal Government neglected to redeem its implied promise to do so; and

Further, the market price for wheat for the said years dropped considerably below the minimum price guaranteed by the Federal Government through the Federal Grain Corporation, and that by reason thereof the wheat farmers of the United States sustained tremendous losses on account of the said reduction and price;

Further, that the cost of the production of the 1919 and 1920 wheat crop was vastly enhanced by reason of the scarcity of labor and the consequent high prices paid therefor, and the high prices prevailing for all implements, machinery, and supplies necessarily used by the wheat farmers of the United States in the production of the said 1919 and 1920 crops; and

Whereas the said United States or Federal Grain Corporation closed out and ceased its operations with a large surplus in the treasury, which said surplus represented profits realized by the said Federal Grain Corporation during the period of the war when it operated and enjoyed a complete monopoly of the wheat markets of the United States, and through said power and influence it exercised a dominant power over the markets of the world; and that in justice and equity the said surplus belongs to the wheat growers of the United States of America;

Whereas the Federal Government, after the close of the World War and the termination of its contract with the manufacturers of war materials and supplies, many such manufacturers were settled with and paid large sums as a remuneration for losses sustained on account of the contract relation existing between the Federal Government and the said manufacturers;

Whereas further, the Federal Government settled with paid claims of the railroads and transportation companies with which it had contracts either expressed or implied, for the transportation of war material, soldiers, sailors, etc., and that large sums were paid to said transportation companies in settlement of claims which they presented to the Federal Government, many of which claims were not covered by express contracts;

Whereas the Federal Government during the period of war, by its rules and regulations assumed to dictate and control the production acreage of wheat grown in the United States during the period of actual hostilities, and for the years 1919 and 1920, being the reconstruction period after the war; and in consequence thereof an implied contract arose between the wheat growers and the Federal Government, and the wheat growers relied upon the said implied contract and in justice and right should be remunerated for their losses in a sum not less than a price guaranteed by the Federal Government for wheat during the period of hostilities;

Whereas the Federal Government realized a profit at the expense of the wheat grower and that the wheat grower in good faith complied with all the rules, regulations, and requests of the Federal Government, it is the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota that in justice and equity Congress should take full cognizance of these millions of dollars now in the national Treasury, so retained and belonging to the wheat growers of the United States; that this money should be made available to use in any manner required in connection with legislation which should be enacted at the earliest possible date, establishing for the grower of wheat in the United States a price for his product based upon American standards of living and cost;

Further, that a copy of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of state of the State of North Dakota and forwarded to the President and Vice President of the United States, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from the State of North Dakota.

WALTER MADDOCK,
President of the Senate.
W. D. AUSTIN,
Secretary of the Senate.
JNO. W. CARR,
Speaker of the House.
C. R. VERRY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint Resolution 33, protesting to Congress and to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States against the passage of the Frazier-Burtness bill (H. R. 16776 and S. 5696), depriving the Grain and Warehouse Commission of Wisconsin of authority to act as Federal inspectors of grains in transit

Whereas bill H. R. 16776 was introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States on January 28, 1927, by Hon. OLGER B. BURTNESS, and a similar bill (S. 5696) was introduced in the United States Senate on February 12, 1927, by Hon. LYNN J. FRAZIER, with the sanction and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, amending certain sections of the United States grain standards act of August 11, 1916, and adding thereto a new section;

Whereas the proposed addition to the statutes of the United States confers upon the Secretary of Agriculture authority to establish and maintain laboratories at such points as he may designate for the purpose of making determinations of protein in wheat and oil in flax, etc., and to issue certificates showing the results of such determinations and tests upon requests of any interested party, fees for such services to be assessed and collected, the amount to be fixed by the Secretary;

Whereas if such a measure should be enacted into law it would, in effect, make null and void the act of the Legislature of Wisconsin in creating and maintaining the Wisconsin Grain and Warehouse Commission, for the reason that it would deprive such commission of the authority as agents of the Federal Government to make such tests and determinations and issue such certificates;

Whereas the Wisconsin Grain and Warehouse Commission, located at Superior, Wis., has been in efficient and effective operation since 1905 and has rendered valuable aid and assistance to the wheat and grain growers of this and neighboring Northwestern States;

Whereas during the 20 years of its existence the tests, grades, and determinations of grains made by the Wisconsin Grain and Warehouse Commission have seldom been called into question and its work has been uniformly satisfactory to the shippers and to the grain interests of the Northwest, and has been sanctioned and approved by the Federal Government;

Whereas there has been no call from the people of this State or the grain growers of the adjoining States for the abolition of the present system of grain inspection, and the only claim made for abandoning the present system is that it might relieve the Federal Government of slight financial obligations for the general supervision of the work in this and other States of the Union: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That the State of Wisconsin hereby respectfully protests to the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture against any action changing the present system of grain inspection in this and other States; be it further

Resolved, That the Grain and Warehouse Commission of Wisconsin be instructed and directed to use every and all lawful and proper means at its disposal to combat this proposed legislation, and to cooperate with similar commissions and public bodies in other States to the end that this bill, which is inimical to the best interests of the people of Wisconsin and of adjoining States, be defeated; be it also

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested by the presiding officers and chief clerks of both houses, be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Presiding Officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of Congress from Wisconsin; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, so attested, be sent to the governor and presiding officers of both houses of the legislature of each of the States of the Union maintaining grain and warehouse activities for the testing of grains in transit, and inviting the cooperation of these States in like protests to the Congress and to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Joint Resolution 91, memorializing Congress to provide more adequate support for forest research

Whereas the future prosperity of Wisconsin is bound up in maintaining and restoring the productivity of forest lands and the effective utilization of their forest products as well as the related recreational game and fish and other resources; and

Whereas there is now maintained by the Federal Forest Service in cooperation with the University of Wisconsin the forest products laboratory which is the outstanding institution for research in forest products in the world, and at St. Paul, the Lakes States forest experiment station for forest research in Wisconsin and other Lake States; and

Whereas the efficient development and use of forests and the products therefrom is dependent upon a permanent enlarged program of forest research for these institutions not only for Wisconsin but also for the entire United States; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the second session of the Sixty-ninth Congress of the United States a bill, H. R. 17406, which would provide definite authorized appropriations for the United States Department of Agriculture in order to secure an adequate national program of forest research in cooperation with the States: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin urges the passage by Congress of the above-mentioned bill; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the presiding officers and chief clerks of the senate and assembly, be forwarded to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress and to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives therein.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint Memorial Resolution 3

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Whereas the Federal Government has built at Muscle Shoals, Ala., at an expense of more than $150,000,000, a vast plant designated for the manufacture of nitrates for munitions in time of war and for the production of fertilizer products in time of peace; and

Whereas this plant has lain idle for more than eight years, since the close of the World War, thus disregarding one of the specific provisions of the national defense act, under which the plant was authorized, which provision was intended to result in the production of nitrates at a cost that would materially reduce the price of fertilizer to the farmers of the United States; and

Whereas the nitrate plants at Muscle Shoals, representing an investment of $100,000,000, instead of being operated for the manufacture of cheaper fertilizer for the farmers of the Nation, are and have been idle for many years, while the Wilson Dam development is temporarily leased to private interests; and

Whereas the farmers of the United States are using more than 7,000,000 tons of fertilizer per year, costing more than $200,000,000, and the farmers of Florida alone are spending more than $14,000,000 per year for their fertilizer; and

Whereas we have the assurance of competent authorities that the facilities of the Muscle Shoals plant are adequate for the production of ample nitrates for the needs of American agriculture: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and hereby is, memorialized to enact at its next session such legislation as will without further costly delay start the vast Muscle Shoals plant to its intended work, which was the manufacture of nitrates for the needs of our Nation's agriculture, the production of munitions for war, and other national-defense purposes, and that any power in excess of these requirements be distributed to those States within transmission distances; be it further

Resolved, That United States Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL and Representatives SEARS, DRANE, GREENE, and YON are hereby urgently requested to use their most vigorous effort to accomplish the purpose of this memorial, and that the secretary of the State of Florida be directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State, to the President of the United States, to the Congress of this Nation, and to Florida's Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved by the Governor May 25, 1927.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office Secretary of State, ss:

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of Joint Memorial Resolution 3, as passed by the Legislature of the State of Florida, session 1927, as shown by the enrolled resolution on file in this office.

Senate Joint Memorial 4

To the honorable Senate of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending before the Senate of the United States a bill commonly known as the corn sugar bill, being House Calendar No. 204, S. 481 (Rept. No. 911); and

Whereas said bill if enacted would permit the adulteration of about 75 per cent of our food products with corn sugar without declaring the presence of such sugar on the package or other container of such foods; and

Whereas such adulteration is contrary to the existing provisions of the national pure food and drug law and would, if permitted, tend to weaken said law in a vital respect and to greatly reduce the efficiency thereof; and

Whereas we regard the passage of such pending legislation as detrimental to the maintenance of the purity of food products: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do hereby memorialize the Senate of the United States to refuse to enact the legislation aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Montana.

Senate Joint Memorial 3

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas by an act of Congress of May 23, 1908, provision is made for payment of 25 per cent of all moneys received from each forest reserve to the treasurer of the State or Territory in which said reserve is located for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which said forest reserve is located; and

Whereas it is the belief of your memorialists that each State and Territory is justly entitled to and should receive all of the moneys from the forest reserve in such State or Territory after deducting administrative and other expenses: Now therefore be it

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE, STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To all to whom these presents shall come:

I, Robert Byrne, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, do hereby certify that the following concurrent resolution was adopted by the twentieth legislative assembly on the 28th day of February, 1927.

Dated at Bismarck, N. Dak., this the 28th day of February, 1927.

ROBERT BYRNE,
Secretary of State.

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to establish the Roosevelt national park in Billings County, N. Dak., and to provide for the substitution of public lands of the United States for the State school lands located within the proposed park area

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring)—

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill to establish the Roosevelt national park in Billings County, N. Dak., introduced by Congressman SINCLAIR, of North Dakota, December 7, 1925, being H. R. 3942; and

Whereas the tract of land in such proposed park consists of the petrified forest and the famous Bad Lands, lying on both sides of the Little Missouri River, in Billings County, N. Dak., where Theodore Roosevelt operated his historic cattle ranches and hunted wild game in the early history of Dakota Territory, and which tract is admirably fitted by nature for scenic purposes, and preserves in its natural state the mountainous character and the wild, unchanged condition which existed in the West 50 years ago; and which tract it is practicable and appropriate to preserve as a national park in the honor of Theodore Roosevelt, in the interest of American scenic beauty, and as a relic of the traditional pioneer conditions of the West, which have all but disappeared from the North American Continent; and

Whereas there is included in said proposed park area approximately 42,000 acres of public lands belonging to the State of North Dakota known as State school lands, which was granted to it by the United States under sections 10 and 11 of the enabling act of February 22, 1889, to be held in trust by the State of North Dakota for the common schools, which lands, on account of its rough and barren character, can not be sold for the minimum price of $10 per acre, as prescribed in section 11 of said enabling act, and from which the State of North Dakota gets only a nominal income; and it further appearing that it would be expedient to exchange the said State school lands located within such proposed park area for public lands of the United States of like quantity, character, and value located in the vicinity of such proposed park: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That this Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota hereby indorses said Roosevelt national-park project and respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to establish a national park as provided for in said H. R. 3942; and be it further

Resolved, That Congress, in furtherance of said park project, make appropriate provision for exchanging with the State of North Dakota public lands of the United States of equal quantity, character, and value for the State school lands lying within said proposed park area heretofore granted to the State of North Dakota under the provisions of sections 10 and 11 of the enabling act of February 22, 1889; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state transmit copies of this memorial to the President of the United States, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen for the State of North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Joint Resolution 29, memorializing Congress to protest against the surrender of land in Michigan and Wisconsin by the Department of the Interior to private interests

Whereas the public welfare demands that there should be no interference with the homestead preference rights of soldiers and sailors as conferred on them by act of Congress of February 14, 1920; and

Whereas there is at present pending in Congress a bill known as H. R. 16547, which will give the Secretary of the Interior the right to withdraw large tracts of land in Michigan and Wisconsin from homestead entry; and

Whereas the passage of such a bill would deprive all war veterans and their widows as well as private citizens of the homestead privilege in Michigan and Wisconsin and would permit the acquisition of lands by speculators: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin earnestly requests the Congress of the United States to indefinitely postpone action on H. R. 16547; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the presiding officers and chief clerks of the senate and assembly, be forwarded to the Presiding Officers of both Houses of Congress and to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives therein.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Concurrent Resolution 8, memorializing Congress of the United States to amend the transportation act of 1920 sufficiently to restore to the State of Minnesota general jurisdiction over its intrastate railroad rates

Whereas there has prevailed in the State of Minnesota, since 1913, a policy of railroad rate making pursuant to legislative enactments, known as the distance scale of railroad freight rates; and

Whereas the State of Minnesota has deemed it of the best interest to all of its citizens and communities to prohibit discriminations and preferences by requiring railroads to publish rates on the basis of a like charge for a like distance for a like class of traffic; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States, acting upon applications filed pursuant to the Federal transportation act of 1920, has issued orders in the so-called Watertown and Fargo cases authorizing the rail carriers to publish and charge rates for the carrying of freight between points within the State of Minnesota on the basis of different charges for equal distances on class traffic; and

Whereas such orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission have created unjust discriminations against and undue preference of persons and localities within the State of Minnesota to the detriment and disadvantage of such persons and localities; and

Whereas it has been held by the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota that the railroad and warehouse commission of this State is without authority to order the removal of such discriminations existing between persons and localities within the State of Minnesota; and

Whereas the railroad and warehouse commission is under injunction of the United States District Court for the District of Minnesota, prohibiting said commission from interfering with the different scales of rates on class traffic published and charged by the railroads under authority of said orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and

Whereas by reason of said orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, there has been created and now exists within the State of Minnesota three different scales of rates for movement of class traffic between points within the State of Minnesota over like distances; and

Whereas the scale of rates on class traffic maintained by the railroads for movement of freight between points within the State of Minnesota prior to the issuance of said orders by the Interstate Commerce Commission were rates which were found by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Minnesota rate cases to be not confiscatory, as increased and decreased by the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission pursuant to recommendations of the Interstate Commerce Commission in proceedings affecting the general level of rates throughout the western district, and also the order of the Director General of Railroads, No. 28; and

Whereas such scale of rates published by the railroads for the movement of class traffic, within the State of Minnesota as authorized by the railroad and warehouse commission, was never the subject of an application for increase by the railroads to either the railroad and warehouse commission of the State of Minnesota or the intrastate commerce commission prior to said orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the House concurring), That the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America be and hereby is earnestly requested to immediately amend the transportation act of 1920 so as to restore to the State of Minnesota general jurisdiction over its intrastate railroad rates so as to prevent the creation by orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission of intrastate discriminations and preferences in cases affecting the level of intrastate rates.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Concurrent Resolution 1, memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of a Federal law regulating the shipment of machine guns, revolvers, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons, and the ammunition adapted thereto, in interstate and foreign commerce

Whereas stricter supervision in the matter of the sale, shipment, and importation of revolvers, machine guns, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons will materially aid in the suppression of crime; and

Whereas the Federal Government, by reason of its exclusive control in interstate commerce, may regulate the shipment and importation of revolvers, machine guns, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey—

1. That the Congress of the United States be memorialized for the passage of a Federal statute prohibiting the shipment of revolvers, machine guns, automatic rifles, and other deadly weapons in interstate and foreign commerce.

Whereas many ex-service men and women reside within the State of Nevada and vicinity; and

Whereas Nevada, due to its favorable climatic condition for the treatment of various diseases, should be considered: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of Nevada, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to establish a Government hospital within the State of Nevada for the treatment of disabled ex-service men and women; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate and to the Speaker of the House, to each of our Senators, and to our Representative in Washington.

House Resolution 68

Whereas under the present copyright act a person who has copyrighted a musical composition has not only the exclusive right to print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend that composition, but the additional exclusive right to use that composition publicly for profit; and

Whereas the copyright act provides that the copyright proprietor may recover a sum in certain cases of as much as $100 from the offender for the infringement of this exclusive right to use the composition publicly for profit; and

Whereas protected by this act certain copyright proprietors, in addition to the purchase price, charge unreasonable and exhorbitant prices for permission to use the composition publicly for profit; and

Whereas the various copyright proprietors have formed an organization known as the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers for the enforcement of the said provisions of the copyright act and for the protection of their interests thereunder; and

Whereas the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers maintains a supergovernmental enforcement agency with investigators always ready to descend upon any offender and bring him to task; and

Whereas this additional fee for permission to use the composition publicly for profit, and the penalties for infringement of the same, are paid to the copyright proprietor, who ordinarily is not the author or composer of the composition; and

Whereas these provisions of the copyright act are inimicable to the best interests of a majority of the people and make it impossible to present this music to them at reasonable prices: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That the Congress of the United States be memoralized to amend the copyright act of 1909 to provide that a person who has copyrighted a dramatico-musical or a choral or orchestral composition or other musical composition, which composition is offered for sale to the public, shall not have the exclusive right to perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit nor be entitled to receive any fee or price in addition to the purchase price for permission to use the composition in a public performance for profit, nor be entitled to any penalty if the composition is so used without the permission of the copyright proprietor; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be delivered to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of the United States, and also to each Congressman and Senator from the State of Illinois.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a resolution adopted by the house of represenatives on the 2d day of June, 1927.

Assembly Joint Resolution 3, relative to the congressional reapportionment of the United States

Whereas the provisions of the Federal Constitution providing for a reapportionment of the Representatives in Congress from the several States every 10 years, based upon the Federal census, has not been acted upon since 1910; and

Whereas the present representation in the House of Representatives is based upon the census of 1910, an injustice is imposed upon many States where population has materially increased; and

Whereas the population of the State of California, according to the census of 1920, was 3,426,536, an increase over the population of 1910 of 1,048,987, showing conclusively that the State of California is entitled to more representation in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas it is pointed out that a policy of depriving the State of its proper representation is exceedingly detrimental to the republican form of government; and

Whereas it is deplored that there are differences of opinion and selfishness manifested on the part of those sections which either lose or do not gain in representation: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California earnestly petition Congress to enact legislation which will give to the several States of the United States their just representation in Congress based upon the last Federal census; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution under the great seal of the State of California to the President and Vice President of the United States, to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Seventieth Congress of the United States and to the governors of each of the several States.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Louis L. Emmerson, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true photostatic copy of House Joint Resolution 45, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

LOUIS L. EMMERSON,

House Joint Resolution 45

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois (the Senate concurring therein):

Whereas the seventeenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States makes mandatory that "the Senate of the United Sates shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years," and by reason of this constitutional provision the State of Illinois is entitled to, and guaranteed two Senators in the Senate of the United States; and

Whereas on or about the 7th day of December, A. D. 1926, the Hon. William B. McKinley, one of the United States Senators representing the State of Illinois in the United States Senate, departed this life and thereupon by reason of this vacancy the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH was, in accordance with the Constitution and statutes, appointed to fill the unexpired term of said William B. McKinley as United States Senator from Illinois, and the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH presented the credentials in proper form under the great seal of the State of Illinois, to the United States Senate, and the United States Senate, without questioning the legal form and force of said credentials, nor questioning the constitutional qualifications of the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH, nor the guaranteed right under the Constitution of the United States for full representation to membership in the United States Senate by the State of Illinois, refused to administer the oath of office to the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH and by that act denied to the State of Illinois equal representation in the said Senate of the United States; and

Whereas for a period of nearly 140 years since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States and the amendment recited above the rights of a sovereign State to equal representation in the Senate of the United States wherein the credentials and constitutional qualifications were unquestioned, has never before been denied by the Senate of the United States refusing to administer the constitutional oath of office; and

Whereas this same question on an objection to the right of a Senator elect to take the prescribed constitutional oath of office was once before raised against the State of Illinois, but upon the able representation of the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois by Hon. Stephen A. Douglas, senior Senator from Illinois, in the matter of the credentials of Gen. James Shields, a Senator elect from Illinois, the United States Senate finally declared that the guaranteed constitutional rights of a sovereign State should not be abridged by a denial of the right of a Senator elect to take the oath, and by this action established a historic precedent; and

Whereas one of the early proposed amendments to the Constitution making it possible for United States Senators to be elected by a direct vote of the people was advocated by Senator John M. Palmer, of Illinois, and subsequently became a part of the fundamental law of the land; and

Whereas the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH has been by majority of the people of the State of Illinois, after a full presentation, discussion, and consideration of all issues involved, elected as a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois and no contest has issued against said election, and credentials have been accepted by the United States Senate as being in due form, and the qualifications of the said United States Senator elect are in full compliance with all constitutional and statute requirements; and

Whereas the only test provided in the Constitution of the United States as to the qualifications of a Member of the Senate of the United States is as follows:

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years and been nine years a citizen of the United States and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen"; and

Whereas amendment 17 of the Constitution of the United States provides that—

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures"; and

Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides—

"* * * That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate"; and

Whereas Article I, section 5, of the United States Constitution provides that—

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business.

"Each House may determine the rules of its procedure, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expell a Member"; and

Whereas reference to the above article and section of the Constitution provides: "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members," etc.; and

Whereas the uniform construction of this provision has been accepted that "qualifications of its own Members" can not be construed otherwise, that in order to be a "Member" it is obvious that the taking of the required oath constitutes membership, and that previous to the taking of the required oath the Senate has no jurisdiction on another than a "Member," and the Senate shall subsequent to the taking of the oath be the judge of the qualification of the Member; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States further provides by amendment 10 that—

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively or to the people"; and

Whereas the foregoing are all of the relevant provisions in the Constitution with respect to the power of the Senate over the selection of Senators; and

Whereas the credentials of the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH hereinbefore recited, constitute a mandate of the choice of a majority of the people of the State of Illinois, at a general election and which selection and choice by a majority of the people of the State of Illinois is uncontested, and that said election is for a period of six years, and that the continued refusal of the Senate of the United States to administer the oath of office to the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH as United States Senator from Illinois will result in depriving the State of Illinois of the full representation in the Senate of the United States for a period of six years; to which it is by the Constitution of the United States entitled and guaranteed: Therefore be it

Resolved by the people of the State of Illinois, represented by the general assembly, That in view of the foregoing it be respectfully presented to the Senate of the United States of the Seventieth Congress that the people of the State of Illinois are clearly within their rights in the expectation that the credentials of the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH now on file in the Senate of the United States entitle the said Hon. FRANK L. SMITH to take the oath of office to which he has been elected as a United States Senator from the State of Illinois; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be directed to the Vice President of the United States, the constitutional presiding officer of the United States Senate, and a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Hon. CHARLES S. DENEEN, senior United States Senator from Illinois, with the request and direction that these resolutions be presented to the Senate of the United States, to the end that the sovereign State of Illinois shall not be deprived of the rights of full representation in the Senate of the United States, as guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a delegation on the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois be, and the same is hereby, created, the said delegation to consist of the speaker of the house of representatives, the president of the senate, and two members of the house of representatives to be appointed by the speaker thereof, and two members of the senate, to be appointed by the president of the senate on the nomination of the executive committee; and it shall be the duty of said delegation on the constitutional rights of the State of Illinois to appear before the Senate of the United States, or any of its committees or subcommittees, upon the convening of said Senate and at any time thereafter, and to present to said Senate and its committees a consideration of the constitutional rights of this State; and on behalf of the people of this State respectfully to insist upon a recognition by the Senate of the United States of the constitutional right of this State to be represented in the Senate of the United States by two Senators, and that said consitutional right be recognized by the administration of the oath to the Hon. FRANK L. SMITH as United States Senator from this State.

Adopted by the house June 16, 1927.

ROBERT SCHOLEN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
B. H. MCCANN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Concurred in by the senate June 21, 1927.

FRED E. STERLING,
President of the Senate.
JAMES H. PADDOCK,
Secretary of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 5, proposing the rejection by the Legislature of the State of Florida of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States provided for by House Joint Resolution 184 of the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States, conferring upon Congress power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age

Whereas the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States has adopted House Joint Resolution 184, by the constitutional vote of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, whereby an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is proposed to the several States for ratification or rejection, said proposed amendment reading as follows:

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article, except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to the legislation enacted by the Congress"; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Florida, while being in full sympathy and accord with the humanitarian spirit which led to the submission of said proposed amendment of the Congress of the United States, is opposed to further extension of the powers of the Federal Government to invade and take away the inherent powers reserved by the several States: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States contained in House Joint Resolution 184 of the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which amendment reads as follows, to wit,

"SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.

"SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article, except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress," be, and the same is hereby, rejected by the Legislature of the State of Florida in regular session assembled; and that the action of this legislature thereon be forthwith certified to the Secretary of State of the United States by the secretary of state of Florida under the great seal of the State, and that certified copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state of the State of Florida to the President and Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

CONSPIRACIES TO DEFRAUD THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I introduce a bill and ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 1397) amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. 220), was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. p. 220), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1044. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to any offense for which an indictment has been heretofore found or an information instituted, or to any proceedings under any such indictment or information."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have asked that the bill be read because, being a matter of very decided urgency, I am going to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

It will be recalled that prior to the year 1921 the statute of limitations as to all offenses against the United States not capital in character was three years. At that time the Attorney General represented that he was desirous of having further time to investigate alleged war frauds, that the facts were intricate and involved, and that possibly the statute of limitations might run before it would be possible to obtain indictments. He asked that the period of the statute of limitations applicable to conspiracies to defraud the Government of the United States should be extended from three years to six years. The Congress promptly responded and extended to six years the period of the statute as to that particular class of offenses.

It is not purposed by the department, as announced some time ago, to attempt any further prosecutions of offenses of that character; that is to say, offenses giving rise to the statute. Moreover, the whole period of six years has now run against all offenses of that character and there is no longer any occasion for a six-year statute. But it may be remembered that it was availed of in a recent trial in the District of Columbia to protect a witness from testifying, he claiming his constitutional privilege. It is hoped that the legislation may be enacted by the Congress before the trial of that case is resumed.

I have taken the matter up with the Department of Justice and have a letter from the Assistant Attorney General, who approves the measure. I ask that the letter may be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the letter, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, December 12, 1927.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Following our conference of to-day relative to the proposed bill amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes, I took up with the Attorney General the matter of his approval.

He desires me to say that, in view of the fact that such an amendment would not affect any case now pending, he therefore approves the form of the bill proposed.

For your information I refer you to a letter that I wrote December 3 to Senator Pomerene, in which I inclosed an amendment to the six-year limitation law which would simply change the word "six" to "four."

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM J. DONOVAN,
The Assistant to the Attorney General.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The whole effect of the proposed law is to restore the statute of limitations as it was prior to 1921, making the statute as to all offenses, except those capital in character, three years. The bill provides that the proposed statute shall not apply to any proceedings now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I would like to know a little more about it. Is it the purpose of the bill to extend the limitation to enable some particular person to be punished for a crime?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; it is just the other way. It is to reduce the statute of limitations from six years to three years.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think it has been the uniform rule of the Senate not to pass bills without having been first referred to a committee. I take it that the Judiciary Committee could act on this bill by to-morrow. I do not like to object to the bill which the Senator from Montana calls up in this way, but I really think it ought to go to a committee and let the committee consider it. I think that on the statement of the Senator the committee might be polled, at any rate, on it, so there will be no trouble about the matter, and the bill might be reported even this afternoon. After a report from the committee, I shall have no objection at all to the bill.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill, with the accompanying letter, will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

TIME WHEN PARDONS EFFECTIVE

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now introduce another bill, which I simply ask may be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 1398) relating to pardons, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION FOR THE DISTRICT

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, last week I introduced Senate Joint Resolution No. 8, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for national representation for the people of the District of Columbia. That resolution was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has twice favorably acted upon a similar joint resolution. At the last session a question was raised as to the committee to which such a joint resolution should go, and we agreed that it should go to the Committee on the District of Columbia first, and then, when that committee had acted and submitted its report to the Senate, that the joint resolution as then reported should go to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, which is probably technically the committee to which the joint resolution should go. I think it would be proper to send the joint resolution to the Judiciary Committee, which technically, I think, has jurisdiction over matters of this kind. So I ask that the Committee on the District of Columbia may be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution and that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator expect after the Judiciary Committee shall have reported that the joint resolution shall then go back to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I would expect it then to go to the calendar, because technically I think the Judiciary Committee is the committee which has jurisdiction over matters of this kind.

Mr. KING. I think so. I do not believe that such a measure belongs to the District of Columbia Committee at all. I have no objection to the request of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on the District of Columbia will be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution No. 8 and the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RAILROAD MERGERS

Mr. MAYFIELD. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it lie on the table subject to call.

The resolution (S. Con. Res. 1) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas it was the purpose and intent of the Congress by enacting section 5 of the transportation act of 1920 to bring about adequate and efficient transportation service through the grouping of railroads into a limited number of strong systems which would include as members the short and weak railroads; and

Whereas large independent railroads have been and are being brought into unified systems under common ownership and/or control, either under lease or by the purchase of stock, without taking into consideration short and weak railroads that might be included in such systems: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in order that an adequate and efficient transportation service may be maintained in the United States and the weak and short-line railroads preserved, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that there should be no acquisition of control by stock ownership, merger, consolidation, or grouping by or of railroads into a unified system for ownership, control, and/or operation unless the application for such ownership and/or control and/or operation shall make reasonable provision in the plan for the possible incorporation of every short and weak line that may be in operation in the territory covered or to be covered by the proposed grouping or unification or unless by affirmative testimony it is shown to be impossible to include such line upon reasonable terms, or unless the abandonment or operation of such line or its omission from the proposed plan is approved by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

FLUCTUATIONS IN PRICE OF MAY WHEAT, 1927

Mr. MAYFIELD. I offer another resolution and ask that it lie on the table subject to call.

The resolution (S. Res. 40) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to investigate, first, the effect upon the producers of grain of the suspension by the Secretary of Agriculture of the requirement for the making of reports by members of grain-futures exchanges, and, second, the situation in respect of the 1927 May wheat future which existed on the grain-futures exchanges during the life of such future for the purpose of determining the cause of the wide fluctuations in the price of wheat during the early months of 1927, and especially after February 26, 1927, the date of the suspension of such requirement; and to make a full and complete report of such investigation, including (1) a statement of the reasons for, and a showing of the effect upon the producers of grain of, the suspension of such requirement; (2) a statement of the quantity of wheat purchased and the quantity of wheat sold on 1927 May future contracts, and the quantity of wheat actually delivered and the quantity of wheat actually received on such contracts; and (3) the names of the parties doing heavy trading in such future.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. WATSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 41), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventieth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during sessions or recesses of the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL PAGE

Mr. CURTIS submitted a resolution (S. Res. 42), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms hereby is authorized and directed to employ an additional page from the 5th day of December, 1927, to the 30th day of June, 1928, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $3.30 per day.

LOUISE K. PICKETT

Mr. DENEEN submitted a resolution (S. Res. 43), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Louise K. Pickett, widow of Charles J. Pickett, late an assistant in the office of Senator DENEEN, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

RECOGNITION OF SOVIET GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA

Mr. BORAH submitted a resolution (S. Res. 44), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States favors the recognition of the present Soviet Government of Russia.

CODIFICATION OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

Mr. BORAH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 45), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas war is the greatest existing menace to society, and has become so expensive and destructive that it not only causes the stupendous burdens of taxation now afflicting our people but threatens to engulf and destroy civilization; and

Whereas civilization has been marked in its upward trend out of barbarism into its present condition by the development of law and courts to supplant methods of violence and force; and

Whereas the genius of civilization has discovered but two methods of compelling the settlement of human disputes, namely, law and war, and therefore, in any plan for the compulsory settlement of international controversies, we must choose between war on the one hand and the process of law on the other; and

Whereas war between nations has always been and still is a lawful institution, so that any nation may, with or without cause, declare war against any other nation and be strictly within its legal rights; and

Whereas revolutionary war or wars of liberation are illegal and criminal, to wit, high treason, whereas, under existing international law, wars between nations to settle disputes are perfectly lawful; and

Whereas the overwhelming moral sentiment of civilized people everywhere is against the cruel and destructive institution of war; and

Whereas all alliances, leagues, or plans which rely upon war as the ultimate power for the enforcement of peace carry the seeds either of their own destruction or of military dominancy, to the utter subversion of liberty and justice; and

Whereas we must recognize the fact that resolutions or treaties outlawing certain methods of killing will not be effective so long as war itself remains lawful; and that in international relations we must have not rules and regulations of war but organic laws against war; and

Whereas in our Constitutional Convention of 1787 it was successfully contended by Madison, Hamilton, and Ellsworth that the use of force when applied to people collectively—that is, to states or nations—was unsound in principle and would be tantamount to a declaration of war; and

Whereas we have in our Federal Supreme Court a practical and effective model for a real international court, as it has specific jurisdiction to hear and decide controversies between our sovereign States; and

Whereas our Supreme Court has exercised this jurisdiction without resort to force for 137 years, during which time scores of controversies have been judicially and peaceably settled that might otherwise have led to war between the States, and thus furnishes a practical exemplar for the compulsory and pacific settlement of international controversies; and

Whereas an international arrangement of such judicial character would not shackle the independence or impair the sovereignty of any nation: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the view of the Senate of the United States that war between nations should be outlawed as an institution or means for the settlement of international controversies by making it a public crime under the law of nations and that every nation should be encouraged by solemn agreement or treaty to bind itself to indict and punish its own international war breeders or instigators and war profiteers under powers similar to those conferred upon our Congress under Article I, section 8, of our Federal Constitution, which clothes the Congress with the power "to define and punish offenses against the law of nations"; and be it

Resolved further, That a code of international law of peace based upon the outlawing of war and on the principle of equality and justice between all nations, amplified and expanded and adapted and brought down to date, should be created and adopted.

Second, that, with war outlawed, a judicial substitute for war should be created (or, if existing in part, adapted and adjusted) in the form or nature of an international court, modeled on our Federal Supreme Court in its jurisdiction over controversies between our sovereign States; such court shall possess affirmative jurisdiction to hear and decide all purely international controversies, as defined by the code, or arising under treaties, and its judgments shall not be enforced by war under any name or in any form whatever, but shall have the same power for their enforcement as our Federal Supreme Court, namely, the respect of all enlightened nations for judgments resting upon open and fair investigations and impartial decisions, the agreement of the nations to abide and be bound by such judgments and the compelling power of enlightened public opinion.

INVESTIGATION OF ESPIONAGE IN INDUSTRY

Mr. WHEELER submitted a resolution (S. Res. 46), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas various court proceedings and published investigations have tended to show that a large number of private detective agencies are obtaining large sums of money from business concerns and organizations by falsely representing movements among their employees by joining labor organizations and advocating revolutionary methods for the purpose of discrediting said labor organizations and by manufacturing scares concerning radical propaganda and alleged plans for the use of violence in industrial conflict; and

Whereas these agencies, and other interests connected with them, are detrimental to peaceful relationship between employers and employees, setting up a system of espionage in industry, thriving on the unrest and fear they create, and spreading false rumors and scares, and often bringing about strikes in order to maintain their alleged services: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be, and hereby is, empowered to conduct an inquiry into the extent of this system of industrial espionage in all its ramifications and to report to the Senate what legislation, in the committee's judgment, is desirable to correct such practices as they may find inimical to the public welfare.

CONCESSIONS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Mr. WHEELER submitted a resolution (S. Res. 47), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas American investments abroad, already amounting to many billions of dollars, are increasing rapidly, especially since the World War, and are alleged in a number of instances to be conditioned upon unjustifiable concessions from foreign governments which lack capital but desire to develop their resources; and

Whereas such concessions if unjust in their terms endanger legitimate investments abroad; and

Whereas controversies regarding the rights and duties of holders of such concessions constitute an increasingly important part of the foreign relations of this Government and produce tension which has frequently led to armed intervention and may lead to war: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to investigate the terms and conditions under which concessions have been procured in foreign countries by United States citizens and by corporations and other associations in which United States citizens are financially interested, and the nature and extent of such concessions, with particular reference to (1) the source and sanction of such concessions, (2) the record precedents, and traditions of the Government of the United States in its foreign relations since its establishment, in so far as the rights and duties incident to such concessions constitute the subject matter of international official correspondence, and (3) the principal aspects of public policy involved in the treatment, as property rights for purposes of diplomatic protection, of such concessions.

For the purposes of this resolution such committee or subcommittee is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places; to employ such experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants; to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of such committee or subcommittee shall not exceed $30,000 and shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of such committee or subcommittee. Such committee or subcommittee shall make a final report to the Senate as to its findings at the beginning of the second regular session of the Seventieth Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. HALE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 48), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania submitted a resolution (S. Res. 49), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

COURT-MARTIAL OF COL. WILLIAM MITCHELL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that Senate Resolution 28, requesting a transcript of the court-martial proceedings in the trial of Col. William Mitchell, Air Service, United States Army, which was submitted by me on the 9th instant and now lies on the table, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

NEW MEXICO'S MEMORIAL STONE IN WASHINGTON MONUMENT

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, on December 2 the memorial stone presented by the State of New Mexico and placed in the Washington Monument was dedicated. At that time certain exercises were had, including an address by the President of the United States, giving a great deal of interesting data concerning the State of New Mexico. I ask leave to have those proceedings printed as a Senate document with an illustration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ARGUMENT BY HON. MILTON EVERETT

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an argument by Hon. Milton Everett, of San Antonio, Tex., in which he explains the "auction plan" for the sale and marketing of food products.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Southwestern Resources, November, 1927]

THE "AUCTION PLAN" FOR SALE OF FOOD PRODUCTS

A great deal is said in Congress and legislatures about "marketing plans," to enable producers of food products to realize the value of their products and to enable consumers to obtain same at a fair price. At present "the spread" between the price the producer receives and what the consumer pays is enormous and outrageous. The low prices received by producers on the one hand has the effect of limiting production, and the high prices paid by consumers on the other, limit consumption to the disadvantage of everybody but the handful of middle men, commission men, storage men whose ranks are filled with robbers.

ALL FARMS PRODUCE FOOD PRODUCTS

A farmer to make a living farming must grow his own living. In doing so, he must of a necessity grow a surplus which he should be able to sell at a fair price. But the farmer or producer has no opportunity to sell at a profit, because his prices are made in the city markets by a few men only, who are interested in selling his products. The great mass of the consumers have nothing to say as to the prices they are willing to pay for food products. There is only one way the consumer could have a chance to say what he is willing to pay, and that is by creating an auction marketing system under the supervision of the Federal Government, whereby every citizen of the country would be put on notice of food products for sale and the prices paid at wholesale for same.

It is entirely probable that taking all of the perishable food products grown for market purposes and the surpluses of farm home supplies, that in the United States there is as much wasted as is consumed by others than the growers.

WHAT IS AN AUCTION PLAN?

The sale by auction of products that swiftly deteriorate in quality or value is world-wide. In this country all of our furs, wool, and other products are sold at auctions conducted by private persons. In recent years auctions of fruits and vegetables conducted by individuals for profit have been established in 12 of our large cities. These auctions, of course, are limited in their price making to the dealers in the cities where they are held, and the prices received therein for fruits or vegetables by no means represent the true prices that people are willing to pay for such products—do not represent a price based upon supply and demand.

The plan submitted herein for the distribution and sale of food products is not designed to cover the distribution and sale of corn, wheat, and oats. These food products are now distributed and sold under a system about as good as can be provided. If there are any changes relative to these three products, such changes will or should come in perfecting the present system of distribution and sale.

WHAT IS INCLUDED IN THE AUCTION PLAN

Especially and particularly included are all food products of a perishable nature, whether such nature requires icing of cars in transit or not. Such a plan should also include such products as are grown in all parts of the country in small quantities, as peas, beans, pumpkins, peanuts, rice, etc., and the nuts produced on our soil.

THE PRESSING NEED OF TO-DAY

For the present, or in the beginning of the inauguration of a system of distribution and sale of the products enumerated in the foregoing paragraph, it is sufficient to provide for the distribution and sale of perishable products, whether such require icing in transportation or not.

It is not necessary in this paper to consider the vast volume of traffic in perishable food products, or the tremendous total value of such products. Neither is it necessary to call attention to the hundreds of millions of dollars lost annually by our producers of perishable food products, nor to the great spread between the prices received by producers and those paid by consumers. These facts are known to all students of the marketing problem, or can easily be obtained from Government sources. The thing that the Congress needs to be convinced of is, that through the organization of a nation-wide plan for the sale of perishable food products by auction in the various trade centers, we can obviate the vast losses now sustained by both producers and consumers.

THE PRESENT CONDITIONS

Generally speaking, the preponderant proportion of our perishable food products has a price set on it by a few men in a few markets, totally and absolutely regardless of supply and demand.

The virtue of the "auction plan" is in making a price that is based on supply and demand. He who tries to provide a plan not based on supply and demand, for the purpose of carrying favor with this or that class, will in the long run, do all classes much harm.

Not until a plan is provided to get a consensus of opinion of the whole country, or a large part of the whole country, as to the demand for any certain product and what people are willing to pay for it, will there be any fairness in the establishment of prices for all parties concerned—producers and consumers—and one class has as much right to a fair price as the other class, and no more.

OUR WIDESPREAD TRAFFIC

No other nation has ever in history bought its food products from such far-distant markets within its own confines as this Nation. With us, wherever products come from, whether from producing points 50 miles distant or 3,000 miles distant, we are under obligations to see fair play and fair prices. We are not dealing with foreigners, as an European nation would be, with no obligation to see that this or that long-distance shipper got a fair price or not. Neither can we penalize one section for losses or forced prices in another.

It has often been stated that each producing section of a like product, in the distribution of such product, should keep in touch with the distribution of such product from all other sections, so that some markets would not be gorged and others slighted. Under present selling conditions this is absolutely impossible under any circumstances.

Primarily this is true for two reasons: First, organization work to acquire accurate marketing information over a large area of production as we have in this country requires the expenditure of large sums of money and also necessitates the employment of expert men at large salaries; second (and chiefly), the areas of production of perishable products is constantly changing for many reasons.

All farmers produce for their own use perishable food products, and all have a surplus at one time or another which should come on the market; in hundreds of small sections of the country the farmers once selling their surplus products at a good price will the following season plant largely of such products and without organization to sell them, will get low prices or lose money, and the next season cut down their acreage again to supply their own demands.

In Texas, which State is a large producer of perishable food products, it frequently happens that a single county will go in for, say, sweet potatoes, and in a season or two be marketing a thousand carloads; then comes a setback in prices, and the production will be less than a hundred cars.

This has happened in Texas scores of times as regards sweet potatoes, white potatoes, watermelons, cantaloupes, tomatoes, cucumbers, etc. Then again the weather conditions cause a wide divergence in production. For example, in a recent year in two south Texas counties which previously shipped during two months more than 500 carloads of cucumbers, beans, tomatoes, and peppers, this year on account of a drought did not ship 50 cars.

There is absolutely no chance under the conditions that exist in the widespread territory of our country for the production of perishable food products for such products to be sold at fair prices to producers and consumers under present marketing arrangements, and no way to arrive at fair prices except under the auction plan supervised by the Federal Government.

The only guide possible for the widely spread producers in the distribution of their products is the price offered, when such price is established through a widespread offering of the articles for sale, and said sale is made and price established by or through some Government agency, so that it is known to be a real price and not a dealer's fictitious price made to induce shipments, create an oversupply, and beat down the prices in the interest of cold-storage houses.

HOW PRICES ARE NOW MADE

Generally speaking again, our perishable food products are consigned to various brokers and commission merchants in a comparatively few cities. These brokers and commission merchants establish prices based upon the demand during a brief period each day—a consensus of the offerings of a few buyers or consumers.

For example, a certain number of cars of a perishable product arrives in the city of St. Louis. How many people who are in the market as consumers of such product have a voice in saying what the price should be? And even if every citizen and consumer in the city had a voice in setting a price according to the demand, the vast population within, say, 50 miles of the city who are also consumers have no voice at all, and there are as many people within a radius of 50 miles possibly as are in the city itself.

A handful of men, and generally men who have a selfish interest to serve in fixing low prices, make all the prices for our perishable food products. Of course, there are a few exceptions in highly organized products, but their percentage of the vast whole is so small that it does not count.

The thing to do is to fix prices based on supply and demand where all the population, all the buyers, dealers, and consumers have a say whether they live in the cities of large population, to which the perishable products are directly shipped, or in 10,000 small cities and towns of the country whose inhabitants are also interested in the purchase and the consumption of perishable food products. This condition can only be brought about by the sale of our food products by auction, said auction to take place at a certain time each day at an established place of which all men will have previous knowledge and each can compete with all others in the purchase of carloads of food products.

HOW THE AUCTION PLAN WILL WORK

Let us say that the Federal Government establishes a marketing organization along the lines of the Federal reserve system. In this organization it would be provided that the system will make a charge for each car of products auctioned, such charge to cover the costs of operation and add something to a fund for the future establishment of Government market places in the larger cities. This marketing system would establish certain markets for the receipt and sale of food products to be sold each day at auction. At a certain hour each day an auction would be held, and there would be sold all carloads of food products on hand or "to arrive" prior to the next sale. All sales to be subject to certain standards of quality and condition and reclamations would be made when such standards were not complied with.

It may be here stated that in the course of a short time all producers would have a knowledge of the Government standards and would be eager to comply therewith. Furthermore, the producers, having confidence in getting just prices and real prices for their products and in not being robbed as they now are in thousands of cases, would vie with each other in establishing in the markets a reputation for their goods and seek to have their especial products find favor with the buyers who would know of their excellent pack or product.

In this public way—auction plan—of establishing prices at a certain hour each day in all the markets, it would be found that dealers in many small cities and towns would have buyers in the market places who would compete when there was an overplus of products in the market, and the cold-storage houses would be compelled to pay an honest price for their purchases. Eventually we would come to the condition when our perishable-food products would be sold at a uniform price throughout the country plus the transportation charges.

The price setting would be open and above board, the price would be a real and dependable price, not a fictitious price set by a few thieving brokers to rob the producers of the value of their toil. Another thing, there are thieving and dishonest producers and shippers, as well as those at the other end of the line. Such would be put out of business or compelled to mend their ways, for the quality and value of their pack would soon be generally known to all buyers. For example: The Government auctioneer would say, "I am offering a car of tomatoes, about 25,000 pounds, loaded in M. K. T. car 41144, due to arrive at 4 p. m. in this market. This car was packed and shipped by John Smith, of Smithville, Tex. What am I offered?" No shipper could possibly defraud the public under such a condition of sale.

The fact that the shipments of a certain man or brand would bring an extra price in the market at public auction would force, or at least encourage, all shippers to compete with the best or go back to producing something else that was not judged, priced, and sold under the glare of national publicity.

BENEFITS IN TRANSPORTATION

Such a plan for national auctions at certain hours each day in all markets would enable the railroad companies to so adjust their schedules of trains bearing perishable food products to arrive at the various markets at a nearly uniform hour each day, just as milk trains now arrive at the markets at certain hours.

It would also give our railway managements an opportunity to consolidate their shipments into solid trains, which would accelerate the time in transportation and provide more economical handling. It would not be long after the auction plan was inaugurated that facilities would be provided for showing in all the markets each day all of the carload perishable food products moving throughout the country.

A consolidation of the shipments of such products into solid trains would enable the railroad companies to put into operation cold-storage trains, with all cars kept at a uniform temperature by a refrigerating machine in one car, thus saving time, cost in reicing, and deterioration from changes in temperature, and insure all products arriving at markets in a uniform condition.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the Dark Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association indorsing the McNary-Haugen bill, together with an accompanying article by "The Rambler."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution and article are as follows:

Whereas the plight of the farmers of America is even worse now than it was 12 months ago at the time that President Coolidge vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill and offered neither substitute nor even consolation to the agricultural classes; and

Whereas an American standard of living has been guaranteed to merchants and manufacturers through the tariff bill; to bankers through the Federal reserve act; to railroads through the Interstate Commerce Commission; to laborers through the Adamson bill and the immigration law, while farmers, by being compelled to buy on a protected market and sell on a world-wide market, are forced to a standard of living on a level with European peasants and Mexican peons; and

Whereas the law of supply and demand does not apply when the supply is in the hands of unorganized farmers and the demand is in the hands of organized dealers; and

Whereas cooperative marketing of farm products on a large scale has failed because it is financially impossible for members to carry all the burden of the surplus for the benefit of nonmembers: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the directors of the Dark Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association, in regular monthly meeting assembled this the 15th day of November, 1927, and speaking for the 70,000 farm families that we represent in Kentucky, Tennessee, and Indiana, do reaffirm our faith in the McNary-Haugen bill and especially the equalization fee feature which requires all growers of a commodity to share alike in carrying the burden of the surplus, just as all national banks are required to be members of the Federal reserve system; and be it further

Resolved, That we earnestly request our Senators and Congressmen to show their sympathy for their farmer constituents by using their influence and votes to secure the immediate passage of the McNary-Haugen bill in the next session of Congress.

MCNARY-HAUGEN BILL

By the Rambler

Relief for the farmer through the effort of the Congress will not down. In past years the Republican Party has existed as the protector of manufacturing and moneyed interests. Farmers of the northern and eastern States have remained Republican as a matter of "principle," but just what that principle is they are not well advised. Possibly it is the remains of the Civil War and the question of slavery.

However, the great West has been settled. The settlers there in the main left bygones behind, and while remaining Republican in principle, yet kept out a weather eye. Following the sentiment of those they represented western Congressmen have been more or less an uncertain quantity in the Republican ranks. The West is new, and the West has sprung a number of new ideas in government. Some of them were good and some not so good. But at least it may be said the West is original.

The western farmers have demanded relief. Such a thing as Government aid was unheard of. Then the people discovered for the first time that the Government had for a century, except when Democrats were in power, been giving aid to the manufacturing and moneyed interests, through the manipulation of the Republican Party, by the tariff.

The Democratic Party has sought to give relief by the lowering of the tariff. But the western farmer has remained loyal to the "time-honored" high tariff of his Republican Party, but would ingeniously circumvent its effects on his business with the McNary-Haugen bill.

Thus the agricultural Republican saves his face on his prior advocacy by still contending for high tariff, but at the same time insisting on relief from its effects upon agricultural products by the McNary-Haugen bill.

The McNary-Haugen bill is not sound in principle under normal conditions. But conditions are not normal, and we had as well fight the devil with fire.

Just so long as Republican high tariff remains in force, just that long I am in favor of offsetting its effects on agricultural products with the McNary-Haugen bill.

ASSOCIATION RESOLUTION

The directors of the Dark Tobacco Growers' Cooperative Association at their last meeting in Hopkinsville adopted a resolution requesting the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill.

The resolution criticizes President Coolidge for vetoing the McNary-Haugen bill and not offering any other relief or even consolation. The resolution mentions the following who are protected to be merchants and manufacturers through the tariff bill; bankers through the Federal reserve act; railroads through the Interstate Commerce Commission; laborers through the Adamson bill and immigration law, while farmers, by being compelled to buy on a protected market and sell on a world-wide market, are forced to a standard of living on a level with European peasants and Mexican peons.

The resolution further points out that the law of supply and demand does not apply when the supply is in the hands of farmers and the demand is in the hands of organized dealers.

In requesting the passage of the McNary-Haugen bill the directors of the association would have the equalization fee remain in it. This equalization fee means that every grower of a given commodity pay his fee and thus all share equally in carrying the burden of the surplus.

The hue and cry was raised against the McNary-Haugen bill that it was putting the Government in business. But the advocates of the bill answered that the Government had been in business as a protectionist for a century at the behest of the Republican Party and that it comes now with the poor grace to cry "wolf."

THAT BRANN SUIT

It has been intimated for some weeks that the buyers would lay off of medium and low grade tobacco this year unless it could be bought

"right." It has been suggested that this was to force the association on the market with what it has on hand. But the association didn't get panicky and give what it had away. It was negotiating a big sale at a reasonable price. This didn't suit somebody—somebody nobody knows who. But about the time for the market to open somebody—certainly not the deluded farmers in west Tennessee in whose name the suit in Judge Dawson's court was brought—filed a petition in the same suit for a receiver.

Well, there's no need to comment further. Space is valuable.

It may be slow work, but some day the farming classes will come to their own. Others with more brains and less honor have manipulated the thing for a long time. The farmer is a lot smarter than he used to be; that is, better informed.

Some of these days if the farmer doesn't get action in Congress and in State legislatures he's going to know the reason why.

But the good year of 1927 is the wrong time to pull this receiver stuff. There's too little tobacco in the world to-day for the big ones to force the price down. Government statistics show it and no one knows it better than the big buying interests. The association tobacco might all be dumped on the market through a receiver and still not fill up the hole.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 1) thereon.

Mr. President, I wish to say that this bill was considered in the House of Representatives immediately after the 5th of December, and also by the committee of the Senate. It has been thoroughly examined in the meetings of the Committee, and the measure has been approved. The bill was passed last week by the House of Representatives. It is very similar to the deficiency bill which failed in the filibuster at the end of the last session of Congress; the items are almost precisely identical, but the amount of the bill, of course, is larger because of some very important deficiencies which have been added to it, such as the shortage in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and so forth. I am reporting the bill at this time, and at some later time in the day, perhaps, I shall, with the consent of the Senate, bring it up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I inquire what became of the report submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]? I understand he simply reported the deficiency bill from the Appropriations Committee. I did not hear what action was taken.

Mr. WARREN. I merely reported the bill from the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was ordered to the calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from Wyoming does not intend to call the bill up for consideration to-day?

Mr. WARREN. It was my intention to do so, should the Senate desire to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I had hoped that the Senator would wait until to-morrow to ask for the consideration of the bill, so that we might have an opportunity to read it. Some of us who are not on the committee would like to know what its provisions are.

Mr. WARREN. That will be perfectly agreeable.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, there was so much confusion in the Chamber when the Senator from Wyoming offered the first deficiency bill that I should like to have the matter cleared up. Did the Senator report the bill from the committee or did he merely introduce the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], I reported the bill from the committee with amendments which have received the approval of the committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator how the committee has had an opportunity of passing upon the bill if the committee is not as yet organized?

Mr. WARREN. The committee was organized so far as its old members are concerned, who naturally could act, and the membership was all there, barring the two vacancies on the Republican side.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Were there any minority members present?

Mr. WARREN. All were present, I think, who were in the city and able to attend, and the bill was unanimously authorized to be reported.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, does the Senator ask to have the resolution considered immediately?

Mr. WATSON. Yes. My thought was that the list of committees should be reported this morning and that the committees should be appointed.

Mr. DILL. I have not seen the list of committees, and I do not believe we ought to do that.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has handed me a list of Democratic members of committees.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will say that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who was obliged to leave the city, left with me the list of committees agreed on by the Democratic steering committee. I understood that it was agreed that we would not proceed any further with the organization to-day than the appointment of committees, but that we would agree to do that much.

Mr. WATSON. That is right. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] can state the agreement with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CURTIS. The understanding was that we would act upon the election of the committees when they were reported and then defer further action on the election of officers until some later day, which I understand will be about Wednesday or Thursday.

Mr. WATSON. Thursday.

Mr. DILL. Why can not the list be printed in the RECORD and taken up to-morrow? We have waited all this time, and another day's delay will not be material.

Mr. WATSON. I have no objection to that, of course, but I did not think there would be any objection raised.

Mr. DILL. I do not see any reason for suspending a rule on a matter of this kind providing for the appointment of committees, particularly inasmuch as some of us do not know what the list is.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Indiana a question?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. There is nothing in the suggestion that there are certain Senators on the other side who must see what committee assignments they receive before they vote on the organization of the Senate, is there?

Mr. WATSON. I will say to my suspicious friend from Mississippi——

Mr. HARRISON. I am not suspicious; I am merely asking a question.

Mr. WATSON. I will say that there is nothing of that kind involved, because every Member on this side is fully aware of the committee to which he has been assigned, and my understanding is that they are as nearly satisfied as it falls to the average man to be satisfied in a complex situation of this character.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has performed a great service.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that the list as proposed may be printed in the RECORD, so that the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] may read it before he gives his consent.

Mr. WATSON. I make the request that the list may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The list will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the Senator from Indiana if he contemplates submitting the committee list for both sides?

Mr. WATSON. Certainly; that is the custom. They both are submitted by one individual. It does not matter about that, however.

Mr. SMITH. I understood from what the Senator said that he had been handed a list of the committee assignments for this side.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I have been.

Mr. SMITH. And I thought, perhaps, if the others were going to be read that we should have both read at this time.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that the lists are not to be read, but simply printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. WATSON. Of course, the list for both sides will be printed. That has been the custom, I will say to my friend.

AMENDMENT TO RULES—RELEVANCY OF DEBATE

Mr. JONES of Washington. I send to the clerk's desk a notice, which I ask may be read according to the rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Notice is hereby given that on the next legislative day he will propose an amendment to Rule XIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to debate, as follows:

Amend said rule by adding thereto a paragraph to be numbered 7, to read as follows:

"7. Debate shall be confined to the subject matter under consideration, and all points of order relating thereto shall be decided by the Chair without debate. Upon an appeal from a decision of the Chair upon any such point of order no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes."

AMENDMENT TO RULES—RELEVANCY OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. JONES of Washington. I send to the desk another notice in accordance with the rules and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Notice is hereby given that on the next legislative day he will propose an amendment to Rule XVIII of the Senate Standing Rules, relating to amendments, by adding thereto a new paragraph to read as follows:

"2. No amendment shall be in order to a bill, resolution, or other amendment unless it be germane to the subject matter under consideration. If a point of order is made against a proposed amendment, it shall be decided without debate, unless the Chair desires to hear discussion. Upon any appeal from the decision of the Chair relating to such point of order no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 10 minutes."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator does not contemplate asking the Senate to adopt those amendments to the rules without reference to the committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I expect, in accordance with the rule and the notice, to offer the amendments on the next legislative day; and if then there is a request that they be referred to the Committee on Rules, I shall make no objection to it, although under the rules they could be taken up at once.

Mr. HARRISON. When will the Senator offer his resolution to change the rules?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say that I gave the same notice and offered the same amendments in the last Congress.

Mr. HARRISON. I know.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is merely a notice of my intention to offer these amendments.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has offered a similar resolution in several Congresses; but at this Congress he has just offered his resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; I just gave a notice.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator does not contemplate appearing before the Rules Committee and presenting his arguments in the matter and letting it take the regular parliamentary course before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it that when I offer the amendments pursuant to these notices there will be a request that they go to the Committee on Rules, and I shall be perfectly satisfied to have that done; and at the proper time I shall be glad to appear before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the chairman of the Committee on Rules ask that they go to the Rules Committee?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think the Senator misunderstands the rule. The rule requires that this notice shall be given before an amendment is proposed. It is my intention, when the amendment is offered, to ask that it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought the Senator from Washington was trying to bring the matter up on the floor of the Senate and was giving the notice in order to avoid the two-thirds proposition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President; I am giving the notice pursuant to the rules themselves, which require a notice to be given one day before any amendment to the rules is presented. This is the notice which the rules require.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he intends to oppose the course contemplated by the leader on our side?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No, Mr. President. If a request is made that the matter go to the committee, I shall make no objection, as I said a moment ago.

INVESTIGATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next order of business is resolutions coming over from a preceding day. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate Resolution 10, submitted by Mr. REED of Missouri.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senior Senator from Missuori [Mr. REED] is detained in the Supreme Court of the United States. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this resolution may go over without prejudice until the Senator from Missouri is able to be in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DEBTS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Chicago Daily News of Friday, December 2, 1927, on the settlement of international debts; and I ask to have printed in connection with it an editorial on the same subject appearing in the same issue of the paper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

BOND GERMANY FOR $6,000,000,000, END WAR DEBTS, HIS PLAN—SALMON O. LEVINSON, CHICAGO ATTORNEY, PROPOSES SWEEPING ADJUSTMENT OF INTERNATIONAL FISCAL PROBLEM AND 62-YEAR PEACE

An attempt to suggest a comprehensive plan of readjustment for the vexing questions of German reparations, allied and interallied government debts, European appeasement and peace, was made to-day in the form of a statement by Salmon O. Levinson, well-known Chicago attorney and student of international peace problems.

Coupled with a comprehensive financial proposal which aims at healing the financial sores left as a result of the World War, and as a guaranty to the undisturbed execution of the proposal, is a plan to eliminate war and threats of war over a period of 62 years.

Mr. Levinson enjoys a world reputation as a legal physician who is able to restore anemic corporations and even private properties to vigorous health. The same principles might, he thinks, be valid in curing the financial ills of States. He has discussed the financial program with leading bankers and other authorities in several countries and they have pronounced it to be practical. So far as is known, Mr. Levinson's proposal is the first attempt to couple financial cure and mutually covenanted world peace, without which the necessary period of financial convalescence would be at the mercy of deliberate or light-minded wreckers.

It is to be expected that Mr. Levinson's scheme will be received with deep interest and given exhaustive consideration not only in the United States but throughout Europe.

Following is Mr. Levinson's statement in full:

"Many excellent suggestions of readjustment have been made, but so far as the writer knows they deal, respectively, with only one phase of the European situation. Sometimes it is with the settlement and disposition of German reparations; sometimes with the resettlement or cancellation of the allied debts owing the United States; sometimes the emphasis is put upon the necessity for revising the treaty of Versailles; and, of course, many plans deal purely with the question of world peace. The central idea of this proposal is to consider all of these acute questions and problems together; in other words, to handle them as is done, generally speaking, in the case of a reorganization of a distressed railroad or industrial corporation. In reorganizations all interests are considered in one complete scheme of rehabilitation and adjustment. The analogy may not be complete, but it is sufficiently so for the purpose.

"When every nation sees what all other nations are to receive, how it is to be treated and what the general result will be, criticism and distrust are disarmed and general confidence and harmony are attainable. This is the 'open diplomacy' of reorganizations.

"Settlements have been made by our Government with practically all our European debtors except France, which has not ratified the agreement. This article does not discuss the wisdom of these settlements, but takes them as facts in the economic problem. However, it may not be amiss to say that the writer has never been in sympathy with the view that the Great War was originally our war, that we were military partners with the Allies throughout, and that our loans to them during and after the war were mere contributions to a common cause. Nor has the writer ever considered the effort to fix the 'capacity to pay' of a nation over a period of 62 years anything short of a wild guess. But the settlements are closed incidents and we start from them as a base. Suffice it to say that the United States has been liberal in these adjustments, although we have apparently received little or no credit for generosity or even leniency.

"In 1917 we entered the World War not only in good faith but enthusiastically 'to end war'—that is, to establish durable world peace. While we materially aided in victory for the allied cause, the vision of world peace is still distant.

"The purposes of the proposed plan may be summarized as follows:

"1. To get a reasonable compromise in cash for the United States of the 'present worth' of the debt settlements, which will furnish immediate and substantial relief to our taxpayers, who are bearing the whole brunt of the American cost of the war.

"2. To have the German reparations fixed at a definite amount and paid, the amount to be financed by a world consortium of bankers in cooperation with the governments involved, so that Germany may pay adequate reparations and also be able to work out the economic salvation of her people.

"3. To use the proceeds of the financed fixation of German reparations to pay all the sums needed under the proposed plan to bring about the settlement and discharge of all the allied and interallied government debts; for stabilization currencies for equitable adjustments with those European nations having specific claims to German reparations and for the necessary cost of the loan.

"4. The nations involved to sign a treaty of peace, open to all other civilized nations, wherein there will be substituted for the 62 years of debt installment payments by our European debtors, a 62-year experiment in world peace by the renunciation for that period of the use of war for the settlement of international disputes. In other words, to get also from this adjustment the ideal for which we fought in the war—the ending of war by international agreement.

"5. To make such modifications of the treaty of Versailles as are compatible with the terms and purposes of this proposal.

"The position taken by President Wilson that the question of allied debts should not be considered in conjunction with German reparations was sound. This view was approved and adopted by the Harding and Coolidge administrations. At the time this subject was originally broached it meant two things—first, the making of all payments by the Allies to the United States conditional on the payment to them of reparations by Germany; and, secondly, and more important, the United States was asked to take, in payment of the allied debts, German 'C' bonds, third-mortgage bonds, all subordinated to the bonds to be given the Allies. This would have put the United States in the position of military collector of reparations from Germany, in order to protect our third-mortgage bonds, as we would have released the Allies. The proposal herein contained is free from these objections. In fact, the plan provides a complete settlement, wherein the United States would be paid a fair present-worth compromise of the debt settlements in cash, the reparations would be adjusted and discharged, and the whole network of allied and interallied indebtedness would be disentangled and ended.

"The principal of the allied debts owing the United States was about $10,000,000,000, which, with accumulated interest, amounted to about $12,000,000,000. By the lenient settlements made by your Debt Funding Commission and approved by Congress (including the unratified French settlement) between $6,000,000,000 and $7,000,000,000 were in effect canceled through the omission and reduction of interest over the period of 62 years. The present worth of the debts owing the United States under the settlements (that is, the present cash value an expert accountant would give them, assuming that all the installments will be paid for the 62 years) is, roughly, $5,000,000,000. The cancellation of $6,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 plus the present worth of about $5,000,000,000 epitomizes the present allied debt situation so far as the United States is concerned. Of course, it requires considerable optimism to believe that all these countries will continue to pay their installments to us over the 62-year period.

"Even if the nations actually and punctually pay all their installments, the present generation of our taxpayers will get an almost negligible benefit. For, under these settlements the installment payments and most of the interest rates do not begin to be substantial until about 25 years from now. But it has been computed that at the present rate of progress our own $18,000,000,000 of Government debt will all be paid off within 25 years. Therefore the next generation that will get the benefit of the increased installment payments and interest rates will be a generation that nationally is practically free from debt. In other words, American taxpayers will get relief when they do not need relief. There is no good reason why the present generation should stand all the burden of our participation in the war. The proposed plan offers immediate and partial relief to present taxpayers and even so will accelerate by many years the day when our national war debt will be entirely paid off.

"In addition to the debt settlements, the United States has a claim of $250,000,000 arising out of our contribution to the army of occupation immediately following the armistice. We were to have a first lien for these advances, but for some reason or other we have not been paid, so far as the writer knows, anything either on principal or interest. As the other governments contributing to the army of occupation have been paid, it seems reasonable to propose that this expense of the United States, which was incurred for the benefit of the Allies and after the war, should be repaid.

"While, as above stated, the United States happily kept itself free from participation in or collection of German reparations, nevertheless in any 'reorganization' of Europe we must all agree that the center and crux are the German reparations. This is obviously true so far as any financial adjustment is concerned, and it is almost equally true with regard to European appeasement and peace. Accordingly, this plan proposes that the German reparations be fixed at the amount of $6,000,000,000 and that this amount be financed and paid in cash in a lump sum. This would supersede the present method of installment payments by Germany without knowledge or fixation of the total amount of reparations, and, as the annual payments under the Dawes plan are rapidly increasing, would obviate the danger of default and consequent serious complications. The effect of the cash settlement of the reparations would be to terminate the quasi receivership now afflicting Germany, and she would owe $6,000,000,000 under a well-secured loan, handled by a world banking consortium working in concert with the governments involved, on a sound and economic basis. As the loan would be a first mortgage on all the national assets and revenues of Germany, the interest rate should be, say, 5½ per cent per annum, with a sinking fund of an additional 1½ per cent per annum, or at a total annual cost of 7 per cent. This sinking fund of 1½ per cent, kept alive, would, as banking tables show, automatically pay off the entire principal of the loan in about 28 years.

"Such a loan would, as stated, have to be undertaken by an international banking group in cooperation with the governments involved. Our American bankers would doubtless be willing to underwrite and distribute a proper and proportionate share of the loan. The financial task would, of course, be colossal but far from impossible, with the momentum of public approval and consequent investment. It would indeed be a reassuring revelation if a loan of such magnitude, easily possible in war time when loans are necessarily precarious, could be negotiated in peace time for constructive purposes, when the safety of the loan is beyond question.

"Under the proposed plan the United States Government would receive in cash out of the proceeds of the new German loan $4,250,000,000. The $4,000,000,000 represents the 'present worth' cash compromise of the allied debt settlements. Otherwise stated, we would accept in compromise of the $5,000,000,000, which is the estimated 'present worth' of the debt settlements, 80 per cent thereof in immediate cash—a discount of 20 per cent. The $250,000,000 would be repayment of the principal of our contribution to the army of occupation. The $4,000,000,000 of cash could be used immediately in reduction of our own national debt and by the time of its consummation would probably mean a reduction of 25 per cent thereof. This large reduction in our national debt, quite independently of surpluses, would justify an immediate and substantial reduction in our Federal taxes. The $250,000,000 could be utilized, if so desired, by Congress, in whole or in part, as an appropriation for farm relief under satisfactory legislation.

"The plan also provides that there be a general cleaning up and discharge of the allied and interallied war debt all around. The United States is the only clear creditor, we having paid our way as we went along in the war. Great Britain is a creditor as to her other allies, but is a debtor to the United States in the sum of about $4,500,000,000. As a part of this proposal Great Britain would be called upon to cancel the debts owing to her by her allies—about $7,000,000,000; in turn she would receive a release from the United States as to her own debt. This, in effect, Great Britain has heretofore offered to do.

"Under this proposal there would be no need of continued friction or even conference about the French debt settlement. All the debts would be settled and discharged, including France's. Disregarding the effect of the settlements, France owes us over $4,000,000,000, including $400,000,000 for materials purchased after the war, and she owes nearly $3,000,000,000 to Great Britain; Italy owes us over $2,000,000,000 and a similar amount to Great Britain; Belgium owes us $420,000,000; Rumania, $45,000,000; Czechoslovakia, $115,000,000; Latvia, $6,000,000; Finland, $9,000,000; Poland, $178,000,000; Greece about $20,000,000; Esthonia, $14,000,000; and Lithuania, $6,000,000. And these latter countries also owe similarly large amounts to Great Britain. Thus most of the countries in Europe would have a direct financial stake in this general adjustment.

"For obvious reasons the writer has left out all consideration of the Russian debts. Personally, he would like to see them incorporated if it can be done without friction and therefore without endangering the proposal.

"The $200,000,000 borrowed by Germany to inaugurate the Dawes plan should be paid off out of the $6,000,000,000, so that the new loan would be an absolute first mortgage on all of Germany's national property. This would leave a balance of $5,800,000,000. The payment to the United States of $4,250,000,000 would leave a balance of $1,550,000,000. This balance would be available, as far as needed, for stabilization of currencies for equitable adjustments with those European nations having specific claims to German reparations and for the necessary cost of the loan. The unused portion, if any, of the $1,550,000,000 to be applied in reduction of the loan.

"As a part of the general appeasement, the European nations involved, as well as the United States, are to sign a general treaty, in which the use of war for the settlement of international disputes would be renounced for the next 62 years as an international experiment in world peace. The other civilized nations to be invited to join in this treaty, so that for the period of 62 years the institution of war as a method of settling the disputes of the nations may be outlawed and a judicial system set up in place of the destructive war system which has brought Europe to its present plight. Thus the European nations, instead of enduring 62 years of 'financial servitude,' would enjoy 62 years of voluntary peace, during which time their economic rehabilitation could be effected and made secure. If toward the end of the 62-year period the experiment in peace proves distasteful to the civilized nations and they hunger for military power, they could revive the war system by refusing to extend the term of the peace treaty beyond the 62 years.

"Such a treaty would make possible and desirable the provision of this plan which calls for a world conference on the reduction of armaments, both on land and sea, to signalize the general renunciation of war. For so long as the institution of war is retained by the nations as their lawful and paramount court of last resort, all hopes of disarmament are doomed to disappointment. But with war renounced for 62 years all obstacles to drastic disarmament would be removed, and the economic convalescence and rehabilitation of the countries of Europe would ensue by leaps and bounds.

"It is obvious that in order to carry out the foregoing plan changes would have to be made in the treaty of Versailles in accordance therewith, and such other changes as may be agreed upon, in harmony with the spirit and compact of the nations to live together in amity and peace and to devote themselves to the progress and welfare of their respective peoples.

"This proposal is not submitted as a finality nor as having the magic of an Aladdin's lamp. The writer will be both surprised and disappointed if many important and beneficent suggestions and amendments are not forthcoming; and he will be abundantly repaid if this proposal stimulates or aids in any way a better plan of European adjustment and peace."

LEVINSON WELL KNOWN AS "DOCTOR OF CORPORATION ILLS"

As the result of his unique professional achievements, Salmon O. Levinson, Chicago attorney, who proposes world-wide financial reorganization as a necessary preliminary to world peace, has won a reputation as a legal physician who can cure the ills of ailing corporations and point out the way to health to holders of unsound properties.

Admitted to the Illinois bar in 1891, Mr. Levinson's legal work for the last 20 years has been principally concerned with untangling the complexities and constructively analyzing the details of great companies. Included in this work was the refinancing of two railroads, a task looked upon by many capable men as among the greatest that can confront a financial expert.

In 1915 the late Stephen S. Gregory, then president of the American Bar Association, said of Mr. Levinson that he had "developed signal and conspicuous abilities in all large matters of corporate reorganization and financing." Mr. Gregory said further: "It is probably not too much to say that in this important and lucrative field he stands in the front rank of the American bar."

In 1908 Mr. Levinson won high commendation from lawyers and financiers throughout the country by his remarkable success in reorganizing the Westinghouse companies and the personal business affairs of the late George Westinghouse, the inventor. When the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway began to totter in 1915 Mr. Levinson was called in, and he put the finances of the road back on a sound basis. He repeated the performance in 1921 with the Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad.

According to his associates in the law firm of Levinson, Becker, Frank, Glenn & Barnes, in the National Bank of the Republic Building, Mr. Levinson himself doesn't know how he happened to enter the particular branch of legal work that has brought him fame for his successful dealings with warring groups of stockholders and bondholders, each claiming special privileges when reorganization of great properties is begun. But, turning again to Mr. Gregory's estimate of Mr. Levinson, it becomes apparent that, once engaged in this particular work, the Chicago attorney displayed the proper qualifications for it. Mr. Gregory said:

"Mr. Levinson is a man of acute and vigorous mind and great mental and moral force. From the character of his practice and work it has not been his custom in later years to appear much in court, but he has a strong and comprehensive grasp of the general principles of the law and his keen and powerful mind enables him to make most effective and practical application of these principles to the complicated and tangled affairs of modern commerce and finance.

"He is a man of tireless industry, for without that the success which he has achieved would have been impossible. No effort is too great for him in any cause which he has undertaken; nor does he omit the most painstaking examination of all the facts necessary to correct judgment. Unlike many men who are resolute and self-dependent, he does not underestimate the value of full conference with others and of giving the most careful attention to the views of those who differ with him, whether they are his associates or those opposed to him in interest. He is a liberal and generous-minded man, loyal to his friends and not vindictive toward his enemies. He fights hard and resolutely, but conflict leaves no malice in his heart."

That was written 12 years ago. Since that time Mr. Levinson has set aside hours and days from his business to devote to the cause of the "outlawry of war," a proposal of which he was the author and which has made a deep impression on the minds of leading men in the United States and Europe. Among its American champions may be mentioned the late Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, and Senator BORAH, of Idaho.

Last spring Mr. Levinson traveled through Europe, sounding out the sentiment of leaders there, telling skeptics that war could be outlawed in the same way that piracy and duels have been outlawed. And while he was discussing this topic with 75 molders of public opinion in London, Paris, Berlin, and Geneva his natural interest in financial matters led him into a thorough investigation of commercial and monetary conditions wherever he went. He returned home from his European trip with a vast amount of first-hand knowledge of the problems of the nations he visited and of the state of public opinion in each.

Only recently the outlawry proposal, already placed before the United States Senate in a resolution by Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, was summarized in a volume written by Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of the Christian Century, dedicated to Mr. Levinson, and with a foreword and afterword by Prof. John Dewey, the philosopher, of Columbia University.

But Mr. Levinson wishes to induce the nations to make a thorough job of world peace. He is confident that treaties outlawing war, together with an international court, would keep the nations out of hostilities. However, he also feels that a reorganization of international debts would be an exceedingly helpful guaranty of world peace and prosperity.

Mr. Levinson was born in Noblesville, Ind., December 29, 1865. From 1883 to 1886 he attended the old University of Chicago and finished his academic education at Yale University. He pursued his legal studies in the law department of Lake Forest University, was graduated in the class of 1891, and was admitted to the Illinois bar in that year.

PRINCIPAL AIMS OF THE LEVINSON PROPOSAL

As analyzed by persons who have studied the Levinson plan, it would be designed to—

1. Settle the question of international debts by removing debt and reparation payments from the political into the ordinary financial field.

2. Discharge the United States war debts quickly and in cash, thus lightening the taxpayer's burden and providing, if deemed desirable, funds for a large revolving credit to be placed at the disposal of farmers for financing the marketing of crops.

3. Pacify Germany by fixing the total period of reparation payments, reducing the annual sum, eliminating financial supervision under the Dawes plan, and restoring German sovereignty in fiscal matters, thus clearing the way for the evacuation of the Rhineland by the Allies as provided in the Versailles treaty.

4. Cancel all debts between European allies, while providing Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and the other creditors with a substantial annual sum which they can use for their own economic restoration.

5. Dissipate the bad feeling toward the United States on the part of the European debtor states which the payment of their debts to us over a period of 62 years is sure to foster; prepare the way for intercontinental understanding by removing the chief incentive to quarrels; nullify all further criticism of the United States as an "international Shylock."

6. Found a complete financial settlement on a solemn international pledge to "outlaw war" for half a century or more, and provide impoverished and fearful states with security, thus allowing the necessary period for the codification of international law, for progressive disarmament, and for the peaceful discussion of outstanding political differences.

Summary of German loan plan offered by Attorney Salmon O. Levinson

World loan to Germany	$6,000,000,000
Interest rate 5½ per cent per annum. Sinking fund 1½ per cent per annum. (Sinking fund, kept alive, will pay off entire principal in 28 years.)
Pay off lien of Dawes plan reparation loan	200,000,000
Total	5,800,000,000
Pay United States in compromise and discharge of all war debts owing to her	4,000,000,000
Pay United States in repayment of cost of American Army of Occupation, 1919 and 1920	250,000,000
Total	4,250,000,000
Balance	1,550,000,000

This balance of $1,550,000,000 to be used for stabilization of currencies, for equitable adjustments with European nations having specific claims to German reparations, and for the necessary cost of the loan. The unused balance, if any, to be applied in reduction of the loan.

Great Britain to cancel all debts owing to her by her allies, amounting to about $7,000,000,000, so that all allied and interallied government debts will be wiped out.

The nations to sign a general treaty renouncing war, as a method of settling their disputes, for the next 62 years, and agreeing to set up a judicial system to supplant the outworn and destructive war system, as an epoch-making experiment in world peace.

Drastic limitation of armaments, both land and sea, through a conference of all nations based on the 62-year treaty outlawing war.

Treaty of Versailles to be modified in accordance with the needs and spirit of the foregoing proposal.

FOR WORLD SOLVENCY AND PEACE

For the first time since the Great War the world is offered in to-day's issue of the Daily News a comprehensive plan for settling simultaneously all the major problems resiluent from that disastrous struggle. It merits earnest consideration by statesmen here and abroad and by the people of the leading nations.

Credit for its authorship goes to Salmon O. Levinson, of Chicago, widely known for his genius in reorganizing great corporations. Being convinced that the same principles apply to sound statesmanship as to successful business, Mr. Levinson came to the conclusion that the many devices imagined and applied for settling international differences had proved unsatisfactory because they were not parts of a single thoroughgoing remedy.

The Dawes plan has had brilliant results in obtaining from convalescent Germany "reparations by consent." But, however ingenious, that plan postponed the final reckoning and already signs of dissatisfaction are manifest.

The disputes between the United States and its late allies over the payment of the latter's war debts to this country have been quieted by separate agreements, except in the case of France. Yet the solution, consisting of payments extending over a period of 62 years, can hardly be said to have mollified the debtor nations. It is even doubtful whether any international arrangement covering so long a period can be considered secure.

The Locarno pacts were an unexpectedly satisfying step toward international pacification. At best, however, they eliminate but a few of the possible subjects of contention. They do not take into consideration the basic difficulties, which are economic. The angry disputes between Italy and Yugoslavia, between Italy and France, between Poland and Germany—to mention only a few of the more strident—show how uneasy are certain European states with the degrees of "security" attained.

As for disarmament, it is still a pious dream.

The truth is that reparation and debt problems, security, and peace are integral parts of a single complex. The unusual merit of Mr. Levinson's proposal is that it embraces all these problems and undertakes to solve them simultaneously. It provides for early payment in cash of a fair share of the European debts to the United States. It provides for the cancellation of debts between the European allies and releases them from indebtedness to the United States and at the same time furnishes them with a considerable sum of money. It fixes the total of German reparations at a reasonable figure, reduces the annual schedule of payments, and frees that country from the humiliating fiscal tutelage established by the Dawes plan. As the implicit price, it asks only that during the period of reparation payments the several interested states pledge themselves each to guarantee some portion of a German loan of $6,000,000,000, which is the "present worth" of the debts as they are now computed, and during the period of payment, and for some years afterwards, agree to "outlaw" war as a method of settling international disputes.

Such "outlawry" would not require disarmament, but would contribute powerfully toward allowing disarmament. It would not exclude war; it would show war's character as brigandage against which self-defense is both licit and laudable. By connecting the financial integrity of each several state with the maintenance of a scheme destined to restore international confidence and sound business the possibility of armed conflict would be compressed to relative insignificance.

Mr. Levinson's proposal apparently offers in principle to each nation that peculiar benefit it would seem most to cherish.

To the United States it offers an 80 per cent cash compromise of the present $5,000,000,000 of debts owing to it under the government settlements. One can imagine the degree of fiscal relief that would accrue to this country from the early payment to it of $4,000,000,000 in money. Further, the plan would settle by cash payment in the sum of $250,000,000 the vexed question of the expenses of the American Army of Occupation on the Rhine.

To Great Britain the plan offers immediate relief from further payments to the United States, repayments constituting a burden under which the debtor nation, mighty as it is, is staggering. And from the balance of $1,550,000,000 remaining after the payment to the United States Great Britain would receive immediately an equitable percentage.

If the Levinson proposal were in operation French statesmen, for the first time in many years, might sleep soundly. For not only would France be relieved of the possibility of having to pay its enormous debts to the United States and Great Britain, but it would receive a cash payment of about $800,000,000 for currency stabilization and final reconstruction of its devastated areas. France would know also that for a long period of years a "truce of God" had been established between the United States, Great Britain, Italy, Germany, Poland, and itself.

In exchange for waiving the transfer clause protecting its currency under the Dawes plan, Germany again would be a free and sovereign nation, no longer grudgingly yielding tribute to its conquerors, but simply meeting the obligations on an unusually large bond issue, including the extinction of the principal, during a period of 28 years, having, with the proceeds, satisfied all the foreign claims arising out of the war.

More important would be the value of the plan to the world in general if it should be accepted and should prove workable. First, the great number of international holders of German bonds would be a strong guaranty of peace. Second, once freed from the specters of war and foreign debts, European credit throughout the world would rise to the heights merited by intelligent, hard-working, and powerful nations. Third, during the period of war's "outlawry" human society, through the codification of international law, the organization of peaceful cooperation in a hundred fields, and the possibility of such disarmament as each state, unhampered and unconstrained, might deliberately effect, would enter an era of unequaled prosperity.

Leading bankers have pronounced the plan financially sound.

The Daily News is deeply impressed by the marvelous possibilities of the plan. It holds no brief for the details presented by Mr. Levinson. The precise sums, the best ways of obtaining and distributing the needed guaranty for the great loan, the exact use to be made of the proceeds, are all matters for international argument and negotiation. But the Daily News does emphatically and unequivocally uphold the underlying principle of coupling with world peace and security the questions of debts and reparation payments. Therefore it trusts that Mr. Levinson's idea will receive the serious consideration it deserves and will become a topic for world-wide discussion among responsible statesmen.

STATE RIGHTS VERSUS FEDERAL USURPATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "State rights versus Federal usurpation," which appeared in the Nashville Banner of Sunday, December 4, 1927.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

If there are those who doubt the existence of a very serious issue between the State and Federal Governments on the question of jurisdiction over the development of water-power resources, the annual report of the Federal Water Power Commission is sufficient to convince such persons that this issue does exist, and that it is of tremendous importance and far-reaching in its consequence.

During the last session of Congress a bill was introduced by Senator McKELLAR and Representative FINIS GARRETT seeking to define navigable waters and to limit the authority of the Federal Water Power Commission to supervision over the erection of dams and obstructions in such navigable streams, and thereby recognize and acknowledge through a Federal statute the exclusive jurisdiction of the several States over nonnavigable streams. This bill has undoubtedly given the Federal Water Power Commission serious concern. That body has been assuming jurisdiction not only over navigable streams, but also over nonnavigable streams, and endeavoring to exercise authority over water-power resources which, under the Federal Constitution and the various State constitutions, when properly interpreted, belong exclusively to the several States.

The McKellar-Garrett bill proposes to curb this usurpation of State rights by the Federal commission. It proposes to lay down a definite line of demarkation between the State and Federal authority on the questions of navigation and water-power development. It would wipe out the twilight zone of uncertainty and of conflicting jurisdiction which exists to-day between the States and the Federal Government by reason of the unconstitutional interpretation which the Federal Power Commission has been placing on the Federal water power act. The bill introduced in Congress by McKELLAR and GARRETT would say to the Federal Government, "Thus far shalt thou go, but no further." It would render unto the States the things that are the States', and unto the Federal Government the things which, under the Constitution, are subject to Federal control.

The McKellar-Garrett bill would say to the Federal Government, "Under the delegated powers expressed in the Federal Constitution this is your territory," and it would say to the States, "Under the reserved powers of the several States this belongs to you." Which is a consummation devoutly to be wished. It is absolutely essential as a matter of practical administration. It must come sooner or later. It is better that this grave issue should be settled by an unequivocal statutory enactment by the Federal Government and by similar State legislation than have it ultimately settled as a result of harassing, delaying, and expensive litigation involving a multiplicity of lawsuits.

The annual report of the Washington Power Commission, which was released for publication a few days ago, reveals a determination to oppose the passage of the McKellar-Garrett bill and to resist any curtailment of the authority of the Federal commission as that body has heretofore interpreted its powers. A brief résumé of certain portions only of the report was sent out from Washington for publication throughout the country.

The extracts from the report which were broadcast to the various States and congressional districts were calculated to create the impression on the minds of the people that the Federal commission acknowledges the jurisdiction of the several States over their water-power resources and that no issue really exists between the Federal Government and the several States. However, the vital sections of the report which were published in Washington sharply challenge the principles embodied in the McKellar-Garrett bill and make an issue with the several States on the question of their exclusive jurisdiction over nonnavigable streams within their respective borders.

This is a serious issue. When applied to conditions existing in Tennessee it is of far-reaching importance. The great Cove Creek Basin in Tennessee is located on a nonnavigable stream. It is conceded to be one of the most valuable water-power sites in the United States, even rivaling in magnitude Muscle Shoals.

As a water-power project, it lies wholly within this State. It belongs to the State of Tennessee in trust for all the people. It is under the jurisdiction of and it should be developed on the terms and conditions prescribed by Tennessee, and the electric energy generated by the water power of this great project should be utilized in such manner as this State may direct. All revenues arising from it should go into the State treasury, and the Federal Government should not be permitted to interfere with the rights of the State over the development and utilization of the energy generated.

The position taken by the Federal Water Power Commission in its annual report would make it possible for that bureau to exercise the jurisdiction and authority with respect to Cove Creek which should be exercised exclusively by Tennessee. The Federal authorities predicate their claims of jurisdiction on the theory that, although the Cove Creek project is located on a nonnavigable stream, its development will affect the navigability of the Tennessee River. Such a claim appears to be a mere pretext to enable the Federal commission to control the use of the water-power resource of Cove Creek, and other projects in the United States having a similar status.

For the ostensible purpose of improving navigation, the Federal Government must not be allowed to assert unbridled authority over nonnavigable streams, with a real purpose to tie Cove Creek and Muscle Shoals together as parts of a great superpower system, and turn both over to the power combine. The hearings before the House Military Affairs Committee clearly indicate that the major object in the mind of the Federal Power Commission is to thus tie the two together for power purposes, and that the alleged purpose to improve the navigability of the Tennessee River is a thinly disguised pretext which that commission hopes to use as a legal justification for carrying out its major purpose of asserting jurisdiction over the water-power resources of Cove Creek. The tail should not be permitted to wag the dog.

If the several States should concede the authority of the Federal Government to the extent asserted by the Federal Power Commission the States would be reduced to a point of impotence in the control of their water-power resources. This issue affects vitally the material welfare of Tennessee, and in addition involves directly the question of State sovereignty. If the Federal Government is permitted to encroach upon the authority of the several States, here a little and there a little, ultimately the States will be reduced to the status of dependent provinces.

Cove Creek water power, when properly developed and utilized, should yield Tennessee millions of dollars annually in revenue. In addition it can be made to add hundreds of millions of dollars to the industrial wealth of the State if it is developed and used primarily as a hydroelectric project in a manner that will produce the maximum amount of power.

This can and should be done under the jurisdiction and direction of the State and without impairing in the least degree the navigability of the Tennessee River. So long as the State does not permit the development and use of the water power in Cove Creek to impair the naviga-bility of the Tennessee River in its natural condition the Federal Government should be required to keep hands off. Of course, the State has no disposition to impair the navigability of any stream flowing through the State. It is interested in improving navigation, but the development and use of the water power in Cove Creek, so long as it does not impair navigation, is a question over which the Federal Government should have no jurisdiction.

The Banner sincerely trusts that the McKellar-Garrett bill will be introduced in the coming session of Congress; that it will fix definitely the line of demarcation between State and Federal authority on this important question, and that it will in no uncertain terms assert the complete jurisdiction of the several States over nonnavigable streams within their respective borders and likewise the authority of the States with respect to the water-power resources, even on navigable streams, subject alone to the limited authority of the Federal Government over questions of navigation.

The Federal water power act should be amended in whatever particular is necessary to assert the rights of the States over their water resources. The people of Tennessee should not be compelled to go to Washington and ask a Federal bureau or commission what use they may make of their own natural resources. That question should always be decided by the State of Tennessee, acting in its own sovereign capacity as trustee for all its people.

There is a grave issue existing between the State and the Federal Government on the question of water development, and those who doubt the existence of such an issue should read and study carefully the report of the Federal commission just published.

There are many able, distinguished jurists and lawyers who are thoroughly convinced that the Federal water power act as it now stands is unconstitutional. Certainly either the act or its present interpretation and administration is in violation of the Federal organic law. The best legal minds, those who are authorities on the subject, are convinced that if the Federal water power act does confer on the Federal Water Power Commission all of the authority and jurisdiction which that commission has been attempting to exercise, the act itself goes beyond the constitutional authority of the Federal Government. On the other hand, if the Federal water power act, when properly interpreted, does not transcend the constitutional power of the Federal Government, then its administration by the Federal Water Power Commission is in violation of the delegated powers of the Federal Government.

It would be well if the entire Federal water power act were completely revamped, so as to make it a navigation act and not a water power act, so as to only confer jurisdiction on the Federal Government over navigation, and recognize the exclusive authority of the States over their water-power resources. Sooner or later, the better.

The States of the American Union should never willingly submit to any invasion by the Federal Government of their political, property, or revenue rights. When such an issue arises, it should be submitted to and determined by the people. The States have already yielded too far and too often. Federal bureaucratic government from Washington must not be permitted to dominate and control local State matters. The separation of State and Federal authority by our fathers was wise and beneficent. That separation must be preserved.

The famous toast of that immortal Tennesseean, Andrew Jackson, President of the United States: "The Federal Union—it must be preserved," was timely and all-important. It was uttered by the great warrior and statesman at a critical time in the Nation's history. He meant what he said. If Old Hickory were living to-day, when the several States of the Union are confronted with a threatened usurpation of their authority and invasion of their sovereignty, he would declare with equal emphasis and determination:

State sovereignty—"by the eternal"—it must be preserved.

RECESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar is in order, but there is no calendar. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] would like to take up his resolution this morning. As he has a case in the Supreme Court, and Senators are conferring with him on that question now, I move that the Senate take a recess for 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before that is done, what is the reason that the recess is asked for?

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that Senators are consulting with the Senator from Missouri as to whether or not he wants to go on with his resolution to-day. He is now engaged in the Supreme Court, and they will be back in a few minutes to let the Senate know.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock p. m., at which time it reassembled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOFF in the chair). Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3190) authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri rose.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just received from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope there will be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none and lays the bill before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 3190) authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, United States Army Air Corps Reserve, for displaying heroic courage and skill as a navigator, at the risk of his life, by his nonstop flight in his plane, the Spirit of St. Louis, from New York City to Paris, France, on May 20, 1927, by which he not only achieved the greatest individual triumph of any American citizen but demonstrated that travel across the ocean by aircraft was possible.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I would like to ask a question for information. Is not the resolution in violation of the statute relating to those to whom the congressional medal of honor may be awarded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not informed that it is.

Mr. BLEASE. Then I object until that question is passed upon. If I get the information that it is not in violation of such a statute I shall not object, but until I am informed that it is not contrary to the statute I must object. I think it is not right to sit here and permit a resolution, which I believe to be contrary to the statutes of the United States, to be passed without objection.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understood unanimous consent had been granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is correct.

Mr. BLEASE. I was endeavoring to get recognition from the Chair at the time, but I am somewhat hoarse this morning and could not attract his attention. I do not see why my friend from Missouri would want to have the resolution passed if it is contrary to the statute. I want the man to have the honor, but I object if it is violative of the laws of the country.

Mr. REED of Missouri. This, Mr. President, is not a resolution. It is a proposed act of Congress, and, of course, Congress can at any time enact a law touching the same subject matter that is covered by previous enactments. My friend from South Carolina did not, I think, in the confusion, catch the form of the measure. It is a bill, and reads:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to present—

And so forth.

Of course, Congress can at any time pass a bill of that kind notwithstanding any previous general law which may have existed, and I hope my friend will not oppose it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator from South Carolina that I have no doubt he has in mind the thought that the congressional medal of honor can only be conferred upon an officer or man in the service.

Mr. BLEASE. No; but I think it has to be conferred upon a man for bravery in action.

Mr. COPELAND. It is in response to that very thought that I want to speak for a moment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understood the whole point the Senator from South Carolina desired to make was that this was a resolution and that such a resolution would be violative of the statute. But it is not a resolution. It is a bill, and that being the case, of course it can be passed.

Mr. BLEASE. I accept the Senator's construction of the law, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I may say that it has been done many times in this body. A number of times since I have been here it has been done.

Mr. BLEASE. But that does not make it right.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but I do not think it is unlawful at all.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say further that I had occasion last year to look up the record of Congress relative to the conferring of this honor, and I found that it had been granted to laymen, in one case to a man who gave a ship to the United States during the Civil War. I can see no reason in the world why the honor may not be conferred upon this splendid young man.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, there is a general statute providing for the conferring of the congressional medal of honor, and it would not be necessary to have a special act of Congress to confer it. However, this is a case involving unusual bravery, courage, and achievement, and it is desired to have a special act of Congress to confer it. If it were desired merely to comply with the general statute there would be no occasion to have this special enactment; but it is desired to have a special act of Congress in this case. It does not violate the statute in any way. Colonel Lindbergh is in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. BLEASE. I have already stated that if the Senator from Missouri said it can be done legally I would make no further objection.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I make that statement unqualifiedly.

Mr. BLEASE. I would take the Senator's word anywhere.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF JUAN SORIANO (S. DOC. 13)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOFF in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State requesting the submission anew to the present Congress of the matter of a claim against the United States for the death on October 2, 1923, at Guerra, Dominican Republic, of Juan Soriano, a Dominican subject, who was killed by the landing of an airplane belonging to the United States Marine Corps, which formed the subject of a report made by the Secretary of State to me in March, 1926, and my message to the Congress dated March 22, 1926, which comprise Senate Document No. 84, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, copies of which are furnished for the convenient information of the Congress.

I renew my recommendation originally made, that in order to effect a settlement of this claim, the Congress, as an act of grace, and without reference to the legal liability of the United States in the premises, authorize an appropriation in the sum of $2,000, and I bring the matter anew to the attention of the present Congress in the hope that the action recommended may receive favorable consideration.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

SECOND PAN AMERICAN CONFERENCE ON HIGHWAYS (S. DOC. 11)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I renew the request I made of the Sixty-ninth Congress that legislation be enacted authorizing an appropriation of $15,000, to enable the United States to participate in the Second Pan American Conference on Highways, which had been fixed to be held at Rio de Janeiro in the calendar year 1927, but which was postponed to meet at the same city in June, 1928.

A joint resolution for this purpose passed the House of Representatives on January 17, 1927, and was favorably reported to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations, but failed to be reached in the Senate before final adjournment of the Sixty-ninth Congress.

The attention of Congress is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State, and House Document No. 631, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, therewith inclosed, in which the facts regarding this conference are set forth.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 12, 1927.

INVESTIGATION OF ELECTION EXPENDITURES

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, at this time I desire to call up Senate Resolution 10 and to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri, which will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 10) submitted by Mr. REED of Missouri on the 9th instant was read and considered, as follows:

Resolved, That a resolution of the United States Senate, agreed to on May 19, 1926, numbered Senate Resolution 195, of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, creating a special committee to investigate expenditures in senatorial primary and general elections, and all subsequent resolutions dealing with the said special committee and agreed to by the United States Senate during the Sixty-ninth Congress (to wit, S. Res. 227, S. Res. 258, and S. Res. 324), have continued in full force and operation since the dates of their respective enactment by the Senate, and do now, as then, express the will of this body.

And that the said special committee appointed pursuant to said Senate Resolution 195 of the Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, shall continue to execute the directions of the said several resolutions relating to the said committee until the Senate accepts or rejects the final report of the said special committee or otherwise orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am quite well aware that the votes are here to adopt this resolution and that scant attention will be paid to anything that I may say about it. I can not, however, permit the resolution to be adopted without calling attention to the error that it embodies. The resolution as drafted and submitted contains a declaration by the Senate that the resolutions creating this committee, and the committee itself, "have continued in full force and operation since the dates of their respective enactment by the Senate, and do now as then, express the will of this body." That is a statement of past facts, and if the votes are here, as they are, that statement of facts will be made. I wish to call attention before it is made, however, to the fact that it is not a correct statement of past facts. We have Rule XXV of the Senate, and in the second paragraph of that rule it is provided:

The said committees—

Which are the standing committees mentioned in paragraph 1—

shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed.

If it were not for the second paragraph of Rule XXV every committee of the Senate, except the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which is kept alive by law, would expire with the adjournment of Congress.

That used to be universally recognized, and it was the custom in the closing days of each Congress to pass a special resolution continuing the standing committees in effect throughout the period of adjournment until their successors were created. I turn back to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 25, 1919, when, as Senators will remember, our brethren on the other side of the aisle were in control.

Mr. Martin, the then Senator from Virginia, presented a resolution reading:

That the standing committees of the Senate as constituted at the end of the session be, and they are hereby, continued until the next session of Congress or until their successors are duly elected.

Mr. Lodge, at that time the majority leader, then rose and stated that he was in favor of the resolution, saying:

We have always passed a similar resolution. I only wanted to speak to the Senator from Virginia as to his understanding being the same as mine—that none of these committees, with the exception of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, exists by statute, and none of them, of course, would transact any business whatever between the expiration of this Congress and the assembling of the new Congress. The Senator from Virginia agrees with me entirely about that.

Mr. Martin, of Virginia, then rose and said:

I do. When this Congress expires all these committees expire, except the vitality given by this resolution.

Then the resolution was adopted.

A few years afterwards, in order to prevent the necessity for the adoption of such a resolution at each session of the dying Congress, paragraph 2 of the Standing Rules was put in to end it, and the standing committees of the Senate are kept alive throughout the period of adjournment. Paragraph 2, however, does not apply to special committees. There was no resolution continuing this special committee, and, under the law, as agreed upon by both sides of this Chamber, that special committee died with the adjournment of the Sixty-ninth Congress. The United States Senate can, if it pleases, assuming that it has the votes, declare that last month was July or that this place is Chicago; if it could muster the votes, nobody could stop it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. The resolutions in question required the committee of which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is chairman to collect the ballots, to preserve them, and count them. Does the Senator interpret those resolutions as not giving to that committee the power to continue its activities until it shall have discharged the duties and the mandate therein required or until by special act of the Senate it shall have been released from its duties?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It may be that that part of the authority of the committee continued by implication; I do not know; but it was not that power that was in question. I also recall that the Committee on Privileges and Elections was given jurisdiction of the election contest in Pennsylvania. That was the committee that should have collected the ballots and preserved them under that record.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that the resolutions to which I have referred authorized the committee to sit at such times and places as it might determine upon and to collect and preserve all those ballots. Obviously, inasmuch as the last resolution which required the special committee to preserve the ballots was adopted within a few weeks of the adjournment, it would have been impossible for the committee to have collected those ballots and to have preserved them until the meeting of the Senate in December, if it ceased to exist just as soon as the Congress adjourned last March.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. On the contrary, after that authority was given to collect the ballots the Senate referred the matter to the Privileges and Elections Committee; so that the duty of the special committee, as I take it, was to turn the ballots over to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That is why, it seems to me, the pending resolution embodies an incorrect statement of a historical fact; but, as I said at the beginning, I am perfectly well aware that the votes are here to adopt the resolution in any form in which its sponsor sees fit to present it. I can do no more than protest. I have no desire to waste the time of the Senate on the consideration of the resolution. I have made my protest, and that is all I have to say.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the injured-innocent attitude of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a little amusing. One would think as he stood here plaintively declaiming that he was the sole guardian of what little is left of the public conscience and that all he can do, in the face of a cruel and brutal opposition, is to voice his dissent and save his reputation so that future generations may come to his shrine and say, "Here lie the bones of the only honest man of his period."

Mr. President, unfortunately for his position, unfortunately for the stand he now takes, and which is based upon the filibuster that he conducted here for the purpose of stopping these investigations and aborting this effort to learn what was going on in various States—unfortunately for all that, the Supreme Court has decided this question. The committee, which I believe was called the Wheeler Committee, was a special committee. The Wheeler Committee summoned Mr. Daugherty before it. Daugherty failed to come. Proceedings occurred in a recess, and the Supreme Court said this about it:

Another question has arisen which should be noticed. It is whether the case has become moot. The investigation was ordered and the committee appointed during the Sixty-eighth Congress. That Congress expired March 4, 1925. The resolution ordering the investigation in terms limited the committee's authority to the period of the Sixty-eighth Congress; but this apparently was changed by a later and amendatory resolution authorizing the committee to sit at such times and places as it might deem advisable or necessary.

That is the exact language of the Robinson resolution, which gave the special committee additional power.

It is said in Jefferson's Manual: "Neither House can continue any portion of itself in any parliamentary function beyond the end of the session without the consent of the other two branches. When done, it is by a bill constituting them commissioners for the particular purpose." But the context shows that the reference is to the two Houses of Parliament when adjourned by prorogation or dissolution by the King. The rule may be the same with the House of Representatives whose Members are all elected for the period of a single Congress; but it can not well be the same with the Senate, which is a continuing body, whose Members are elected for a term of six years and so divided into classes that the seats of one-third only become vacant at the end of each Congress, two-thirds always continuing into the next Congress, save as vacancies may occur through death or resignation.

Mr. Hinds in his collection of precedents says: "The Senate, as a continuing body, may continue its committees through the recess following the expiration of a Congress"; and, after quoting the above statement from Jefferson's Manual, he says: "The Senate, however, being a continuing body, gives authority to its committees during the recess after the expiration of a Congress." So far as we are advised, the select committee having this investigation in charge has neither made a final report nor been discharged; nor has it been continued by an affirmative order. Apparently its activities have been suspended pending the decision of this case. But, be this as it may, it is certain that the committee may be continued or revived now by motion to that effect, and, if continued or revived, will have all its original powers. This being so, and the Senate being a continuing body, the case can not be said to have become moot in the ordinary sense.

That settles this question; and I am ready to vote on the resolution.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri one question about the last paragraph in the resolution, particularly with reference to this language—shall continue to execute the directions of the said several resolutions relating to the said committee until the Senate accepts or rejects the final report of the said special committee or otherwise orders.

I assume that has reference to the committee's final report on elections held last year. That has nothing to do with any elections which may be held during 1928, for instance?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, no. The committee has no thought of going into those elections, as far as I know; but the language speaks for itself, and I think what it means is perfectly plain.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The point I am getting at is this: Next year 32 Members of the Senate are to be elected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator mean are we going to investigate the 1928 elections?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is precisely it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I certainly am not, unless the Senate hereafter commands me to do so by another resolution; and I hope I shall never have to investigate any election anywhere again.

I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN]. Until I find whether or not he will vote I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRATTON (when the name of Mr. JONES of New Mexico was called). I have already announced that my colleague [Mr. JONES of New Mexico] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. SACKETT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES]. Not having been informed how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GLASS. I transfer my regular pair with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIS. I note that my colleague [Mr. FESS] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. I am not definitely advised as to how he would vote if he were present, but it is my impression that if present he would vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts entered the Chamber and voted "yea."

Mr. REED of Missouri. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HAWES] is necessarily absent from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HOWELL. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained at his home by illness. I presume that he would vote "yea" upon this resolution.

Mr. GLASS. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] having appeared in the Chamber since I made the transfer to him, I shall have to withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is temporarily absent on official business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

I also desire to announce that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. GOODING] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The result was announced—yeas 58, nays 21, as follows:

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not see the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] in the Chamber, and I understand the Senate will not be given an opportunity to take up the urgent deficiency appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said something about wanting the bill to go over, but I do not know whether he still has that idea or not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator from Mississippi desires that the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I wanted to read it. At the time it was presented this morning I had not read it. I have done so since then, and if the Senate wants to proceed with it now I shall not interpose an objection.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will object to the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill to-day.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, unless there is serious objection to taking up that bill, I would be glad to have the Senate proceed with its consideration this afternoon, if all the Senators interested are prepared to go on with it, because there are included in that bill some matters of importance which ought to be discussed.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand the junior Senator from Utah objects, and wants the bill to go over until to-morrow. If he objects, under the rule it must go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Objection being made, under the rule the bill will go over until to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and the Senate (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 13, 1927, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 12, 1927

MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF MEDIATION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, December 12, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, our days are in Thine hands. Do Thou give us the blessing of a sweet resignation. Come to us and sweep aside the mists of error; fortify our weakness and strengthen in all of us the wholesome sense of personal worth and the joy of life. Help us to glory in the wonderful precepts of the Master, by whose invasion the world is to be conquered, by whose presence the world is to be awed, by whose rapture the world is to be thrilled, and by whose knees the world is to bow. O may the knowledge of His truth wedge its way into all our lives and may our feet press His highway. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 10, 1927, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

Mr. LEATHERWOOD, of the second district of the State of Utah, and Mr. STEVENSON, of the fifth district of the State of South Carolina, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, the House is again honored in having a distinguished visitor. In the Speaker's row of the Members' gallery is the Speaker of the House of Venezuela, Señor G. Manrique Pacanins. [Applause.]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolutions 53 and 54

Resolved, That the following Members of the House be elected chairmen and members of the several standing committees of the House, as follows:

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (interposing). Does the gentleman regard it as important that they be read or would it do to insert them in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. TILSON. Of course, that can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It will save time.

Mr. TILSON. I have no objection. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the list of committees as presented by the Republican committee on committees for majority places be elected without reading.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the same procedure be followed as to the minority members of committees named in the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent that the Members named in the respective resolutions be declared elected as members of the several standing committees of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Connecticut made the request that those Members be elected to committees who had been recommended by the Republican committee on committees?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Has that action been approved by the Republican caucus?

Mr. TILSON. Without a protest or objection, this can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I understand, but I mean, has the action of the committee on committees been approved by the Republican caucus?

Mr. TILSON. No; and it was not done two years ago, the same action being then taken by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Then the gentleman's committee does not consult the Members of the majority party about it?

Mr. TILSON. We surely do consult them, and we feel that the Members of the majority party have confidence in our committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BERGER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the list of committees for the real minority party also be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; the entire third party in the House will be printed in the committee lists in capital letters, following the majority members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list of the chairmen and members of the several standing committees of the House is as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. R. WALTON MOORE

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a very able and scholarly address delivered by Hon. R. WALTON MOORE, of Virginia, at the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary celebration of the Continental Congress meeting in York, Pa. The speech was made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] on that occasion as one of the representatives of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Hon R. WALTON MOORE at York, Pa., on October 24, 1927:

CELEBRATION OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SESSION OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS AT YORK, PA.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Long before the Revolution, when there was no thought of independence, many Americans favored the Colonies setting up such a union as might enable them to act together in protecting their frontiers and fostering their development. As early as 1754, about the time the youthful George Washington in British uniform was fighting the French and Indians in the western Pennsylvania wilderness, there was a meeting at Albany of delegates from six of the Colonies to consider Indian troubles, and it was determined to apply to Parliament for authority to form a permanent council of colonial representatives, to be appointed by the Crown, for the purpose of enacting laws of general import, apportioning to the several Colonies their quotas of men and money for military defense; deciding what forts should be built and taking all measures essential for the common safety. But this attempt, which, if successful, might materially have changed the course of future events, proved a failure. Benjamin Franklin, who took part in the meeting, tersely commented that in America the thought was that there was "too much prerogative" in the plan, and in England it was thought to have "too much of the democratic." Later, John Marshall wrote that the plan was refused support in America because it was supposed to place undue power in the hands of the King, and in England because of the apprehension that the Colonial assemblies would be rendered still more formidable by being accustomed to cooperate with each other.

During the struggle for independence it was misgiving of another sort—fear of the sovereignty of the individual States being impaired—which prevented the creation of such a vigorous and effective union as would have saved untold delay and suffering.

The Continental Congress had its definite origin in Virginia action. Twenty years had passed since the gathering at Albany, and in the latter part of that period Parliament enacted statutes representing a new and unjust policy. Protest and repeal followed and then further offensive enactments. The Boston port bill was passed to go into force June 1, 1774. In the spring of that year, the house of burgesses was in session at Williamsburg, the Virginia capital, a town even less in size than York then was, but to be forever remembered as the scene of events which have profoundly affected the progress of the world. A few members of the House conferred upon the expediency of taking formal notice of the Boston situation and agreed to propose that the 1st of June be set aside as "a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer to implore Heaven to avert from us the evils of civil war, to inspire us with firmness in support of our rights and turn the hearts of the King and Parliament to moderation and justice." The resolution was offered May 24, and adopted, but when it was brought to the attention of the royal governor his condemnation was so severe that he at once dissolved the house. Those mainly responsible for what was proposed afterwards served in the Continental Congress. They were Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and the brothers, Richard Henry Lee and Francis Lightfoot Lee, both of whom served here at York. On May 27 they and their fellow members assembled in the public room of the Raleigh Tavern near the Capitol Building and agreed a statement more elaborate and emphatic than the resolution itself, advising that until the grievances of America should be redressed, the purchase and use of tea and other commodities subject to tax should be discontinued. But that was not all. The outstanding feature was the recommendation for "delegates from the several Colonies of British America to meet in general congress at such place annually as shall be thought most convenient, there to deliberate on those general measures which the united interests of America may from time to time require." This was the genesis of the Continental Congress.

Patrick Henry was not only an orator of unexampled power but a leader whose foresight and courage and ability to direct events put him in a class by himself. In a previous month of May, nine years before the assemblage at the Raleigh Tavern, he alone fully estimated the importance of contesting the stamp tax, the first step taken by Parliament in its adventure of taxing the Colonies. Here and there the tax met emphatic disapproval, but the voice of Henry sounded the clear call which met a quick response through all of the sparsely settled country stretching along the Atlantic from New Hampshire to South Carolina. Not yet 30 years old, he had been elected to fill a vacancy in the house of burgesses. When he reached Williamsburg he found opinion uncertain and no one willing to make an open issue. He found the house under the control of men of prominence and wealth who were averse to any act or word bearing any tinge of disloyalty. Not counting what might be the cost to himself, he drew and offered resolutions denouncing the tax as a violation of the principle which had been originally announced by Virginia at Jamestown in the very beginning, even in advance of its announcement in the English petition of right, the principle forbidding taxation without representation. You remember the dramatic story of the consternation of the older members at Henry's eloquence, who according to Jefferson, then a student at William and Mary College, who heard him, seemed "to speak as Homer wrote"; of how Peyton Randolph, the Attorney General, who was to be the first President of the Continental Congress, came out of the house after the resolutions had gone through by a majority of one, and as he passed Jefferson exclaimed, "By God! I would have given 500 guineas for a single vote." You remember how Henry in his speech warned the King of the fate of Cæsar and Charles I and of his defiant attitude when he was met with the cry of treason. Soon the Colonial governor, writing to England, said that "in the course of the debates I have heard that very indecent language was used by Mr. Henry, a young lawyer who had not been above a month a member of the house, and who carried all the young members with him." One of those young members was George Washington, who as President of the United States was to testify his abiding confidence in the man whose leadership he that day followed by offering him great offices, among them the office of Secretary of State and the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. It was the voice of Henry that rang out and was heard everywhere. The effect is thus recently summarized by a distinguished New England historian: "All contemporary observers agree as to the tremendous and almost instantaneous effect on the public of the resolutions published in the papers. * * * A very frenzy took possession of the colonists." After Henry's death a memorandum in his own handwriting was discovered on an envelope in which he had inclosed the original resolutions: "The alarm," he wrote, "spread throughout America with astonishing quickness and the ministerial party was overwhelmed. The great point of resistance to British America was universally established in the Colonies. This brought on the war which finally separated the two countries and gave independence to ours. Whether this will prove a blessing or a curse will depend upon the use our people make of the blessings which a gracious God has bestowed on us. If they are wise, they will be great and happy; if they are of a contrary character, they will be miserable. Righteousness alone can exalt them as a nation."

The recommendation of a permanent Continental Congress had the weight of the most populous and influential of the Colonies. The total population of the country was then some 3,000,000, of whom about half a million were in Virginia. Other Colonies fell into line, and thus an approach toward unity and concert of action was insured.

Each Colony determined for itself the number of its delegates, their length of service, and their compensation. There was not and under the conditions could hardly have been possible any definition of the powers of the Congress. The governmental organizations of the Colonies were different; they were different in their religious, social, and political beliefs, and they were troubled with controversies among themselves; the only means of communicating with each other were sailing vessels and horses and vehicles traveling wretched roads; their literature was mainly derived from the mother country. The newspapers were few and poor. They were of little consequence in comparison with the pamphleteers headed by Tom Paine, whose philippics had enormous effect, and never more so than when the Congress was sitting here. With reference to the newspapers, that they sadly lacked in enterprise and eagerness is shown by a resolution of the Congress at York authorizing a committee "to take the most speedy and effectual methods for getting a printing press erected in this town for the purpose of conveying to the public the intelligence that Congress may from time to time receive," which I believe was not accomplished. Such is the barest outline of conditions which made impossible a common basis on which the Congress might not only speak for all the colonists but act for all in exerting real powers of government.

When the delegates met in Philadelphia in September, 1774, it was under instructions which were diverse in substance and form, but in general simply looking to measures being considered which the Colonies might adopt for the purpose of checking the aggression of the ministers and agents of the Crown, without denying the duty and obligation of loyalty to the Crown. Of greater unity, Henry was the chief advocate. Before going to Philadelphia, the freeholders of his own county addressed him a public letter containing the words, perhaps dictated by himself, "United we stand, divided we fall," an expression then, so far as I know, employed for the first time. On the second day of the session, he declared, "I am not a Virginian but an American." He believed union necessary because he was hopeless of receiving justice from Great Britain. He said, "She will drive us to extremities; no accommodation will take place; hostilities will soon commence and a desperate and bloody touch it will be." Of Henry's attitude John Adams, long a great figure in the Congress and not by any means an overgenerous critic, said: "In the Congress of 1774, there was not one member, except Patrick Henry, who appeared to me sensible of the precipice, or rather the pinnacle, on which he stood, and had candor and courage enough to acknowledge it." A year later, when the thought of independence was still by no means general, Henry, in his rôle of pioneer and prophet, addressing the Virginia convention of 1775, said "There is no longer any room for hope * * * An appeal to the God of Battles is all that is left us," and throwing aside any consideration of personal safety passionately exclaimed, "I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death." Looking back, it can be said of this marvelous man that he was never mistaken in his conception of American rights or in his predictions as to what the future held in store.

No historian has comprehensively dealt with the Continental Congress. The casual student who tries to give even a very general idea of what it was is disturbed by the very mass or data he is compelled to survey. There are the 25 large volumes in which the Journal is thus far printed; innumerable official documents pertaining to civil and military affairs, and official and private correspondence ranging in every direction. In the beginning it acted in subordination to the Crown and to the several Colonies. After independence was declared, it acted in subordination to the several States. It was not a factor in a dual system of government, for there was no such system. It was the servant of 13 governments, each claiming and excising the powers of sovereignty. It could cooperate with each of the States, but it could not control or compel all or any of them. What it did was subject to their individual objection and this was even practically true of its conduct of the relations between the imperfect union which it symbolized and the nations of Europe. The character of the Congress is well described in the oft-quoted statement of Adams. Adams described it as "Not a legislative body nor a representative body, but only a diplomatic body." It was in the literal meaning of the word a parliament, a talking body, and it was under the same disadvantage which tended to discredit the Senate of the United States in the first six years of the latter's existence. Its sessions were secret. Wise action taken behind closed doors and eloquent speeches which nobody heard were wasted on a suspicious public. Its own realization of the need of some degree of central authority being devised was evidenced by the diligence with which, in the midst of its other labors, it toiled on the work consigned to it by the States of framing the Articles of Confederation in order to provide a more perfect Union. But the result of this work did not receive the sanction of all of the States until March, 1781. Under the circumstances it was the best expedient within reach, and even though it was hardly more than a rope of sand, it proved strong enough, and this is to the everlasting honor of the Congress, to hold the States together after the close of the Revolution, pending the establishment of the Union as it now is.

Notwithstanding its infirmities, the Congress was a necessary agency, performing a service beyond measure in value. In answer to all the criticism for delinquencies largely inherent in conditions and unavoidable, there is certainly this which is beyond denial: No assemblage at any time has ever more strongly and clearly, and with such lasting impression, set forth the fundamental rights to which individuals and political communities are entitled. I am thinking of the declaration of grievances, the address to the people of Great Britain, and the address to the King, adopted by the First Congress, which won the admiration of the most enlightened statesmen of England, who were outspoken in applauding the sagacity and courage of their kinsmen on this side of the Atlantic. And, of course, I am thinking of that later declaration which will forever hold its rank among all the political utterances of our race.

Turn for a moment to the events which led up to the great transaction of July 4, 1776. Williamsburg is again the theater. It is again the month of May, of that year, and all about the little town is the beauty of the Virginia spring. The convention is in session, and the Virginia statesmen, with George Mason at the front and Henry exerting his powerful influence, frame a constitution, including what we have come to call the bill of rights, which gives Mason enduring fame, the first written constitution ever promulgated creating a complete system of government. And then there is passed a resolution instructing the Virginia Delegates in Congress to propose to that body to declare the United Colonies free and independent States, absolved from all allegiance to or dependence upon the Crown or Parliament of Great Britain. The flag immediately designated as "the Union flag of the American States" is unfurled from the capitol; there is a military parade; the resolutions are read to the soldiers; and that night the town is illuminated. And then soon came the Declaration of Independence, which is coupled with an announcement of the principles of human liberty, a restatement of American rights, and the principles of national liberty.

And this further of the memorable transactions of the Congress: Before independence was declared, but after open conflict had occurred and the sword had begun to write the record of the Revolution, there was one thing sufficient to overbalance all shortcomings and mistakes—the appointment of Washington as commander in chief of the American Army. The motion was made by Adams June 15, 1775, and when Washington stepped out of the room it was unanimously adopted, and the next day Washington came back and in a few simple words accepted the trust. We may wonder what would have been the end of the Revolution, and following the Revolution the destiny of the country, except for the Virginia planter, who will continue for all time the loftiest figure in the history of the Republic. It was Adams who also said the final word which intrusted to Thomas Jefferson the preparation of the Declaration of Independence. Richard Henry Lee had moved the resolution for the appointment of the committee and was then called away. Adams and Jefferson were members of the committee. Each suggested the other for the work of preparation, but Adams insisted that it should be done by a Virginian and that the fittest Virginian was Jefferson.

There was no more serious period than those months in which the Congress sat here. It had been forced away from Philadelphia. Ahead were years of difficulty and doubt. The fate of the Revolution was in a trembling and perilous balance. There could be no vision of the distant event at the other town of York where the British flag was to droop in despair. Behind was the gathering gloom which had become thick darkness, relieved only by the flashing of guns on the battle fields where the most extreme valor could not avoid defeat. No catalogue of the discouraging conditions can be attempted now. But there is one fact, the significance of which is not always completely had in mind. The menace was twofold. There were the armies of trained and seasoned troops sent from England, with such equipment as the patriots could not parallel. And, besides, there were numberless Americans loyal to the Crown and willing to oppose by every conceivable means the success of the patriotic cause. They organized regiments and companies; they refused assistance to their countrymen and they took every opportunity to furnish assistance to the invaders. After the Revolution Adams estimated that at least one-third of the entire population had been Tory. When he sent this estimate to Chief Justice McKean, of Pennsylvania, who had served in the Congress at York and elsewhere, McKean concurred, but expressed the opinion that the Tories included more than one-third of the wealthy and influential people.

Here at York the darkness began to lessen and the light appear. The notable victory at Saratoga was won, paving the way for the treaties which made France our ally. On the other hand, there were the bitter ordeal at Valley Forge and the effort to displace the Commander in Chief. The principals in the Conway cabal were selfish and unscrupulous wreckers, but it is easy to understand that far better men, who would cheerfully have given their lives for the success of the Revolution, blinded by the glamour with which by distorting the facts Gates was able to surround himself, were sincerely convinced that a change was demanded. They were not wholly familiar with how much Washington had done to insure the victory; the inestimable value of his campaign in New Jersey and Pennsylvania; his direction or supervision of the campaign against Burgoyne; and the importance of his action in sending to the North the force of practiced riflemen under the command of his fellow Virginian, Col. Daniel Morgan, except for whom, and Arnold, the inefficient Gates would never have brought about the surrender of the British Army. That the evil scheme miscarried was due, as we all know, to Washington's quiet exposure of the duplicity of Gates and to the steadfast loyalty of Lafayette to his chief. Perhaps the building is not preserved where the banquet was held here in January, 1778, with the aim of consolidating opinion in favor of Washington's overthrow. But who can ever forget how at the moment when the tide seemed to be running all one way against Washington, the young Frenchman rose from his seat at the table and rebuked the plotters by proposing a toast to the health of the Commander in Chief? No event in the annals of historic York is more worthy of the art of some great painter.

Coincident with the session here, there was not only what occurred at Saratoga and in France, but the light was breaking elsewhere.

Washington's fellow Virginian, who may be regarded as the progenitor of the American Navy, was showing that the Americans must be reckoned with on the sea as well as on the land. The delegates who were considering here on April 27, 1778, the means of suppressing disaffection could not know that on that very day the English newspapers began to notice with alarm the daring exploits of John Paul Jones on their coast, and how throughout the year they were to stress the peril in which he was placing their ports and commerce. Another of Washington's fellow Virginians, a gifted and daring soldier, was at the same time holding and defeating the British forces in the West, beyond the Alleghenies. The delegates who were considering here on June 24, 1778, the proper observance of the second anniversary of the Declaration of Independence could not know that on that very day George Rogers Clark was marching against the fort at Kaskaskia, Ill., and arranging the capture of other British strongholds in that region.

Some contemporary observers, whose opinion has since been echoed by many, ascribe the growing weakness of the Continental Congress, its loss of support and prestige, to the fact that it came to be composed of men of less ability than those who had formerly served. Alexander Hamilton, dwelling on this circumstance, in a letter to Washington, said, "Each State, in order to promote its own internal government and prosperity, has selected its best members to fill the offices within itself, and conduct its own affairs * * *. This is a most pernicious mistake and must be corrected." But Hamilton himself, who was highly qualified for congressional service, thought he should remain with the Army. He obeyed what he regarded as the call of duty, like Washington, Henry, Jefferson, and many of their colleagues in the earlier sessions who could not escape entering other fields where their services were imperatively demanded. Hamilton's letter was dated February 13, 1778, and he might have moderated his expression could he have looked in on the delegates here engaged that very day from early morning into the late evening on matters of the utmost importance.

It is not true that the delegates who served here or subsequently were inadequate to the work. Consider the Virginia delegates at York. If they are not to be counted in the group to which Washington, Henry, and Jefferson belong, they at least belong to a second group, indicated in an address made by Mr. Hoar a long time ago when he was a Senator from Massachusetts. Speaking of Virginia, he said: "Notwithstanding the splendid constellation of burning and blazing names which she gave to the country during the period of the Revolution and in framing and inaugurating the Constitution, if by some miracle they had been gathered together in one room, we will say in the year 1777 or 1780, and had perished in one calamity, Virginia could have supplied their places and have maintained almost entirely the same preeminence." Before naming the Virginia delegates, let me suggest that you consult the journals to see the variety of the business dealt with at York, the regularity of the sessions, and the protracted hours employed in the work, however large or small the attendance. And little imagination is required to understand the inconveniences to which the members were subject. The accommodations must have been extremely meager. Even the food supply was anything but ample, as appears from a letter of Richard Henry Lee, who wrote that he lived mainly on a diet of wild pigeons and his health suffered. John Adams wrote: "When I asked leave of Congress to make a visit to my constituents it was my intention to decline the next election and return to my practice at the bar. * * * All my emoluments as a Member of Congress for four years had not been sufficient to pay a laboring man upon my farm."

Who, then, at York were the delegates from my own State? None of them were inferior men. Forgotten by the historians are John Bannister, Thomas Adams, and John Harvie, but they all had gained distinction in the service of their State. The qualities of another, Joseph Jones, the Government of the United States has acclaimed by publishing his correspondence, which was largely with Washington, Madison, and Monroe, showing the power of his mind and his valuable contribution to the Revolutionary struggle and the formation of our institutions. The memory of the other three is enduring, and not simply because they were signers of the Declaration of Independence, whose author was their close associate and friend. One of them was Benjamin Harrison, the ancestor of two of our Presidents. When the delegates to the first Continental Congress were chosen, he had the distinction of being put in the list which included Washington and Henry. He was for years a Member of Congress and the honor fell to him as chairman of the Committee of the Whole to report the resolution appointing the committee to draft the Declaration of Independence and the instrument itself when ready for consideration. You know the story of Franklin remarking that if the delegates who signed the Declaration did not hang together, they would hang separately. Harrison had something of Franklin's sense of humor. He was portly, and Mr. Gerry was slender and thin. Turning to the latter as they were signing, Harrison said, "When the hanging scene comes on, I shall have the advantage of you. It will be over with me in a minute, but you will be kicking in the air half an hour after I am gone." When a successor to Peyton Randolph, President of the Congress and Harrison's kinsman, was about to be chosen, and all eyes were turned on John Hancock, Harrison seized Hancock in his arms and placing him in the chair, said, "We will show Mother Britain how little we care for her by making a Massachusetts man our President whom she has excluded from amnesty by public proclamation." An evidence of how he was regarded by his own State is that three times he was elected its governor in what some one has called the Athenian days of Virginia.

The name of Lee is as inseparable from the history of Virginia as the name of Washington. Upon some of its most shining pages that name is written, and through the story of the Revolution it runs like a golden thread. So much has been written of Richard Henry Lee and so much of his correspondence remains that it is unnecessary to say more of him than that he was the finest orator of the Revolution, except Henry, and one of the greatest statesmen who sat in the Congress at York, of which at another time he was President. His brother, Francis Lightfoot Lee, who was with him here, was equal in intellectual force and unsparing diligence. Another brother, Henry Lee, with Franklin, was representing the country in Paris when John Adams was sent from here to cooperate with them in negotiating the treaties. In the years to come, when he was reviewing the events with which he had been connected, Adams wrote of the Lees. He lauded the merits of Richard Henry Lee as too well known to need recounting. "They need," he wrote, "no illustration by me." Francis Lightfoot Lee he described as "a man of great reading well understood, of sound judgment, and inflexible purpose in the cause of his country." Then in a more tender vein he refers to Arthur Lee as "a man of whom I can not think without emotion, a man too early in the service of his country to avoid a multiplicity of enemies; too honest, upright, faithful, and intrepid to be popular; too often obliged by his principles and interests to oppose Machiavellian intrigues to avoid the destiny he suffered. This man never had justice done him by his country in his lifetime, and I fear he never will have by posterity." Of the same family was the soldier and statesman, Light Horse Harry Lee. All of these Lees were born near Wakefield, at the Stratford house in Westmoreland, Washington's native county. In that Virginia home, I may be permitted to say, at a later time was born another, the son of Light Horse Harry Lee, the wonderful soldier and stainless gentleman who commanded the armies of the Southern Confederacy.

If I have seemed to stress unduly the importance of Virginia and Virginians in the Revolutionary era, such has not been my purpose. I have had no other thought than to recall some of the noble memories of the common devotion, sacrifices, and achievements of the people of the thirteen original States, who laid the foundation of our great Republic, which has the faith and hope of us all—a more perfect Union than was dreamed of by those gathered here in York 150 years ago, the most perfect Union which the genius of man has created.

HEROISM OF THE COAST GUARD

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on the first day we assembled here the press of the country carried on their front pages accounts of two of the greatest feats of rescue from shipwreck in the annals of the Coast Guard. Within a short distance of each other about the same time in my district, off the stormy coast of North Carolina, the Norwegian steamship Cibao and the Greek steamship Paraguay were destroyed, and the saving of their crews by the unparalleled heroism of the Coast Guard is described as one of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the service.

At a later date during the present session it is my purpose to address the House on the United States Coast Guard, the noblest service in the world. I shall endeavor at that time to point out the needs and aspirations of the service, and to show how this great organization, founded for the sake of humanity, has been so shamefully neglected by Congress. I hope that to-morrow morning every Member of the House will read what I am now inserting in the RECORD, and it will give them a greater appreciation of a work that has no press agents and where duty is the only word they know. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD letters of commendation of the work of the Coast Guard from the masters of these two foreign ships and a newspaper account of the rescues.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

HATTERAS, N. C., December 5, 1927.

Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am herewith forwarding a copy of my letter of commendation to Coast Guard headquarters and hope that it will meet with your favorable approval in regards to the great heroic work performed by the officers in charge and crews of Cape Hatteras, Creeds Hill, Hatteras Inlet, and Ocracoke Coast Guard stations in rescuing the lives of 24 souls forming the crew of the stranded Norwegian steamship Cibao, wrecked on Hatteras Inlet Bar December 4, 1927, when we were in a very dangerous position.

I request further that anything that can be done for these men in way of comment from your Government can not be too strong for the great work they performed in this case.

Respectfully yours,

M. MYLANDER,
Master Norwegian Steamship Cibao.

HATTERAS, N. C., December 5, 1927.

COMMANDANT U. S. COAST GUARD,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the officers of the Norwegian steamship Cibao, wrecked on Hatteras Inlet Bar December 4, 1927, during severe storm, wish to extend our most heartfelt appreciations of the noble and daring rescue performed by the officers in charge and crews of Ocracoke, Hatteras Inlet, Creeds Hill, and Cape Hatteras stations. This rescue was made under a very hazardous condition through one of the most dangerous surfs that any bunch of men could ever plan such a noble piece of work, and going through the ordeal without even a mishap to any man.

This is to be looked upon as a heroic deed that could be performed by none other except they be courageous, brave, and experienced members of such a noble service as the United States Coast Guard, of which these men boast of their membership.

We wish to state further that this rescue was not a mere matter of these men launching their boats and coming to our assistance and their work finished, then soon forgotten by all concerned. Not so! It is to be long remembered that we lay in a helpless condition in a bed of high-rolling breakers and strong current.

Knowing that our plight was a very sad one for a crew of a ship to be placed in, it never dawned on our minds that there was such a brave bunch of rescuers in our midst that could ever master such high breakers that enveloped our ship. But our sad hearts were soon made glad to see the brave men with their rescuing boats approaching. At once we knew that we were safe by the way they maneuvered, and the means established to make the rescue—which was performed by a life line from the ship to the rescuing boat. Being 24 men in our crew, each individual had to be dragged through the breakers by means of a line for the distance of about 100 yards. There being more than one trip to make to get the crew off, each trip was made with equal skill, until three hazardous trips were made, and every man safely on shore.

In our opinion these men are deserving the very highest recognition possible that can be afforded by your department, as they have well proven their ability in this case. It is our earnest desire that the Norwegian Government, of which we are subjects, give these men the recognition due them for saving the lives of 24 of our nationals.

Respectfully yours,

O. HANSEN.
M. MYLANDER, Master.

"S. S. PARAGUAY," Piraeus (Greece).

To the HEADQUARTERS U. S. COAST GUARD,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Please convey through your office on behalf of me as master of the wrecked ship, also on behalf of myself, officers, and the surviving crew, our gratitude and many thanks to Capt. W. H. Lewark and the guardsmen under his command of the Kill Devil Hill, also Kitty Hawk for the heroic deeds performed by them to save me, my officers, and my crew, and also for all the assistance given to us during our stay there.

It is my duty when I am returning to Greece not to fail to report to my authorities whatever was done to us in the predicament we were in.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed) MASTER OF S. S. "PARAGUAY."

COAST GUARDS LIVING UP TO OLD-TIME TRADITIONS—SURFMEN AT HATTERAS AND KILL DEVIL HILL ACQUIT THEMSELVES HEROICALLY, SAVING 48 LIVES FROM A RAGING SEA THIS WEEK

The day of the surfmen and the Coast Guard station is not done. We have heard it said that Coast Guard stations will soon be a thing of the past. The wireless telegraph, the radio compass stations along the coast that give ships their exact position, the better lighthouses, whistling buoys, and bells that scream and clang louder and louder with the rising seas to warn the shipmaster of danger, all these they said would some day make the maintenance of Coast Guard stations unnecessary. Some of the surfmen have believed it themselves.

Folks just say they know we don't have the wrecks we used to have, and at any rate they know there aren't as many lives lost. Visitors to the seashore in summer time, when the sun broils down on the sands, when the water is tepid and the breezes are balmy, observe the Coast Guards drowsing in the shade and wonder why the Government keeps them there. The summer-time visitors do not know the beaches in December, when folks who live in steam-heated houses and whose muscles are weak and flabby could not withstand the chilling blast, nor battle against the gale the surfman patrols against. They wouldn't accompany a Coast Guard on a patrol for $500.

The stories we have read of surfmen of other days are not tradition. The day of the lonely Coast Guard on his bitter patrol of a storm-swept beach assailed by biting blasts of sand, drenched with rain, and dragging his way over weary miles is not a thing of the past. Nor are thrilling rescues of human life from lurking death in angry seas events that belong entirely to the obscure chronicles of other days.

Forty-eight foreign seamen, whose lives were snatched from the wrecks of their vessels on the Dare County coast on Sunday of this week, bear grateful witness to these facts. Thousands of miles from home they were, their luckless vessels breaking to pieces under them on the cruel reefs of a foreign land, they clung to their ships, despairing of help, and awaiting a terrible death.

Angry seas swept across the decks, their cries were drowned by the roar of wind and waves as the elements sang their death songs, the cold rain drenched them to the bone; the intense darkness hid the picture of complete despair on their faces.

And then there glimmered through the darkness, faintly at first, but not to be mistaken, the glare of a Coston light in the hands of a lonely man who was trudging along the coast. A surfman making his way with difficulty against the wind, and over the weary miles between the stations where boats and men and food and clothing are kept by the American Government to succor those who may be in distress.

The despairing watchers on the ship saw the signal and knew the Coast Guard had discovered their plight. A hundred men were along the darkened Carolina coast that night, their eyes strained seaward, facing death themselves that they might help others. Sons and grandsons of Coast Guards and native seamen who knew naught else but the calling of the sea.

SAVED 48 LIVES

And 24 men were rescued from the Greek tanker Paraguay near Kill Devil Hill, and 24 were saved from the Norwegian fruiter Cibao on the dangerous shoals at Hatteras by Coast Guards of the seventh district, who wrote an epic in the annals of the service, by effecting rescues that are conceded to be among the most heroic and thrilling deeds ever performed in the seventh district.

Old surfmen declare it one of the wildest seas and strongest winds in all their experience. The Greek tanker Paraguay sprung a leak on Friday. The men had manned the pumps until all were nearly exhausted. Water poured into stern and bow from the big leaks caused by the blows of the heavy seas. The ship was within 60 miles of Cape Henry; she might have made it. But the storm struck her. The waves broke across the vessel, tons and tons of water went into the hold and put out the fires, the power that was driving her was lost, down went the wireless telegraph that might have called for aid; dead went the engine that operated the lights that might have signaled for help. The lifeboats were swept from their davits.

The helpless ship drifted like a stray cork, the ripping of her seams sounded above the roar of the storm, she trembled like a leaf from the pounding of the sea. The men were working at the pumps. Four were swept overboard in the darkness, unknown to their comrades. And then the vessel struck bottom some 300 yards from shore, her bow high out of the water. Every man ran to the bow, where they huddled together in the darkness.

She was 2 miles north of Kill Devil Hill Station. Opposite the spot where the Wright Aviation Memorial is to be built. A surfman saw her, he notified the station. W. H. Lewark, boatswain's mate and officer in charge, mustered his men. He sent word down the line and moved his equipment up the beach, but no boat could put to sea in the storm.

Keeper Lewark and his men signaled to the men on the ship to make ready to catch a line. The surfmen on the beach planted their cannon.

A number four shotline was bent on and fired toward the vessel. It went unerring in its course across the rigging, and fell into the hands of the sailors.

THE FIRST LINE BROKE

The surfmen ashore bent on the whip block hawser and hauling tackle, one end of which was made fast on the beach. The sailors began to pull it toward them. Surely here was the gear that would take them all to safety. But it did not reach them. The shotline parted and the gear fell back in the sea.

Meanwhile Keeper Walter Etheridge, of Nags Head Station, and Keeper S. D. Guard, of Kitty Hawk, and their men arrived to help. A second line was shot across the bow of the vessel which had long since broken in two. With this line the sailors hauled in the tackle, and made it fast to their rigging.

One at a time the sailors were brought ashore without mishap, until all the 24 remaining men of the crew were saved. As fast as one was clear of the breeches buoy, it went back for another. One sailor came ashore carrying a pet rooster. All were pounded and drenched by the seas but none severely injured.

"I never saw a more grateful set of shipwrecked men," declares Commander Littlefield, who visited the station shortly after the rescue. "The captain declares he will carry a piece of the shotline that saved him away with him and treasure it as something sacred. He also says he will bring the rescue to the attention of the Greek Government on his return to Alexandria, believing that the surfmen of Kill Devil Hill will be given suitable recognition.

"It was a remarkable rescue, for not a man was lost," adds Commander Littlefield. "And it was performed under terrible conditions, if we would judge from the sea, which was extremely rough even 24 hours later."

Down below Cape Hatteras, the "graveyard of the sea," a rescue more dramatic, more risky, and thrilling and dangerous in every respect took place. Two miles out on the treacherous shoals near the inlet the Cibao, a Norwegian fruit steamer, was driven ashore by the gale. Twenty-four men, out in the raging ocean, despaired of help and were becoming resigned to a tragic end. The Cibao presented a problem more difficult than that of the Paraguay. It was impossible to fire a line from shore. No man could have lived through that surf, even though a breeches buoy could have been used.

A DANGEROUS PASSAGE

Any surfmen who attempted to make their way from Hatteras Inlet to the Cibao took their lives in their hands. No man could row against the seas. Only a power surfboat could make the trip. The pausing of the motor for a few seconds might have meant sudden death, for without power to hold it up in the wind the boat might have easily drifted out of the deeper water and onto a shoal where it would have capsized and every man have been swept overboard.

It was an heroic rescue. Charles O. Peel, of Hatteras Inlet; James H. Garrish, or Ocracoke; W. H. Barnett, of Creeds Hill; B. R. Ballance, of Cape Hatteras stations, all keepers, with a picked crew led the rescue. Taking a lifeboat in tow of a motor surfboat, they made the perilous trip out to sea. The sea was too rough to permit them to go alongside the Cibao. A wave would have caught the small boat and dashed it to bits against the side of the ship.

And so a rope was sent across the intervening water to the Cibao. One by one the men went over the side and made their way along the rope, each with a smaller rope around his own body, and as he came beside the surfboat the Coast Guards pulled him aboard. Three trips were made from shore to ship before the crew were rescued. "It was one of the greatest rescues I ever heard of," declared Commander Littlefield. "I don't believe you would find worse conditions anywhere under which to effect a rescue."

One Elizabeth City woman was fortunate enough to see the heroic work of the Coast Guards at Kill Devil Hill when the Greek tanker Paraguay came ashore Sunday. Mrs. Alice K. Grice, who was down on the beach for the week end, says:

"You would have been proud of the splendid way the Coast Guard handled their work. Captain Lewark, at Kill Devil Hill station, was assisted in the rescue work by Capt. Walter Etheridge, of Nags Head station, and his crew, and Captain Guard and Surfman Perry, of the Kitty Hawk Station. They had to use the breeches buoy, and it took 15 to 20 minutes to bring each man in through the water. The Paraquay was sailing from New York to Seville under the command of Captain Katulas. The ship broke in two when she struck the beach. The waves were breaking over it. I wouldn't have missed seeing the rescue for anything. I wish everyone who doesn't know of the work the Coast Guard does could have seen it. The whole picture was wonderful—the surf pounding the beach, whitecaps as far as you could see, and the wind blowing a hurricane, and real men working hard to save the lives of others. It was the most thrilling thing to see, and I wish it could be thrown on the screen."

WARREN EXPRESSES PLEASURE

Congressman LINDSAY C. WARREN got a real thrill on his arrival in Washington Monday morning when the United States Coast Guard office called him up to congratulate him on the splendid work done by his home folks, the surfmen of the first congressional district. Mr. WARREN was so glad to hear the news of their splendid work that he sent a telegram of commendation to all three stations. All of the stations are in Mr. WARREN'S district, and all three crews are personal friends of the first district Congressman. Mr. WARREN considers the rescues two of the most conspicuous examples of heroism in the annals of the Coast Guard.

The fact that the unusual rescues were made at this time is of especial interest to Mr. WARREN by reason of the fact that he has been planning for several months to make a speech in Congress concerning the work of the Coast Guard. Mr. WARREN has been much displeased at the disregard shown an honorable and able service as a result of burdening it with the enforcement of the prohibition laws, and it is his idea to present the Coast Guard in a different light from that in which the service is held in some sections of the country.

Admiral F. C. Billard, commandant of the Coast Guard, on Monday dispatched the following wire to District Commander O. A. Littlefield at this city:

"I am much gratified to learn of the splendid work of Kill Devil Hill, Hatteras Inlet, and Ocracoke stations in the rescue made yesterday. Communicate immediately to the stations my congratulations and commendations."

WHERE WRECKS ARE WRECKS MUTILATED BODIES WASH ASHORE

Two bodies, supposedly of the seamen who had washed overboard, were found this week, one badly mutilated while the other was in better condition and bore a ring with the letters "A. M." engraved on it. The bodies were found near Oregon Inlet, and were so badly beaten by the surf that there is no means of positively identifying them.

The crew of the Cibao are standing by at Hatteras Inlet, according to last report. They were hopeful that the vessel might be salvaged, but she has been driven so far across the shoals that it is now doubtful that this can be accomplished. However, they will remain at Hatteras several days more, it is stated.

The wreck at Kitty Hawk took place just a half century after the wreck of the U. S. S. Huron, which landed 8 miles farther southward November 31, 1877, 2 miles north of Nags Head Station. Ninety-eight officers and men lost their lives in the wreck of the Huron.

At that time the Coast Guard stations were not active except from December 1 to some time during the spring months, and when the Huron stranded at 1 o'clock in the morning during a severe storm, all the surfmen were at their homes. No help came until early in the forenoon, and at that little could be done except to pull on land the bodies as they washed ashore. Only 48 lives were saved.

There were no funds to provide suitable equipment, and what the stations had at that time was inadequate and there was no means to drag it up the beach.

The tragedy of the Huron, which aroused the country to sense the neglect its seamen were subject to, was increased by the fact that the first superintendent of the Coast Guard, Lieut. John J. Guthrie, lost his life while attending the wreck.

THOSE WHO AIDED

The men of several stations of the Coast Guard of the Seventh District played a gallant part in the rescues of the seamen, and their work brought praise from Commandant F. C. Billard, who wired district headquarters at Elizabeth City of his commendation, and asked that the men at each station be commended. In the rescue work at Hatteras Inlet, the Hatteras Inlet Station, in charge of Boatswain Charles O. Peel, the son of a veteran surfman, was assisted by Ocracoke, Creeds Hill Station, and Cape Hatteras Station. Kill Devil Hill Station, in charge of W. H. Lewark, boatswain's mate (L), was assisted by the men of Nags Head and Kitty Hawk Stations. Dennis Twiford and Aubrey Harris, surfmen of Caffeys Inlet Station, residing at Kitty Hawk, who were on leave at the time, volunteered their services and worked all day Sunday with the men at Kill Devil Hill Station, rescuing the seamen from the Greek tanker.

The stations and crews taking part in these rescues are as follows: Kitty Hawk: S. D. Guard, officer in charge, and Surfman W. C. Perry; Kill Devil Hill: W. H. Lewark, officer in charge, John Westcott, W. S. Dough, E. J. Baum, T. T. Tillett, M. L. Tillett, S. G. Austin, D. I. Dowdy; Nags Head Station: W. G. Etheridge, officer in charge, C. C. Jones, G. B. LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence for my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BECK], on account of the serious illness of Mrs. Beck.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, after the reading of the Journal on Thursday morning next, to speak to the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman amend his request by asking this permission in case consideration of the revenue bill is finished?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. All right; I will do that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the gentleman wants to talk about.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Oh, divers and sundry subjects, principally with reference to the bill I have introduced providing for a joint reunion of the survivors of the armies of the blue and the gray in Washington next year. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one moment in order to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the legislative counsel of the House and Senate, together with the legislative counsel of the Treasury, has prepared a print of the new revenue bill and the present law which is available to all the Members, and which I think we will find very useful. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to submit another unanimous-consent request. The bill which we have presented is in different form, as Members have observed, with certain cross references and headings and subheadings, and in case there is any amendment it is quite possible these cross references or headings or subheadings may have to be changed, and to avoid the necessity of going back at the end of the bill, I ask unanimous consent, as stated in the request which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa submits a request, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That when the House has completed its consideration of H. R. 1, the pending revenue bill, that the Clerk may be authorized—

(1) To make necessary changes in numbers and letters in all headings and subheadings and in any cross references thereto.

(2) To strike out cross references that have become erroneous or superfluous and insert cross references made necessary or convenient by reason of changes made by the House.

(3) Where amendments adopted to the bill do not conform in style, typography, and indentation to the style of the bill as printed, to make such corrections as may be necessary to produce such conformity.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman a question, and couple with this question the statement that there is one feature of the bill in which I am very much interested. I have had no time in general debate, and I want to ask the chairman if he proposes to be liberal in the matter of time on the reading of the bill. I would like about 15 minutes, and I would like to know what will be the policy of the chairman in that regard.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The policy has always been to be very liberal in such matters and the policy will not be changed, but I can not say positively at this time, not knowing what the gentleman wants to talk about or the situation we are going to be in at that time. Of course, I am not able to make the gentleman a promise of 15 minutes, but I will do what I can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 1, the revenue bill, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, all time in general debate has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill by sections.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to object to reading the bill by sections. I am just as anxious to facilitate the passage of this bill as the gentleman from Iowa, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with the statement that I have cooperated with him. Except where there are differences and I want to offer amendments, I am going to contribute what I can toward expediting the passage of the bill. I do not know what the rule really would be, but I do want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that when we reach provisions of the bill where there is a serious effort made at a constructive or fundamental amendment that the gentleman give ample opportunity for us to suggest amendments to any paragraph of any one of the sections. With that statement, of course, I have no objection to reading the bill by sections.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Chairman, and I ask unanimous consent that in reading the bill the table of contents printed on pages 2 and the following may be omitted, as it is not necessary to read them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that in the reading of the bill the table of contents on pages 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and a portion of page 7 be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, the Chair has not put the other part of the request that the bill be read by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think it is usual to read it by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that neither the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] nor the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] have any objection to the bill being read by sections.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But there are 433 other Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it ought to be read by sections. The Chair understands that that is a matter largely within the discretion of the Chair, subject, of course, to the will of the committee on appeal.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not necessary under the rule to read it by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so understand it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I may be in error, but my impression is that it is very unusual indeed to include an index as a part of the law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is unusual.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why is it done in this case?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was done when the Judicial Code was enacted.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There was probably some necessity for it in that case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is very useful here in my judgment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Undoubtedly an index is useful; but the question is whether you want the index as a part of the law.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That was what they did when they enacted the Code, and if they did it in the Code we can do it here. If it is beneficial why should it not be done?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Ordinarily the index goes to the back and this is at the beginning where the reader can see what is included.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I asked the same question the other day, and I was informed that it was so done in the Judicial Code. I said if we can do it in the code we can do it here, and it is undoubtedly of value so that when a man picks up the law he can see what is in it without having to go to other law books that publish an index.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk reading the bill read as follows:

SEC. 12. SURTAX ON INDIVIDUALS

(a) RATES OF SURTAX.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a surtax as follows:

Eleven thousand six hundred and sixty dollars upon net incomes of $100,000; and upon net incomes in excess of $100,000, in addition 20 per cent of such excess.

(b) Sale of mines and oil or gas wells: For limitation of surtax attributable to sale of mines and oil or gas wells, see section 102.

(c) Capital net gains and losses: For rate and computation of tax in lieu of normal and surtax in case of net incomes of not less than $30,000, approximately, or in case of net incomes, excluding items of capital gain, capital loss, and capital deductions, of not less than $30,000, approximately, see section 101.

(d) Evasion of surtaxes by incorporation: For tax on corporations which accumulate surplus to evade surtax on stockholders, see sections 104 and 105.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 12, after the word "excess," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"And upon net income in excess of $1,500,000, in addition to the tax hereinbefore provided, 30 per cent of said excess."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the original purpose of a progressive income tax as I understand it was not only to provide revenue, but to prevent the concentration of the wealth of the whole country in the hands of a few families. After the amendment to the act of 1924 reducing the surtax on the last bracket from 40 per cent to 20 per cent the real purpose of the income-tax feature of our law was destroyed by limiting the tax to 20 per cent and stopping at $100,000, net income tax.

It has been pointed out in the course of general debate on this bill that a small percentage of taxpayers pay under this provision. That is being constantly used preparatory to a determined effort to abolish entirely our income-tax feature of the law.

Now, I submit that considering the previous income-tax laws we have had which went as high as 60 per cent at the top bracket, and 40 per cent in the 1924 act, that my amendment of 30 per cent on net income in excess of $1,500,000 income is by no means far fetched, radical, or removed from the very purpose of an income-tax policy.

Why, gentlemen, it was said before the committee when we had the 1924 tax bill under consideration that the excess surtax prevented these very few men from investing. I say that if the future development of this country depends entirely on four or five men, we indeed have a sad future before us. The wealth of this country was built up before we had these multimillionaires, with million-dollar incomes, and unless the Congress does something to prevent the accumulation and centralization of wealth you will have all the wealth of the country in the hands of a few families within the next 75 years.

It is our duty to legislate not only for 1928 but for 1958 and 1978, and if we are lax in permitting the real purpose of a progressive income tax to be destroyed, the responsibility will be ours. If we put a tax of only 30 per cent on the amounts in excess of $1,500,000 income, I submit that that is not an unfair burden of taxation. You have to guard very jealously our income-tax feature of the law. Indeed, as I said before, I believe that very soon there will be a determined effort made to abolish the whole income-tax system. I do not believe that will be possible as long as the genial gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] heads the committee, but I bespeak his help in this instance. I hope he will support my amendment, though in that perhaps I am hoping against hope. If the income tax means anything, we should at least catch something on incomes above $1,500,000. I do not go as high as the 40 per cent feature of the 1924 law.

I do not go up to the 60 per cent, but only 30 per cent. That is only 10 per cent more on incomes in excess of $1,500,000. I do not see how any Member can refuse to support this amendment if he believes in the income tax law. Of course, if a Member does not believe in the income tax law, and he wants to bring about a sales tax or a per capita tax, that is a different thing, and to him I can not make any appeal, because we differ on fundamentals; but if you are sincere in your belief in an income tax law, not only for the purpose of raising revenue but for the purpose of accomplishing its real intent, viz, to prevent the centralization of wealth, then I submit my amendment for your serious consideration, and I hope that the committee will vote with me.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and am compelled to ask that it be rejected by the committee. This amendment was not considered before the committee at all, or anything of its nature. We have not had any proposition of that kind up for consideration whatever. While at one time I voted for higher rates, the Congress through the other body, which I can not mention, refused to make any provision for doing away with tax-exempt securities, and produced an unfair situation by reason thereof. Under the circumstances I am compelled to oppose the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not plead surprise in a surtax of 30 per cent on incomes of $1,500,000? There is nothing new involved in my amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have had that before. Of course it is a jump, it would not be properly graded in that way, and while the rates are not put in the provision in the bill, they are just the same as last year. The maximum surtax rate was 20 per cent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not want to say that my amendment involves anything so novel that the committee is taken by surprise.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee did not consider anything of that kind or any proposition like it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and, on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA), there were—ayes 37, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13 TAX ON CORPORATIONS

(a) Rate of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation, a tax of 11½ per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits against net income provided in section 26.

(b) Exempt corporations: For corporations exempt from tax, see section 103.

(c) Improper accumulation of surplus: For tax on corporations which accumulate surplus to evade surtax on stockholders, see sections 104 and 105.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"(b) Taxable income not more than $15,000: If the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 26 is not more than $15,000, then, in lieu of the rate prescribed in subsection (a), the rate shall be—

"(1) Five per cent if such amount is not more than $7,000.

"(2) Seven per cent if such amount is more than $7,000 and not more than $12,000.

"(3) Nine per cent if such amount is not more than $12,000 and not more than $15,000."

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am offering an amendment which I believe will meet with the approval of 90 per cent of the membership of the House. I have talked with a great many Republicans and Democrats, and I have not been able to find a single one who does not think that the smaller corporations with earnings of from $15,000 or $20,000 a year down ought to get some relief in their tax for several reasons, and especially for the reason that in their business they are in competition with partnerships of similar capital and earnings. The Secretary of the Treasury in his testimony before the committee recommended that we adopt the policy of giving such corporations the alternative, where there were 10 stockholders or less, of making a return as a partnership or as a corporation. The committee gave that suggestion very extensive consideration, and if you will let your mind run along for a moment you will see that that plan is not workable, that a graduated tax will accomplish the same purpose in a better way than by permitting them the alternative method of making returns.

This amendment provides that where a corporation has an income of $10,000 or less the rate of tax on it shall be 5 per cent instead of 11½ per cent; that where a corporation has $15,000 of income or less, but over $10,000, the tax shall be 7 per cent instead of 11½ per cent; and where a corporation has $18,000 or less, but more than $15,000, the rate shall be 9 per cent instead of 11½ per cent; and that where the income is over $18,000 the 11½ per cent shall apply just as it does in this bill. Therefore, the only change that this amendment makes is to give to the smaller corporations an advantage in a rate over larger corporations, that is to say, with larger incomes. There is no new principle involved at all. It is the same principle exactly as is applied to individual incomes. I heard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] say the other day, that one corporation with a capital of $100,000 might make only $10,000, while another corporation with a capital of $10,000 might make $10,000 income, and that we would be treating both of them the same. So are you in this bill. The 11½ per cent applies. He says we ought to fix it on the valuation. We tried that on the excess profits, and we made a failure of it.

I say to you frankly if you place it on the valuation, the capital investment, the excess-profits tax is the prettiest piece of taxation possible. But it was a failure, could not be administered because you could not ascertain the value of the corporations. We have had some experience with trying to value the railroads for the past 12 years, and we have not completed the valuation yet. I do not know whether you want to give the small corporations a larger amount of relief than the larger corporations, but the small corporations constitute 70 per cent. This amendment affects 70 per cent of the corporations in the United States, as I recall it. Is that correct, Mr. Beeman? I do not recall the exact percentage. It is around 70 per cent of the corporations of this country which have an income of $18,000 and less, so this amendment I propose will reduce the corporation tax lower than proposed by this bill on 70 per cent of the corporations of the country.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I ask for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman state what is the estimate of loss of revenue that would occur from the adoption of his amendment?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have that. The additional loss of revenue, according to the Treasury Department, will be $24,000,000, so I am informed by Mr. McCoy.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Compared with this bill?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will.

Mr. ALDRICH. Has the gentleman figured the tax on a corporation of an income of $14,900 over an income of over $15,000?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That provision is taken care of in another provision of this bill. They have no trouble about that, because we have a provision in this bill now that a corporation with an income of $28,500 will not pay more than one with an income of $25,000. Mr. Beaman will show it to you.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not know that I got the gentleman's amendment clear. Some other gentlemen seem to have the same idea I have. Does the gentleman's amendment apply to corporations with a capital stock of $18,000——

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It does not have anything to do with the capital stock. I can not help the gentleman's inference——

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have tried to explain it, and I will do it again; that where you have an income—whether you have a billion dollars of capital stock invested, or one dollar—the amendment which I propose will tax a corporation which has an income of $18,000 and less, down to $15,000, 9 per cent, and from $15,000 to $10,000, between that bracket, 7 per cent. Anything less than $10,000 would pay 5 per cent. Now, I think that ought to be very plain. That is all it means.

I do not know whether you want to invoke the same rule of equity, the same rule of justice in reference to corporations you do in reference to individuals, give the little fellow a little the best of it. Take the man of $10,000 and less of income, we do not levy any surtax on him at all. The highest tax is 5 per cent. If it is a just system and equitable in regard to individuals, if it has worked well, why not apply it to small corporations? I am going to listen for that answer with some interest. The principle is the same, it is not faulty in principle. It is a mere question of method. Now, the Treasury does not want this done; it does not want the surtax principle applied to incomes of individuals. I can understand that. I can understand how Mr. Mellon does not like this tax for two reasons. He does not like this principle applied to individuals. He does not want this principle extended to small corporations. All of his corporations are large, and, naturally, he is not for this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will.

Mr. LUCE. Did not the Secretary come before the committee or send in a recommendation that small corporations should receive attention?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, yes.

Mr. LUCE. That is one of the five basic proposals in his statement.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Giving them a privilege of making a report as a corporation or as a partnership.

Mr. LUCE. On that point will the gentleman inform the House whether his proposal takes into account in any way a competition between partnership and a small corporation, and does it go toward putting them on an equal footing?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It has this advantage over the present law: Suppose a corporation is doing business across the street from a partnership. If both of them make $10,000, both of them would pay 5 per cent under my provision. Under the present law it is 13½ per cent and 11½ per cent in this bill on the corporation, and 5 per cent on the partnership. Under my amendment any corporation having income of $10,000 or less would pay 5 per cent. Any individual or partnership would pay about 4 per cent plus.

The partnership just across the street that has $15,000 income would pay about 5¼ per cent under my amendment, if adopted; a corporation that has $15,000 income or less but over $10,000 would be taxed 7 per cent, but in the original bill it would pay 11½ per cent.

Mr. LUCE. Why not equalize them, put them on the same basis?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You can not absolutely equalize a partnership and a corporation.

Mr. LUCE. Did not the Treasury Department recommend that?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, not by any means.

Mr. LUCE. It was the proposal I called to the attention of the committee years ago.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If you try to work it out, you will find that it has no sense in it.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. If I have an investment of a thousand dollars in a corporation that makes $5,000, and also have an investment of a thousand dollars that makes $75,000, would it be fair to apply your amendment in that case?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Well, I will say there is no man in the world who can draw a perfectly just tax law. I am trying to reach something that is a little better than the present bill.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. But you are making a distinction between the two corporations. If I have $1,000 invested in each why should I pay 11½ per cent on one and 5 per cent on the other?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Well, 80 per cent of the stock of corporations is owned by men in the higher brackets.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I just want to suggest that the gentleman's proposition is more equitable than that of the Secretary of the Treasury, inasmuch as the Secretary's proposition applies only to a corporation with less than $25,000 which has less than 10 stockholders.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to argue this matter further. I think it is perfectly clear. I do not know whether the committee wants to favor it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This is the most important amendment that could be offered. It is fundamental.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman says he is trying to equalize the tax on corporations and partnerships. Where an individual in business makes as much as $50,000 profit, while the corporation makes a million dollars profit, the corporation has only 11½ per cent to pay under this bill, but the individual conducting the same kind of business, perhaps, that the corporation is conducting begins to run up into the high brackets of the surtax and must pay a higher tax. If he happens to have a substantial income from other sources he is pushed much higher in the surtax brackets and must pay a very much higher rate of tax than does the corporation. What is fair about that?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No. The gentleman is making a mistake. You have to run to $100,000 before you get to the 11½ per cent. Read the bill. A man paying a tax on $100,000 pays only 11½ per cent surtax.

Mr. TILSON. But even so the adding normal tax makes it 16½ per cent.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes. That is on $100,000. The gentleman said $50,000 was away up yonder higher, which is a mistake.

Mr. TILSON. Is not $68,000 the dividing figure?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I believe so.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. What was the objection to the gentleman's proposition in the committee?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] points out to me that $48,000 is the dividing line.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That means 11½ per cent.

Mr. TILSON. The surtax on $48,000 is 12 per cent——

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If you add the normal and the surtax together. Look at the tax levies.

They attend to it. The bill says how much it will be. Pick up your bill and look at it. I know that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] can not read and can not understand it. [Laughter.] He is the man you are getting the information from.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If you will give me a chance, I will read it to you.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, I know; but I can not yield now.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. All you have to do is to read it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If anyone will turn to the bill, on page 12 he will see that there is $11,660 upon net incomes of $100,000. How much per cent is that? Eleven and sixty-six one-hundredths per cent, if I know how to calculate. He did not know that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is only the surtax.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I said the surtax. That is all I mentioned.

Now, Doctor JACOBSTEIN, you asked me why the committee did not adopt it. I submitted it to the conference on the Ways and Means Committee. They believed a good deal in the value of the suggestion, but the Secretary of the Treasury did not believe in it; and, yielding to his judgment, the committee naturally did not adopt it. But I say, if you desire to give any consideration to the small corporation as compared with the large corporation, if you want partially to equalize the partnership and the corporation, this is a step in that direction. No harm is done, and no principle is violated. There is no innovation except as the application is made to individuals. If the little fellow pays a tax that he is less able to pay, the great corporation should not alone be allowed the privilege. That is all I desire to do in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM and Mr. LUCE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. LUCE. My justification for addressing myself to this amendment is that, at any rate in part, responsibility attaches to me for having started the controversy. I called attention to the subject three or four years ago when I offered an amendment that was thrown out on a point of order. The proposal of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will not best accomplish the purpose he has in mind and the purpose which the committee has in mind to achieve in any way.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is partly in error on that. It is true the gentleman tried to get the committee to adopt the amendment. Ever since I have been a member of the Ways and Means Committee I have been trying to get something done for the small corporation, but I wanted something done that was right, and this is not right.

Mr. LUCE. I do not desire to monopolize credit, but simply to point out that the particular form of change which the Secretary of the Treasury recommended to the committee was substantially that which originally I offered as an amendment and which was thrown out on a point of order. I thank the committee for the concession it has made by increasing the exemption for corporations, and I speak simply to justify myself in objecting to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] by reason of the fact that it does not in any way meet what should be the prime purpose of legislation of this sort, namely, to equalize the competition between partnerships and small corporations. His proposal has no logic in it. There is no principle in the way that he would apply the remedy. It is the wrong remedy, in my judgment, and I should hope that rather than adopt a wrong remedy we would at least accept the partial remedy that the committee has recommended.

Up to the time of the present proposal the lines crossed in this matter of competition at about $25,000. Now, I understand it will be nearly $50,000. Below the crossing point corporations are at a disadvantage in comparison with partnerships. Remedy should be provided for the reason that while a tax bill may not with any logic attempt to meet particular hardships it may well take into account the effect upon the general conditions of business. It would, I think, be universally admitted that the development of the corporation system of doing business in the last generation has been of great benefit to the community and that anything which discourages the chartering of small business enterprises is to be deprecated.

The present situation makes it unwise and imprudent for a small enterprise to take out a charter, because it will be penalized so heavily by the tax law. Inasmuch as we ought to encourage rather than discourage the incorporating of small businesses, I had hoped the committee would see fit to accept the advice of the Secretary in this particular. Possibly in the next revenue bill they may come to that point, but at present it strikes me we would more wisely accept the partial remedy proposed by the committee than embark upon the quite illogical and unscientific program suggested by the gentleman from Texas. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The committee resumed its session.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, this is the first gun fired upon the integrity of this bill. From now on my good friend, my genial friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER], will be making proposal after proposal by which eventually he hopes to reach the $400,000,000 tax reduction he announced to the people this fall that he was going to give them. This is the beginning of it. This only adds an item of $24,000,000 to our tax reduction. Instead of $232,000,000 of surplus he is going to spend, including this item, $256,000,000, and a little later on he is going to take up the tax on automobiles and add $33,000,000 more, and so on all the way down the line.

His specious argument in favor of this thing is that he is doing something in the interest of the small corporations. I think I may say without violating the ethics of the procedure before the committee that the committee considered this matter. We discussed it very thoroughly, and the committee, of course, did not make this recommendation. It was the desire of the committee to do something in the interest of the small corporation. But I do not know why Members so generally seem to forget that after all a corporation is nothing but individuals. They talk about corporations as if the corporation was some entity outside of the people who own the stock of the corporation. They speak about a corporation on the one hand and a partnership on the other. A corporation is nothing but stockholders, and it is the individuals who compose the corporation who are, of course, concerned in the amount of taxation. Theoretically the tax is collected from the corporation but it is the individual stockholder who pays it, and the individual stockholder pays it whether he is in business as an individual or as a stockholder in a corporation.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] tells you he applies his 9 per cent rate upon a corporation having an income of $12,000 and not more than $15,000. As a matter of fact that corporation has an income of $18,000, because he provides in the beginning of his amendment that—is not more than so and so, and section 26 provides for the $3,000 exemption to be given to corporations which have incomes of $25,000 or less.

I did not like the proposal of the Treasury Department, because it involved an option. The provision was that a corporation might make its return as a partnership if it saw fit to do so. It left the privilege, the option, and the choice to the corporation to file as a partnership if that method happened to bring it a lesser tax, and I do not like that. I do not think that is good legislation. I do not think we ought to have options in the bill or in the law. I do not believe in the theory of granting options in the law to taxpayers to choose one method one year and then another method another year, as it happens to suit with reference to the amount of tax that might be collected for a particular year.

My attention has been called to partnerships which would like to file their returns as corporations. The members of stock exchanges are not permitted to operate as corporations; they must operate as partnerships, and they would like the privilege of filing their returns as corporations. If we permit the one thing, if we give the option or the choice to corporations on the one hand, of course, we should give it to partnerships on the other.

Now, my friend says that Mr. Mellon—and, of course, Mr. Mellon is always the target of his guns—does not like surtaxes, and still Mr. Mellon approved the present law which provides for the payment of surtaxes by individuals. The gentleman says Mr. Mellon does not care about small corporations, and still Mr. Mellon recommended that small corporations or the corporations with incomes of $25,000 or less be allowed to file as partnerships.

Mr. COLLIER. Provided they had only 10 stockholders.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. Which is the viciousness of the proposition.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The small corporation with either a small income or a small list of stockholders, or both, I presume; but Mr. Mellon recommended that corporations with incomes of $25,000 or less should have the privilege of filing as partnerships, and that would have created a loss in the Treasury of $35,000,000, $11,000,000 more than what the gentleman from Texas proposes.

The committee, after long consideration—and, I dare say, very thorough consideration—decided that the better way was to enlarge the exemption for these smaller corporations.

Mr. COLLIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman does not mean to convey the impression to the House that it took the committee a long time to decide they were not going to give this exemption to the corporations only that had 10 stockholders or less?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not remember how long the consideration was on the particular question of the 10 stockholders.

Mr. COLLIER. That was the gist of the whole thing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But in section 26 in this bill we have increased the exemption from $2,000 to $3,000 for corporations having an income of $25,000 or less, and this makes an actual saving in money of taxes for each year for such corporations of $115.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman whether there was any limit as to the amount the corporation made, or was it only a limit as to the number of stockholders?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There were two proposals in it. I thought we had made that clear. First, an income of $25,000 or less, and secondly, stockholders of 10 or less; but you are not basing your tax here upon anything but the income of the corporation.

This subject of a graduated tax was discussed very thoroughly here when we repealed the excess-profits tax, and the big argument made then—and I think the large argument now even against the present law—is that the tax is not based upon the capitalization. A corporation with a capital of $100,000 and an income of $25,000 will be treated upon exactly the same basis, will pay exactly the same taxes under the graduated system proposed by the gentleman, as would a corporation with a capitalization of $1,000,000 and an income of $25,000. Of course, I will concede that that is an extension of the present flat rate law, but when you try to graduate the tax, when you try to make steps of it so as to make it dependent upon the amount of income by gradations, you are simply making more vicious the system which now exists, under which we pay no attention to the capitalization of the corporation but tax it only upon its income.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman tell the committee whether the Committee on Ways and Means gave any consideration to the original proposal in that particular, which was to the effect that the election to be taxed as partnerships might be made on the unanimous consent of all the stockholders with no specification of number, the idea being that only a small corporation could secure unanimous consent.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think we considered that in this way. I do not believe that proposal means anything, because if the management of a corporation can induce its stockholders to believe it is to their interest, that they are going to pay less taxes by filing as a partnership, of course, they will get the consent of the stockholders. So I do not think that makes a proper basis at all. They will consent if it is to their interest; they will consent if there is less tax. Personally, I do not think that would be a proper basis for the differentiation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, those of us who favor this legislation will have to determine right now whether we are going to begin to emasculate this bill.

This provision adds $24,000,000 to the amount of reduction upon a system and upon a theory which does not come here with the recommendation either of the Committee on Ways and Means or of any of the administrative officers of the Government. It comes here upon the motion of a very distinguished gentleman, but I do not think he has thought it out quite sufficiently to give us any guaranty as to whether it is going to work out equitably and fairly to the corporations which are involved; but it does mean $24,000,000 of reductions, and to that extent will emasculate the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. GIFFORD rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to know if there was any gentleman on the other side who wanted to be heard, because, of course, we are entitled to close the discussion.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman can move to close debate in five minutes and close it himself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The trouble is I do not like to have both five minutes used on this side.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that the gentleman from Iowa ought to presume on which side I am in this controversy, and I do not believe, as the last speaker suggested, that there are to be many amendments offered to the bill. This tax bill is too difficult for most of us to offer amendments, but there are a few simple sections we all understand, and this is one of them.

The Treasury made a recommendation relating to certain small corporations that might profitably be changed into partnership form, and those who have had personal experience well know that many corporations are forced to the partnership method of doing business on account of the high rate of tax.

Certainly, most of us who have had any personal experience or interest in small corporations must realize that this 5, 7, 9 per cent provision will be of great benefit and encouragement to continue under the corporation plan, which has many advantages, especially in the diffusion of ownership.

The argument put forth by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HULL] is that if he has a share in a large corporation it ought to be treated like a small corporation. There is not much equity in the whole bill, so far as that goes, and equity can not be secured under such complicated situations; this is a practical situation.

You say you will lose much revenue by this provision; you do not know. Many who are doing business as small corporations will certainly depart from that method, and we will lose a great deal of revenue. Therefore it is pretty hard to estimate the loss.

Now, the real objections is that it is not desired to begin a graduated tax for corporations. The committee is not unanimous, and we acknowledge the principle involved. It should be applied to small corporations having a very limited number of stockholders, because of the difficulty of securing the consent of all stockholders for a change.

From a practical standpoint we may lose revenue if we do not press this amendment. Farmers who raise crops, doing business as small corporations—and I have one in my mind—would convey the property to individuals if the harvest promised large profits. Therefore I am speaking from the practical standpoint, for the Government as well as the small corporations forced to the partnership method, to save the large assessment of 11½ per cent. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if there are no other speakers on the other side I will move to close debate in five minutes and occupy that five minutes myself.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Go ahead.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate in five minutes on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is on this one amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying for years to get something done for the small corporations, but I want something logical, something that will not plague us in the future in regard to what ought to be done in other respects.

The committee did do something for the small corporations by raising the exemption $1,000. I think I can say that my views on this subject have been known for a long time, having been expressed publicly on the floor and in the committee and elsewhere when I tried to have the exemption raised $2,000; but that was not done.

We are presented now with this illogical and unjust method of remedying the differences between small and large corporations. So far as the justice of it is concerned, as soon as the corporation gets two or three dollars over the limit mentioned in the proposal the rate of taxation would rise 50 per cent. I do not think the committee wants any such graduation as that.

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the same principle that you apply to individuals.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does not make any such difference as that. In this case we can not apply the principle of graduated tax to corporations because it applies the principle of a graduated tax twice.

Corporations are, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has just said, made up of individuals. We can not grade the tax twice. We can not stop right here. If we are going to apply the principle of graduated tax, we have got to go on up with it. There is no reason for stopping at $15,000. I do not know upon what theory this proposition can be justified. It is not for the benefit of the small corporation alone, it is for the benefit as well of the large corporations; if the total amount of the net income for any particular year happens to go down to this sum it applies to the large corporation as well as to the small corporation. If you apply the system of graduated tax to corporations you have got to go on up with it. The proposition is illogical.

It is true, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has pointed out, that small corporations have not got the relief that they ought to have. But it is not my fault; I have been working for it ever since I have been in Congress to give them more relief, both in the committee and on the floor.

What we want is a logical method which can be used and will not plague us in the future.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. HAWLEY. This defines the small corporation as one having a small income. A million-dollar corporation might have at the end of the year a very small net profit. The proposal is not one affecting the small corporations as such, but rather affects all corporations whether large or small whose income in any year is $25,000 or less.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Under this bill they will pay 11½ per cent on it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Oregon is correct. But as the gentleman from Illinois said, here is a proposition which increases the amount allowed by the bill by $24,000,000. Where will we stop if we go on in that way? Before we get through we will have a bill such as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] wants, of $400,000,000 reduction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The provisions of this act increases the exemption of corporations having $25,000 income from $2,000 to $3,000, and it gives relief to corporations to the extent of $12,000,000. The committee thought that was pretty fair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; and it amounts to a great deal more than it seems on the face of it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] observed, a moment ago, that if a corporation with a capital stock of $1,000,000 should have a bad year and have only $15,000 of income, it would have to pay 11½ per cent of this bill; that if we adopt this amendment it would get off with 7 per cent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Oregon was correct about that, but I do not see the point of the gentleman from Texas. This is simply undertaking to apply a graded tax to corporations, which results in a double gradation of income, because the stockholders are subsequently taxed upon the dividends they receive from the corporation. Unfortunately this gradation has no logical basis, because it is not based upon the income of the stockholders.

Mr. HALE. Is the gentleman opposed to a greater tax on corporations under any circumstances?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In a general way I am, yes; because, as I have said, it results in a double gradation of tax and the double gradation is not worked out in accordance with the net income of each stockholder. It is worked out first on the corporation and then it is worked out on the net income of the individual. There is where it ought to be worked out, and it is the only proper place for gradation. I think the amendment should be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. GARNER of Texas and Mr. GREEN of Iowa were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers announced the result.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the yeas are 136 and the nays 132.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the count. I had 129 originally, and I think 6 or 8 more went through after that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that as he understood the gentleman he announced the count as it was given. There was some confusion, and there is a possibility of a misunderstanding.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Under the rules of the House this question was submitted to tellers, and the tellers have made the report, and the Chair has announced the result; and, therefore, the matter is concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The result has been announced.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair announced the adoption of the amendment.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JACOBSTEIN of New York:

AUTOMATIC REDUCTION ON ACCOUNT OF SURPLUS

"(b) Automatic reduction on account of surplus.

"(1) Proclamation of surplus. If at the beginning of any fiscal year of the Government the President finds that the ordinary receipts of the Government during the preceding fiscal year (plus back tax collections over refunds) exceed the expenditures during such year chargeable against such receipts, he shall determine the amount of such surplus, and if he finds that the entire amount of such surplus will not be needed for expenditure he shall so proclaim, and in such proclamation state the amount of such surplus which he finds will not be needed for expenditure, hereinafter called "excess surplus." In determining the amount needed for expenditure and the expenditures during the preceding fiscal year, the President shall take into account, in respect of reduction of the public debt, only such amounts as are by law required to be devoted to such purpose. No such proclamation shall be made unless the excess surplus is more than $75,000,000.

"(2) Reduction of rate. When such proclamation has been made, then for each $25,000,000 by which the excess surplus exceeds $50,000,000 the fraction ¼ shall be subtracted from the rate otherwise applicable, including the rate for the calendar year preceding the year in which the proclamation is made.

"(3) Limit of reduction. In no case shall this subsection be applied so as to make the corporation tax rate of tax less than the rate specified in subsection (a) minus the fraction 3/2.

"(4) Year preceding year of proclamation. The benefits of the rate reduction provided in this subsection, in the case of the calendar year preceding the year in which the proclamation is made, shall be allowed to the corporation in a similar manner to, and subject to the same restrictions and limitations as, the 25 per cent allowance provided in Title XII of the revenue act of 1924.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday I stated I would vote for the tax reduction but I elaborated upon an amendment which I promised to introduce to-day. The purpose of the amendment is simply this. It directs the Treasurer of the United States to apply a portion of the surplus to a further reduction of the tax, instead of using it all in the retirement of the public debt. That is all there is to the amendment. At the present time whenever there is a surplus beyond immediate financial needs of the Government the treasurer at his own discretion may and does use that fund to retire the public debt; and owing to the fact that there has been a variation in the amount of the surplus from year to year, to the extent of approximately $2,000,000 in the last five years, I contend that the Congress of the United States should direct the Treasurer of the United States as to how part of that surplus shall be used.

I call the attention of my Democratic friends to one phase of my amendment which might disturb their minds unless explained. It does not give the Treasurer of the United States more power. It rather restricts his power. It restricts his power in that he can not use the surplus except by direction of the Congress of the United States. It is a limitation, rather than an expansion of the power of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Heretofore he has been applying it to the debt without authority?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Not without authority but he has been using it in that way because we never have directed the Treasurer of the United States as to what he shall do with the surplus. If my amendment became part of the law, the Treasurer of the United States would then be compelled to use part of the surplus to a further reduction in the corporation tax rates.

Mr. BROWNING rose.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I shall yield to you in a moment. I want to address myself now to the Republicans who raised the objection to the amendment on Saturday that it would involve a refinancing operation. I admit that the passage of this amendment would involve a refinancing operation immediately after the first of the year, but that ought not to frighten any member of this House. Refinancing operations have become a well-established practice in the Treasury department. I maintain that the Congress of the United States ought to go on record now and establish the fiscal policy of telling the Treasurer of the United States what he shall do with at least part of the surplus when it rises beyond the needs of the Government to maintain the Government, after making allowance for the loss in revenues resulting from the tax reductions called for in this pending revenue bill.

As I said on Saturday, the reduction in the corporation income tax would benefit 3,000,000 stockholders in the United States, and more people would be affected, therefore, beneficially by this amendment than are now receiving benefits in this proposed bill under the individual income-tax provision of the bill. I want you to look upon the corporation tax proposed in this bill as affecting no less than 3,000,000 people who are shareholders in corporations, whether they be large or small corporations.

The bugaboo about the administrative difficulties of this amendment, it seems to me, has no foundation. We are so familiar with refinancing operations in the Treasury of the United States that there is no particular criticism that justifiably can be made against my amendment. It establishes a perfectly sound principle, namely, that the Congress reserves to itself the right to determine what shall be done with the taxes which are collected from the people of the United States.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. BROWNING. Does the gentleman think we could delegate authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to fix these schedules?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I do not delegate to the Secretary power to fix the rate. The rates are specifically set forth in my amendment. The Secretary has to carry out our orders. We direct the Treasury to reduce the corporation-tax rates, depending upon the size of the surplus. The Secretary will have less authority under my amendment than he has at the present moment. He has used $2,000,000,000 of the surplus to reduce the public debt. Do you want him to retain that authority?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I can understand the position of a man who wants the Treasury to use the surplus to reduce the debt.

Mr. BLANTON. But everything he does will be automatically done and not in a discretionary way. Is not that true?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Yes. [Applause.]

The membership of this House and my own constituency know my sympathies are with the man or woman of small means. I have always labored and voted for tax relief and for liberal exemptions for the people of small income.

I will not be misunderstood, therefore, in advocating this additional relief for holders of corporation stocks. As a matter of fact, as I pointed out in my speech of Saturday last, the wide distribution of stock ownership is one of the remarkable economic developments in our country in the last two decades. In my home city—Rochester, N. Y.—there live 20,000 people who earn one or more shares of stock in a few of our largest corporations, like the Eastman Kodak Co. and the Rochester Gas & Electric Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is simply an amendment for providing that in prosperous years we shall not have any surplus in the Treasury. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas a short time ago—and declared carried by the Chair, although I do not think it was carried myself—was an amendment providing that if we should not have a very prosperous year there would not be a surplus but a deficit. This amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is to make certain that in prosperous years we shall not have any surplus.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In prosperous years is the time we ought to pay off the debt.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Why have a tax reduction at all; why not apply it all to a reduction of the public debt?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think that needs any answer.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Is it your answer that you believe the retirement of the public debt gets votes next November? [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I like to hear the gentleman applauded, but on this particular occasion, for some reason, there was only a little applause. We have allowed a certain sum in reduction of the debt. We have allowed what we thought would leave a working surplus in the Treasury if there is not too much appropriation for certain big items. That is the reason why we kept it this way. We do not propose to wipe the surplus off for the benefit of the corporations.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. FREAR. What has been the misfortune in the country in having $2,000,000,000 stricken from the public debt that accumulated interest otherwise?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It has been a great benefit instead of a misfortune in that we were able to reduce the interest, and, in fact, if we had not done it we would not be able to make the reduction we are endeavoring to make to-day, because we reduced the amount of interest by reason of its application. Now, the converse of the proposition which the gentleman has stated on Saturday we thought ridiculous; namely, that if there is a shortage the corporations could be assessed. I see for some reason or other he has not put in his amendment; he has not offered it. There is no proposition to assess corporations in the future.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. That is taken care of. We have provided for a working surplus of $75,000,000 before this amendment could be set in operation, so there could be no deficit.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am astounded that the gentleman is willing to use $75,000,000. The steel corporations and automobile corporations think they ought to have a far greater amount in cash to carry on their operations, and they are very much smaller than those of the Government. What we should do is, in prosperous times like we have now, when the corporations are making great sums, when we are having prosperous times, we should apply our surplus to a reduction of the public debt. [Applause.] I can hardly believe this amendment is going to receive enough support that I should proceed further.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my colleague from New York. I am very sorry my learned and scholarly colleague lent himself to offer such an amendment. Now, I for one, am against a reduction of taxes and would apply all the surplus to a reduction of the public debt. My stand on the 1924 and 1926 bills speaks for itself. There is not a man in the United States to whom I would grant so much power as is given in the amendment of the gentleman from New York to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. In what particular; what power?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will come to that. We have delegated power to a Tariff Commission to raise and lower tariffs. The gentleman would now give power to the Secretary of the Treasury to so fix a flexible tax on corporations and, as the gentleman himself says, which would affect 3,000,000 of stockholders, 3,000,000 of people. The only way to use surplus under existing law is to apply the money for the reduction of the public debt; it can not be used any other way. When we shall have no national debt, we will provide for its disposition; but I venture to say that Congress will never delegate that power to any head of an executive department. If the gentleman would give the power to the Secretary of the Treasury on his own power to say to the corporations, "Now, we are saving money this year, we are retrenching in all departments; I am going to let you cut a mellon, we will reduce your tax"; what a power he would be in the country.

Why, the Secretary of the Treasury would have more power than all of Congress. Imagine ticket jobbers, the manipulators in the stock market getting in on an intended reduction. I have never heard of anything so absurd. It shakes the very fundamentals of our form of government. As the gentleman knows, no doubt, Congress is the only power authorized to raise taxes, and it was purposely given to the legislative branch in order to have a check on the executive branch. The gentleman by his amendment would relinquish that and give it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. When the Secretary of the Treasury makes his recommendation as to how much revenue we shall raise he makes an estimate of what the reduction should be, and on that he raises the taxes. We are doing it to-day. Does not the Treasury of the United States exercise this wide latitude to-day as to how these amounts of the surplus may be used, if it does exist at the end of the fiscal year, this year, or next?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But it is entirely within our power, within the power of Congress, to act on the recommendation as we see fit.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I explicitly tell him what he must do or not do with the surplus.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is nothing more dangerous to our form of government than to do just that.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Simply saying it is so does not make it so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can not understand the gentleman's attitude and that of colleagues on his side, who are generally against centralization of power. You might as well abolish Congress entirely and have a commission form of government—Mr. Mellon, Mr. Hoover, and the president of the New York Stock Exchange. I have never heard anything like it. It will not accomplish what the gentleman seeks at all, but it will simply give that enormous power to one man in the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Has it not been asserted here that he now has that power?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; and therefore the gentleman would seek to make it absolute, and say, "Go ahead."

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I would restrict him as to the use of the surplus. That is all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The only way to reduce taxes is for Congress to do so, according to the Constitution.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. You would get more reduction if my amendment were passed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think so.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Why are you interested in tax reduction?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How does the gentleman know I am interested in tax reduction; I am interested in the reduction of the public debt first.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. You just said so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman had heard my remarks on Saturday, he would know that I said the taxes should not be reduced more than $100,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, of course, every Member of the House must realize that this is a fundamental departure from anything we have ever had heretofore in our fiscal system. I just want to call attention to one phase of the proposed amendment.

The President is to determine a surplus. How is he to determine it? The gentleman has fixed the rule. He says that if the President "finds that the ordinary receipts of the Government during the preceding fiscal year exceed the expenditures during such year chargeable against such receipts," he shall proclaim the amount of such "excess surplus"; and he also says in "determining the amount needed for expenditures and for expenditures during the preceding fiscal year the President shall take into account, in respect to the public debt, only such amounts as are by law required to be devoted to such purposes." In other words, in order to determine whether there will be a surplus the President of the United States can do nothing but take the ordinary receipts and expenditures authorized against them and on that basis proclaim the existence of a surplus.

He is to have no discretion. If any emergency arises and he knows it is going to be necessary to have $100,000,000 for some great purpose for which there is not yet any authorization of law, and he knows when Congress convenes either in regular or special session that he will have to ask for an appropriation for that emergency, he must not take that into account. He must simply automatically perform his duty; he must merely take the items for which the expenditures are provided by law, and then if there is a surplus he must devote it to the reduction of taxes on corporations.

Now, I think I have as much interest in the business operations and business concerns of the country as any other Member of this House. I have lived all my life in a large city, and my sympathies are there. But to give the Secretary of the Treasury and the President the authority to take the people's money and use it without any action on the part of Congress itself for the reduction of corporation taxes is beyond anything that ever occurred to me to propose.

It simply shows what dangers may arise if we adopt such proposals as this right here in the committee. The gentleman has never proposed this plan to the Committee on Ways and Means, and has never submitted it to the administration itself, and has never obtained the views, so far as I know, of anybody who is responsible in this administration; but he comes here and proposes to introduce this revolutionary measure right here on the floor of the House and take from the Congress the determination of what shall be done with the money derived from the people by taxes. I hope the committee—even in the flush of the recent victory by which were taken $24,000,000 more out of the surplus—even in the face of that victory I hope the committee will not make a further mistake and delegate to some one else the power to use the surplus, if there is any. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, there are two very vital objections to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN]. One is that it is, in a measure at least—I shall not stop to quarrel as to how much—a delegation of authority over revenue questions to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to that extent, however light it may be, or however great it may be, it is objectionable to my mind, because of the constitutional provision that revenue measures shall originate in the House of Representatives.

That is one reason why I could not give my support to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. There is another objection, not so fundamental, perchance, but it is of striking force, and that is, it is proposed to give the benefit of the entire surplus simply to one class of taxpayers. In other words, it is proposed to take the surplus, built up from all sources, from your tariff, from your individual income taxes, from your surtax, from your corporation tax, from all sources of revenue, and apply it for the benefit of one particular class of taxpayers, namely, the stockholders in the corporations.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did not the Democratic Party, as well as the Republican Party, go on record as favoring the creation of the Tariff Commission, which helps carry out the flexible provisions of the tariff law?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Democratic Party go on record in favor of the flexible tariff provisions?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did it not help in the establishment of the Tariff Commission which later was given that power?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Democratic Party has never gone on record as favoring the flexible provisions of the tariff act.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Did they not help to set in operation the Tariff Commission which finally resulted in operating the flexible provisions of the tariff law?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not remember what the record shows about the Tariff Commission, but so far as the flexible tariff provisions of the tariff act are concerned, I regard them as wholly unconstitutional, and I am not going to follow that bad example now.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Was not the Tariff Commission established long before the question arose as to the flexibility of the tariff law?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was.

Mr. CRISP. If the gentleman will yield, I am in perfect accord with him on this amendment, and the Democratic Members of the Ways and Means Committee voted against the flexible provisions of the tariff law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. DEDUCTIONS FROM GROSS INCOME

In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

(a) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, or property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.

(b) Interest: All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under this title.

(c) Taxes generally: Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year, except—

(1) Income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by the authority of the United States;

(2) So much of the income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by the authority of any foreign country or possession of the United States as is allowed as a credit against the tax under section 131; and

(3) Taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed. For the purpose of this subsection, estate, inheritance, legacy, and succession taxes accrue on the due date thereof, except as otherwise provided by the law of the jurisdiction imposing such taxes, and shall be allowed as a deduction only to the estate.

(d) Taxes of shareholder paid by corporation: The deduction for taxes allowed by subsection (c) shall be allowed to a corporation in the case of taxes imposed upon a shareholder of the corporation upon his interest as shareholder which are paid by the corporation without reimbursement from the shareholder, but in such cases no deduction shall be allowed the shareholder for the amount of such taxes.

(e) Losses by individuals: In the case of an individual, losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise—

(1) If incurred in trade or business; or

(2) If incurred in any transaction entered into for profit, though not connected with the trade or business; or

(3) Of property not connected with the trade or business, if the loss arises from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft.

(f) Losses by corporations: In the case of a corporation, losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

(g) Basis for determining loss: The basis for determining the amount of deduction for losses sustained, to be allowed under subsection (e) or (f), shall be the same as is provided in section 113 for determining the gain or loss from the sale or other disposition of property.

(h) Loss on sale of stock or securities: For disallowance of loss deduction in the case of sales of stock or securities where within 30 days before or after the date of the sale the taxpayer has acquired substantially identical property, see section 119.

(i) Net losses: The special deduction for net losses of prior years, to the extent provided in section 117.

(j) Bad debts: Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year (or, in the discretion of the commissioner, a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts); and when satisfied that a debt is recoverable only in part, the commissioner may allow such debt to be charged off in part.

(k) Depreciation: A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear, and tear of property used in the trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for obsolescence. In the case of improved real estate held by one person for life with remainder to another person, the deduction provided for in this subsection shall be equitably apportioned between the life tenant and the remainderman under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

(l) Depletion: In the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits, and timber, a reasonable allowance for depletion and for depreciation of improvements, according to the peculiar conditions in each case; such reasonable allowance in all cases to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deduction allowed by this subsection shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee. (For percentage depletion in case of oil and gas wells, see sec. 114(b) (3).)

(m) Basis for depreciation and depletion: The basis upon which depletion, exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be as provided in section 114.

(n) Charitable and other contributions: In the case of an individual, contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to or for the use of:

(1) the United States, any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes;

(2) any corporation, or trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual;

(3) the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act;

(4) posts or organizations of war veterans, or auxiliary units or societies of any such posts or organizations, if such posts, organizations, units, or societies are organized in the United States or any of its possessions, and if no part of their net earnings inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual; or

(5) a fraternal society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system, but only if such contibutions or gifts are to be used exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals; to an amount which in all the above cases combined does not exceed 15 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of the subsection. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. (For unlimited deduction if contributions and gifts exceed 90 per cent of the net income, see sec. 121.)

(o) Future expenses in case of casual sales of real property: In the case of a casual sale or other casual disposition of real property by an individual a reasonable allowance for future expense liabilities, incurred under the provisions of the contract under which such sale or other disposition was made, under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, including the giving of a bond, with such sureties and in such sum (not less than the estimated tax liability computed without the benefit of this subsection) as the commissioner may require, conditioned upon the payment (notwithstanding any statute of limitations) of the tax, computed without the benefit of this subsection, in respect of any amounts allowed as a deduction under this subsection and not actually expended in carrying out the provisions of such contract.

(p) Dividends received by corporations: In the case of a corporation, the amount received as dividends—

(1) From a domestic corporation, or

(2) From any foreign corporation when it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that more than 50 per cent of the gross income of such foreign corporation for the three-year period ending with the close of its taxable year preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the foreign corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under section 120.

The deduction allowed by this subsection shall not be allowed in respect of dividends received from a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, or from a corporation which under section 251 is taxable only on its gross income from sources within the United States by reason of its receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States.

(q) Cooperative apartments: Amounts paid by an individual taxpayer during the taxable year to a corporation which owns or leases an apartment building and operates it under the cooperative plan if—

(1) Such amounts are bona fide expended by the corporation in the same taxable year in payment of taxes allowable as deductions under subsection (c) of this section or in payment of interest on its bonds or on other indebtedness incurred by it in the acquisition, construction, of maintenance of such apartment building or in the acquisition of the land on which the building is located; and

(2) Such individual is the owner or lessee of an apartment in the building under a lease the term of which is 20 years or more, or under an agreement with the corporation, is entitled, by reason of stock ownership, to the use and occupancy of such apartment for a like period, and

(3) No part of the net earnings of the corporation inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual other than an owner or lessee of an apartment in such building or one entitled by reason of stock ownership to the use and occupancy of any such apartment.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN: On page 26, after line 11, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"(r) Medical, surgical, hospital, or funeral expenses: The actual and necessary expenses paid by the head of a family for himself, or for any dependent member of the family, including only spouse or children, for medical, surgical, hospital, or funeral services not exceeding $1,000 for any individual person in any separate tax year, all such payments to be allowed and deducted only at the usual and ordinary rates in such cases and the commissioner is empowered to judge as to the reasonableness of any such charges under the facts and circumstances of particular cases."

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes in order that I may explain this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, this is a serious effort to do what I respectfully submit is an absolutely just thing. There have been added to the deductions by the present bill three additional groups of deductions; three additional grounds have been added over and above those that exist under the present law. This proposition is to add just one more, and that is as simple and as plain, it seems to me, as can be; to wit, where a taxpayer, being the head of a family, is sick, or if his wife is sick, or one of his children is sick, or if any one of these should die, then the actual expenses of the hospital, of the surgeon, the physician, and of the undertaker shall be paid, not to exceed $1,000 for any individual in any one tax year. This payment is to be made, not upon the basis of the capricious and excessive bill of a surgeon, or of a physician, or of an undertaker, but the proposal says, according to the ordinary and usual rates or charges prevailing for such services in the community where rendered, and the commissioner is given the absolute right and power to say whether or not the charges in any particular case are fair, reasonable, just, and according to the ordinary basis of value for such services.

The amendment which was offered by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], which prevailed in this Committee of the Whole House, was assailed on the ground that it was illogical. Of course, what logic is is a very flexible and fluid term; but I shall submit to you that the amendment now proposed can not be assailed even on the ground of being illogical; it will not be assailed as being unjust; it will not be assailed as being unfair, because during the consideration of the two preceding revenue bills, when I offered this same amendment, it was attacked only on the ground that it was not practicable and not workable.

On the 7th day of December, which was last Wednesday, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury. I was satisfied he was not in favor of this deduction, because he is not in favor of the household exemption; he is not in favor of any exemptions; he is in favor of making the private soldier, and the humble citizen, the man who bears the brunt of battle in time of war, also start to pay taxes to Uncle Sam just as soon as he gets a revenue of $1,000. So, Mr. Chairman, I did not ask the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether he thought this was a wise additional ground of deduction, a fourth one over and above the three new grounds already proposed by the committee, but I asked him this question: Is it workable? I asked him to please answer me on the very day the letter was written. The 8th came and no answer; the 9th came and no answer; the 10th came and no answer. Of course, there was none on the 11th, on Sunday, but to-day, December 12, about 30 minutes before this House convened, a letter, which is still moist from the press, but dated December 9, was placed in my hands by a special messenger.

The letter, which I ask permission to put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, says and admits that this provision from a strictly administrative point of view will be reasonable and workable. Of course, he goes on and says that, in his opinion, it is unnecessary and undesirable to add one additional ground of deduction, but that it is no more impracticable, no more unworkable, and no more impossible or difficult of administration than the provisions which are already in the bill. In fact, gentlemen, I submit it is the most easily administered of any proposition in connection with the deductions. They talk about allowing deductions for depleted mineral resources, depleted oil, and depleted gas. How are you going to arrive at that except by the wildest sort of conjecture? Then, also, one of the additional grounds is damages by reason of the casual sales of real estate. What do we mean by that anyhow? Of course, it means, I assume, that when a man sells a piece of real estate and makes upon the basis of the transaction an apparent profit, he is to be allowed to deduct from that profit certain estimated damages as to bonds he may be required to take out to guarantee the title or a bond to indemnify himself against any damage he may sustain through the failure of the purchaser to comply with the contract or for damages he might sustain through the foreclosure of a purchase-money mortgage.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. How does the gentleman feel about amending this bill whereby if a taxpayer does not make a return the next year that then he will receive a refund of taxes which have been paid and which the investment has proven should not have been paid and on which he did not make a profit?

Mr. McSWAIN. I will ask the gentleman from Florida to excuse me from undertaking to answer that question, because I think it is a purely local question. That probably applies to Florida.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Oh, no; it applies on mortgages throughout the country.

Mr. McSWAIN. I am discussing this matter from the point of view of justice. Now, the objection will be made, gentlemen, I am quite sure, that we have already provided a $3,500 deduction for the head of a family, with $400 additional for each child, and that therefore that is sufficient to take care of an operation upon the head of a family or the wife or one of the children, or to take care of hospital expenses and undertaking expenses. But I submit, gentlemen, that that $3,500, plus $400 for each child, making, for instance, $4,300 in the case of two children, and so on, is what you might call "bread-and-butter" and "shoes-and-clothes" deductions, and it is little enough at that.

It will not take care of these emergency expenses. It will not take care of the surgeon's fee or the hospital fee or the undertaker's fee, and these are emergencies.

Now, the corporations engaged in business and those deriving their incomes from the business of corporations are taken care of by this bill, but the individual whose income is from $4,000 up to, perhaps, $25,000 or $30,000, as the result of his own efforts, such as a lawyer or doctor or dentist or editorial writer or civil engineer or anyone engaged in a similar business, the man whose capital consists of his ability to work, such a man is not taken care of by this bill, and we are asking you gentlemen to vote into this bill something that will give a little lightening of the burden and the load of carrying on, on the part of the professional man, whose income stops when he stops work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as a rule I am not disposed to oppose the gentleman who last spoke, but the gentleman has said that nobody will contend that his amendment is not fair or just.

I contend it is neither fair nor just, and that it will not reach the people whom the gentleman wants to help. It will help more the multimillionaire than anyone else, because it will take off from the top of his income tax. The man who needs help in matters of this kind is the man who does not pay any tax at all, or pays very little tax. As it is now, no married man who has an income of $5,000 pays very much tax. My recollection is there are only about 2,500,000 people who pay any income tax whatever at present.

The gentleman proposes to further increase the exemptions. We put these exemptions in the bill to take care of just such things. It is true, of course, that a proposition like the gentleman proposes can be worked out, but it is true also it will take a large number of Treasury employees to do it.

If we follow out the logic of the gentleman's argument, then the married people who do not pay any income tax whatever ought to be given a bonus by the Government. We have put up the exemptions in order to take care of just these things.

What reason is there with reference to the poor man—a man even with an income of $5,000, who pays a little tax of, perhaps, $5 or $6—what reason is there to exempt his expenses for a doctor any more than we should exempt his expenses for clothing, for food, or anything of that kind?

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McSWAIN. For the reason that the expense of the doctor or of the hospital or of the funeral is an emergency, is unusual, whereas every day in the year and for every year in our lives we have to have something to eat and something to wear. One is an emergency and the other is the usual thing.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That does not answer the question at all. We have provided a large and a generous exemption, which the gentleman wants to enlarge by this privilege, which, I have said, will benefit the multimillionaire more than it will benefit anybody else. It will not at all reach the man the gentleman proposes to help, but will lessen the number of taxpayers and will materially affect the incomes of the extremely wealthy.

Of course, it is always a case of misfortune where a person is sick; but if we include such a misfortune, why not include all the other misfortunes that may cost him money? Why omit any of them? He may have something happen to him that would prevent his work which may not be in the nature of sickness but is equally a misfortune. We have these exemptions now higher than most people think they ought to be, so high that only a few of our people pay any tax whatever, so high that those who do pay the tax can afford in the years that come along to pay their surgeon's bills, whatever they may be; and this also takes care of the nurses as well as the surgeons or any expense of that nature.

Does the gentleman mean to contend that this will not require a great deal of administrative work? I say it can not be worked out fairly, because one surgeon will charge one amount and another surgeon will charge an entirely different amount, yet the gentleman thinks the Treasury will be able to work out some rate that will be uniform and equitable. I do not know how they will do it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Is not the corporation or the business man, so far as his business is concerned, permitted under this law to deduct lawyer's fees in the expense of his business?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. When we are determining how much his profits are, of course.

Mr. McSWAIN. And lawyers charge variable fees.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But that is a tax on profits, a tax on something the man makes.

Mr. McSWAIN. And this is the same thing, it seems to me.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I say the amendment proposed by the gentleman ought to be voted down.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3190) authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

The committee resumed its session.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I imagine there may be other proposals with reference to deductions and exemptions, and for that reason I am going to make a statement now so that gentleman making such motions may know what the effect will be upon the Treasury.

There are two and a half million taxpayers who pay individual income taxes. The average rate is 4 per cent. For each $500 deduction or exemption that might be given those two and a half million taxpayers there would be a loss to the Treasury of $50,000,000.

I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has said. You are not giving this deduction on the normal tax or on the lowest bracket. Every time you make a deduction, every time you give an exemption, you are reducing the tax at the very top, in the highest surtax bracket; and more than that, you are reducing the tax all the way down the line, because you are lowering the taxpayer from the highest brackets down.

You are not giving this benefit to the poor man. The man with an income of $3,500, who is the head of a family, pays no income tax at all. You are giving this to people who have incomes of $4,000 and more. They have an exemption of $3,500 if they have no children. If they have children, they get another exemption of $400 for each child. It is estimated that the head of a family may be figured together with at least two children, making a total of $4,300 now exempt, and the purpose of these exemptions is to take care of the expenses of running a household.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the $400 exemption only applies to children under 18 years of age and does not apply to children between 18 and 21 years of age?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is true, and I would be glad to discuss that. We discussed it in committee.

Mr. DAVIS. Does not the gentleman think it would be fair to increase the age from 18 to 21?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; and I will tell the gentleman why. It happens that we have two children that have just reached that age, and the exemption as to both has now been taken away. These children are attending a college or a university, and I do not think we ought to give special exemptions to people who are able to send their children to colleges or universities. It is a good thing to have an education, and I am glad to be able to give it to them, but I do not think that is any reason why I should have a special preference.

What about the man who sends his children to the high school and the grammar schools? We have taken care of him, and I think that is enough. Does the gentleman realize that there are only two and a half million people in the United States out of 114,000,000 who pay a single cent of income tax? Where are we coming to if we follow out this line of exemption? Is not anybody going to support the Government of the United States except the multimillionaires or men of tremendous income? Is not your responsibility and mine the same as Mr. Rockefeller's or Mr. Morgan's? Should not we contribute something to the expenses of the management of this Government of ours? How far are we going? The head of a family can now have an income of $3,500 without paying any tax.

Mr. McSWAIN. In this bill there are three deductions for exemption reported.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They apply to business operations and do not apply to the individuals; they apply to expenses and profits of people who are engaged in business.

Mr. McSWAIN. These deductions would apply to property.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. By your amendment you are not aiding the people with a $3,500 income.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McSWAIN) there were 35 ayes and 84 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the extension of my remarks I desire to print the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 25. CREDITS OF INDIVIDUAL AGAINST NET INCOME

There shall be allowed for the purpose of the normal tax, but not for the surtax, the following credits against the net income:

(a) Dividends: The amount received as dividends—

(1) From a domestic corporation, or

(2) From a foreign corporation when it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that more than 50 per cent of the gross income of such foreign corporation for the three-year period ending with the close of its taxable year preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under the provisions of section 120.

The credit allowed by this subsection shall not be allowed in respect of dividends received from a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, or from a corporation which, under section 251, is taxable only on its gross income from sources within the United States by reason of its receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States.

(b) Interest on United States obligations: The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States which is included in gross income under section 22.

(c) Personal exemption: In the case of a single person, a personal exemption of $1,500; or in the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $3,500. A husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption. The amount of such personal exemption shall be $3,500. If such husband and wife make separate returns, the personal exemption may be taken by either or divided between them.

(d) Credit for dependents—$400 for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer if such dependent person is under 18 years of age or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

(e) Change of status—

(1) The credit for dependents shall be determined by the status of the taxpayer on the last day of his taxable year.

(2) The personal exemption allowed by subsection (c) of this section shall, in case the status of the taxpayer changes during his taxable year, be the sum of an amount which bears the same ratio to $1,500 as the number of months during which the taxpayer was single bears to 12 months, plus an amount which bears the same ratio to $3,500 as the number of months during which the taxpayer was a married person living with husband or wife or was the head of a family bears to 12 months. For the purposes of this paragraph a fractional part of a month shall be disregarded unless it amounts to more than half a month, in which case it shall be considered as a month.

(3) In the case of an individual who dies during the taxable year, the personal exemption and the credit for dependents shall be determined by his status at the time of his death, and in such case full credits shall be allowed to the surviving spouse, if any, according to his or her status at the close of the taxable year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 24, page 28, after the word "of," strike out the figures "1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "2,000."

Also, in line 1, page 29, after the word "of," strike out the figures "3,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment raising the exemption of single people to $3000. When will that be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment will be in order now if he will prepare it.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, the lady from New Jersey has an amendment on the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only recognize one at a time. The gentleman from Texas is recognized on his amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment which I offer seeks to make the exemption for the head of a family $5,000 instead of $3,500, and for a single person $2,000 instead of $1,500. My distinguished friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD] will offer an amendment increasing the exemption for a single person from $1,500, as carried in the bill and in the present law, to $3,000. It occurs to me that if we are going to hand back to corporations, as my friend from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] stated here on Saturday, $178,000,000 out of $532,000,000, that certainly we can afford to make the exemption to the head of a family more than $3,500.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I did not say five hundred and thirty-two; I said two hundred and thirty-two.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman said that $178,000,000 of this total of $232,000,000 was going back to corporations.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; out of two hundred and thirty-two.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I thank the gentleman for the correction. I simply intended to state the total as $232,000,000. Just a slip of the tongue. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] stated here that he represented a great city, the city of Chicago, that he represented great business interests, and was proud of that fact; that he was born in the city of Chicago; that he represented a great business district in that windy city. I have read the gentleman's rather effusive and comprehensive biography in the Congressional Directory, and he represents ward 41, and several other wards of plutocratic coloring. I have been in the gentleman's district, and I have heard it called the aristocratic and "silk-stocking" district of Chicago; but doubtless there are many people of moderate means in that district. Whether its Representative knows they are there, I do not know. I know that once when I took a train of cattle there and I attempted to eat in one of the restaurants somewhere close to Devon Street in his district, without a coat on, the restaurant proprietor said I would have to put on a coat. Well, I did not possess that article of masculine wearing apparel, so I went back to my caboose and got my "slicker" or raincoat, entered, but was told I must have either a tuxedo or evening dress, so I went to a less aristocratic portion of the city and got my victuals. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Where was that?

Mr. HUDSPETH. That was in the gentleman's district, as I recall, now on or near or right north of Devon Street. Now, the gentleman said on Saturday he was unalterably opposed to the present exemption of $3,500 to heads of families—even if it was necessary to educate children. He gave strong evidence that he was inclined to favor reducing the present exemption to heads of families and single persons. Now, I observe from this same biographical sketch that the gentleman is a thorough college graduate and he should know the cost of educating children. Oh, there is no question but that the gentleman is educated. He admits it—attended public schools in Chicago—graduated from Augustana College in 1890 with a B. A. degree and got his LL. B. degree from Kent College of Law, Chicago. Oh, he is educated all right, and he truly represents the farmers and cattle raisers on Devon Street, where they would not let me eat without a regulation dress coat. Also, the gentleman went to school in the Sunflower State of Kansas. He attended Bethany College at Lindsborg, Kans. I believe the gentleman taught school there or somewhere else. He also says he practiced at law among those farmers and livestock producers on Devon Street, and I ask him now how can you properly educate a family of, say, two children to-day on an income of $3,500? The Department of Education says that it costs $8,000 to properly educate a child at the present high cost of living—which is four times greater than when the gentleman went to school—and yet the gentleman is saying to the Standard Oil Co. and the Texas Oil Co. and all of the other big oil corporations—and six of the biggest are in my district—"We will hand you back $178,000,000 in tax reduction," and yet the gentleman is very active on the Ways and Means Committee, that drafted this bill—says he is opposed to any greater exemption for single persons and heads of families, and if it had not been for JOHN GARNER'S amendment just forced over the gentleman and the Republicans on that side, the little corporations would not have gotten much reduction, as the majority drafted this bill. These big oil corporations are taking out of the ground down there, some of them, as much as 10,000 barrels a day from one well.

He hands this money back to them, but he says to the old farmer and the cattlemen, the men who went through the drought and the drop in prices in 1920, and who bore the brunt of the war, and who increased their herds as they had been requested to do—to them he says "No, no tax reduction for you"; and he says that he is proud of the fact that he was opposed to the exemption of heads of families up to $3,500—this distinguished scholar and graduate of all of these colleges, who has a string of A. B's, LL. D's and every other kind of B's after his name as long as a cowboy's lariat. He knows what it costs to educate two of his children. He has just stated he was doing so. I have educated a couple of them and I know what it costs. Yet he says to the farmers north of Devon Street in ward 41 of the great city of Chicago, and those stock raisers in that district of his, "We will not give you an exemption up to $5,000, those of you who have the responsibility of heads of families." I am not against corporations, I belong to a few, and this bill will probably help me a little, but can the gentleman justify his position? The Department of Education says that it costs $16,000 to educate two children, and that is the average number in a family. The head of such a family is the one that I am pleading for. Then, also take the girl in the work shops, the stores, the school-teachers—splendid young women who educate our children and make better citizens out of them all over this country. I am trying to raise their exemption from $1,500 to $2,000. I presume when the gentleman from Illinois taught school and wielded the birch rod in the little red schoolhouse on the hill down in the sunflower State of Kansas, that they did not have many colleges there. There were not many colleges there when he was teaching the young idea how to shoot, but since then the State has developed and they have colleges all over the great State of Kansas. The gentleman says that if he had his way he would not raise the exemption to $3,500. I said to him Saturday, "Do you want to cut it down from what it is at present?" and the gentleman tip-toed and got florid in the face and all that, and I ask the gentleman now, Do you want to cut down the exemption of the head of a family and single persons as it stands at present? The gentleman does not make answer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will answer the question as soon as the gentleman is through.

Mr. HUDSPETH. All right. The gentleman will have plenty of time to answer me. He has orated very vociferously three or four times already on this bill and, as I recall, almost every time the burden of his song was to reduce the taxes on the "oppressed" corporations. He seems to be the "director general" or, I might say, the "assistant director general" of this bill on the Republican side of the House. I say to my good friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I presume he will answer, but I want to know whether he can answer to the people of this country who do not make their millions and do not pay on incomes of thirty and forty and fifty million dollars a year. Can you answer to the head of a family when we are trying to raise his exemption so that he can educate his children? One great man in Texas—I believe it was Sam Houston—said that the educated citizen was a bulwark of our liberties and a protection of those liberties against socialism and anarchy throughout the Government.

And I am sorry, I want to say gentlemen of the House, that my State of Texas, the empire State of the Union, ranks a little low in the education of its splendid citizens. I wish it stood first. That is all I am seeking for to-day. I just simply want to secure justice for the man at the head of a family who has as many as two children, as the gentleman from Illinois says he has two children he is putting through college. All right. Perhaps he is more fortunate than many of the people of my district. Many own livestock and ranches and many of them do not, but they want to educate their children in our State university, the great universities of other States. You can not do it on an income, I will say to my friend, of less than $5,000 per year with the present high cost of living. I mean give them such a finished education as my people desire. Corporations as a rule have competent lawyers to prepare their income-tax reports—individuals have to go and hire them; this costs additional money; take that into consideration, also, gentlemen. I am also in sympathy with my friend from Oklahoma to raise the exemption of single persons as far as $2,000 or $2,500. However, I think everybody should marry who can, and I think almost everybody can. I trust my amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HUDSPETH: Strike out the figures "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$3,000."

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is agreeable to me.

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment again, as I did on December 15, 1925, when the revenue bill was before the House.

I am so doing, because I sincerely believe that the Committee on Ways and Means this year should have increased the exemptions in personal incomes in the pending tax bill to $5,000 instead of $3,500 for married persons and $3,000 instead of $1,500 for single persons.

This committee is as well informed as I am on the true conditions of the country, especially with regard to the working classes.

I say this after carefully reading the address sent to us on the opening of Congress by the President, and I take exception to his statement therein that the country is prosperous. [Applause.]

Only the banker and men interested in high finance are prosperous.

I will take the President back to his own section of the country, for he may not be fully informed, having spent the summer in the Black Hills of the Dakotas, rather than the country he knew.

How about the people of New England in the textile industry? Are they prosperous? From their own evidence they have never suffered more than during the past few years.

In the closing days of the Sixty-ninth Congress we heard the lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] tell of the idle spindles and the suffering of the people of her own district caused therefrom. These people have been working two and three days a week for the past few years.

I visited the city of Fall River myself and talked personally with many of the people employed in the mills there and they were bitter in their denunciation of this administration talking prosperity. It is poverty there, not prosperity.

I ask you, what are you going to do about it. If time permitted, I could cite many other instances of lack of prosperity among the working people of the country, but this, I think, is unnecessary, as every Member here has proof of the truth of this assertion.

Are you still going to add to their burdens? Are you indifferent to the plea of the farmer in the West; the cotton grower in the South; the industrialist in the East; and to that great unorganized army of men and women known as the "clerical staff" of the country? Are they not worthy of consideration? Is there a Member here who will say, with the high cost of living to-day, that an income of $5,000 for married people and $3,000 for single people provides anything more than the necessities of life?

How is this Republican administration going back to the people in 1928 without having fulfilled their promise that incomes of $5,000 or less should be free from taxation?

We have been told this revenue bill, if it is to pass at all, must be passed "as is" without any amendments, and we call this a free government.

I am in favor of reducing the corporation tax because it is good for business and the working man, but I also firmly believe in extending similar relief to the family man and woman.

We are the greatest Nation in the world, yet we help every other country before the people at home. Charity should begin at home. This year their Representatives in Congress should listen to the plea of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and Members of Congress, I am in perfect accord with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] as to the matters of raising the exemption of heads of families to $5,000. However, the amendment I sought to offer raises the exemption to single persons to $3,000, and it is that amendment that I desire to discuss at this time.

I hope I may have your undivided attention for just a few moments, as this amendment is one of vast importance to a large number of our people. By it I seek to increase the exemption allowed to single people in the matter of income tax. I think the adoption of this amendment would only be extending justice to the large number of citizens interested. I fully understand that it has been the policy of revenue bills to make a distinction in exemption as between married and unmarried persons, under the plea that the married person is the head of a family, consequently has a heavier living expense, and for that reason is given a larger exemption.

Technically this is true, but I submit that there are in the United States literally thousands of working women and men who, while not legally the heads of families, are in fact assuming a part and in many cases all the responsibilities of this position. Every Member of Congress can call to his mind cases of which he has knowledge, of single persons who by reason of conditions are assisting in, or entirely supporting a family, and I submit that such person is just as much entitled to consideration as the other class whether these responsibilities come by reason of marriage or by circumstances which force upon them the same burdens.

It is my understanding also, Mr. Chairman, that it is not contended that this exemption would to any great extent disturb our revenues for the reason that the argument is made that this class of taxpayers as individuals pay at the maximum a very small tax. It is probably true that to many of them the amount in dollars and cents is small, but I suggest that in these days of high cost of living, in these days when the working woman especially, must, if she is to continue in employment, spend a considerable amount of her income for clothing and to meet the requirements of to-day as to dress and fashions, which is expected of her if her employment is to continue, that even the small amount taken from her is to her very material. Not only this, but may I not suggest that this class of taxpayers, like most of the others, find it necessary in order to meet the requirements of the Government in making the technical and almost nonunderstandable reports required by the system, to make additional expenditures of from $2 to $5 in having their reports made. In addition to this, no taxpayer in these days can make a true report to the Government, as to income and expenditures if they want to be honest with themselves and their Government, without during the entire year keeping detailed book accounts.

This in itself makes additional cost and labor on the part of these people, and no doubt when we consider the expenses to the Government in handling, auditing, and passing upon these reports and add to that the cost of the taxpayers in preparing same, the probabilities are that these necessary expenses are as great, if not greater, than the revenues received by the Government.

But some one says they should pay a tax for the reason that every person receiving benefits of the Government should participate in paying its expenses. That is true, but I suggest that each of these taxpayers does contribute toward the cost of their Government. They contribute through taxes paid by the people from whom they purchase what they use and consume. They contribute by paying a tariff, in many cases an exorbitant tariff, on everything they use from the cradle to the grave.

In connection with an argument in favor of raising this exemption I read to you from an editorial printed in the Tulsa Tribune of Tulsa, Okla. This paper is owned and edited by Mr. Richard Lloyd Jones, a newspaper writer of national reputation and a man who is a recognized student of economics. In writing on this subject, this editor said:

"SINGLE" DISCRIMINATION

There's always a first for everything. Last week for the first time in Capitol records women testified before a committee of Congress on revenue matters. Taxes have to do with revenue. And women have always been the home economists, good, bad, or indifferent, to determine the outgo and, more and more, the income. But women who have always done this bit of practical economics had never before appeared to state their case before a congressional committee.

The women who appeared at this tax hearing in Washington were not the heads of homes, home being understood to mean a domicile whereof a man is head. They were single women asking for a removal of the discrimination in exemption against the unmarried person on the assumption that the unmarried person has not a family or other financial obligations which entitled her to the same consideration which the "head" of the family earns by virtue of his married state.

All of which discrimination against the single person comes as a result of the assumption, quite without fact basis, that single persons have none but themselves to support. As a matter of fact, most single persons contribute to the family support.

Insurance companies will flood you with proof that something like 90 per cent of all persons over 60 years of age are dependent upon others for their remaining years. But let several unmarried children be the sole support of their families, yet none may claim exemption as head of the family because she is not "sole" support of another.

This move for increased exemption for single persons is sponsored by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs and is but one more plea for consideration to the small wage earner instead of additional concessions to the possessor of incomes over $110,000. This action of a national business women's organization is a move in line with their general purposes—to secure equal opportunity for women with men in the business world; not equal pay necessarily, but equal opportunity and equal pay for equal work.

In their plea to remove the income-tax discrimination against single persons these women argued from figures which showed:

That for the emergency of the war, exemptions of married men or heads of families were reduced 50 per cent while 62½ per cent was taken off the exemption allowed single persons, although single persons were then and always will be the first persons drafted for the trenches in times of war.

That the exemption for single persons remained stationary during 1917–1924, while the exemption for married men and heads of families was increased.

That the exemption for single persons is one-half of what it was before the war, $1,500 now as against $3,000 in 1913–1916.

That the unfair neglect of single persons is further emphasized by the benefits given corporations and persons having incomes near or above $1,000,000. In addition to which discrimination the 50 per cent surtax rate is largely a "paper" one, the actual rate being more nearly half of that, whereas the persons on the lower income levels rarely ever escape the full imposition of the normal rate. "If persons having incomes of a million or more dollars," the brief continues, "pay at the same rate as those having $110,000 income, then this favoritism is obviously absorbed through the rates paid by millions of smaller taxpayers."

The number of persons affected by this plea for removal of discrimination in exemption is considerable; witness the analysis of persons having incomes in the United States:

a. Number of persons having incomes or wages, 42,000,000.

b. Two per cent of these persons receive incomes of $5,000 or above.

c. Four per cent of these persons receive incomes of $3,000 to $5,000.

d. Eight per cent of these persons receive incomes of $2,000 to $3,000.

e. Eighty-six per cent of these persons have incomes of $2,000 and under.

Economic pressure has been blamed for a multitude of social, political, and moral changes, not least of which is the matter of marriage: "He couldn't afford to marry," or "She had to think of her mother and father." And in the economic struggle single persons, consciously or unconsciously, are in the lower income levels. Yet they, too, carry part of the burden of surtaxes which are passed on to the consumer.

There is this discrimination in the case of the single person. The tax rate is apparently the last place official Washington expected to have the discrimination attacked. Washington sat up and took notice when for the first time in the record of the Capitol women appeared before a committee of Congress on financial matters. A fair enough cause took them there.

In the name of thousands of single men and women in each congressional district in the United States, I plead with you for an adoption of this amendment, the raising of their exemptions to the $3,000 suggested in my amendment, and thus the extension to them of the justice and equity to which they are entitled. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, it is very easy for Members to grow exuberant and generous on the floor of this House in giving exemptions and deductions and releases from taxation to their constituents. Of course, they do not bear the responsibility. The responsibility will be that of the House, and individual votes may not count much. But I want to suggest to Members of the House that it is of no use to make proposals here that are impracticable and impossible.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Who are to be the judges of that; the gentleman from Illinois or the whole House?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I did not yield to the gentleman. The proposal to increase the exemptions from $1,500 to $3,000 for single persons and from $3,500 to $5,000 to heads of families means a loss of revenue of $150,000,000. That is why I say it is impracticable and impossbile. There is no such money in the Treasury.

Now my good friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] saw fit to read the Congressional Directory for the purpose of advising the House as to the past history of my poor self. I hope he will enjoy that when he reads it in the RECORD. It of course went to the very fundamentals of this tax problem, and——

Mr. HUDSPETH. It goes to show the source of this "finished education."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman mean to say to me that a man with an income of $5,000, even if he needs it all for himself and his family, should pay nothing toward the maintenance of this Government?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, he pays State and county taxes, and all that; taxes used for building schoolhouses and roads, and the like.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We are here concerned with the income tax, and the gentleman does not meet the question, I will say to him, by any personal reference to my views on that subject. I said on Saturday, and I say now, that in my opinion the exemption of $3,500 for the head of a family is too high. I said I would prefer to make it $3,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Has the gentleman attempted to cut it down in this bill? He is a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No. We think that the exemption of $3,500 is not only ample, but generous. There are other things required by the people. I do not know whether the gentleman is in favor of increasing still further the allowance to corporations.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No; I am not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then I will say that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] is opposed to it. He will have the opportunity to vote against it when the roll is called.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am in favor of the Garner amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Adding $24,000,000 to the corporation reductions?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; affording the small corporation the same chance as the large corporation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. When we get through with this bill, if these plans are successful, we will have a bill calling for a reduction of from $500,000,000 to $600,000,000 in the face of a surplus of about $225,000,000.

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. How much would it cost to collect this tax?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will put that in the RECORD, if it is desired.

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. Would it not cost more than the revenue obtained?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly not.

Mrs. NORTON of New Jersey. I understand it does.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Certainly not. There is a great deal of misapprehension as to the cost of collection even of the small amounts collected by the Government. They do not cost the amounts that are generally suggested.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We always have something at the bottom brackets.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But when you raise the exemption to $5,000 and $3,000, whom are you benefiting? The people who have an income of $3,500 and less get no benefit because they are not paying any tax. You are benefiting the men of the highest income, the men in the highest brackets.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Not now. The gentleman would not yield to anybody. A proposal was submitted to our committee by which a taxpayer of a lower bracket would have gotten a reduction of $40, whereas the man in the highest bracket would have got a reduction of $1,500. The benefit goes to the top of the list, not to the bottom. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a calculation has been made hurriedly as to the number of taxpayers who would be taken from the roll by this amendment. The clerk to the committee estimated that it would take a million and a half people off the roll. My friend from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] is as strong a friend of the income tax as I am myself, and I give him the credit for that. But these amendments offered now, if carried out, would inevitably destroy the tax and leave nobody to pay it except a few millionaires, a few people receiving high incomes.

Now, these amendments——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If you raised the exemption to $5,000, how many people would it drop from the roll from among those who are now paying an income tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A gentleman in front of me says 970,000. But a hurried examination by the Clerk shows that a million and a half would be dropped off the roll. In other words, we would have only a small proportion of people paying taxes out of the whole general population.

Mr. BUTLER. How much would that cost?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. About $40,000,000. Those people have never paid hardly anything. The result I referred to would come from the fact that it is also carrying on into the upper brackets.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. McCoy, the Actuary in the Treasury Department, said that for every increased reduction or exemption of $500 to the individual taxpayer there will be a loss in revenue of $50,000,000. This proposal means a $1,500 increase in the exemptions for both heads of families and single persons, and that would mean a loss of revenue, according to Mr. McCoy, of $150,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Then we would have to withdraw the bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have only five minutes. I hope my friend from Texas will not insist on asking me further questions.

Mr. HUDSPETH. My colleague from Texas says you will have twice the surplus you estimate, so if he is correct you would not have to withdraw the bill, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas. I am no longer the head of a family, for unfortunate reasons, principally because I have advanced so far in years that my family is independent. I now only get this $1,500 exemption, but I do know this perfectly well, that my expenses are not one-quarter, not one-fifth—and I might put it larger than that—what they were when I was getting the full exemption of a married man, having my children educated, and taking care of a family.

I think the proportion we have fixed now is about right. I do not believe, in the interest of the income tax itself, we ought to increase the exemptions. I think they are high enough.

The people named by the lady from New Jersey are people who would pay no income tax whatever, the clerk in the store, the workingman, and the ordinary mechanic; all of those people pay nothing whatever, and they would not be helped by this. Only those whose incomes approach $10,000 or more would get any benefit out of it, and then it would run into the upper brackets. I think the amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the lady from New Jersey to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, what became of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma?

The CHAIRMAN. That was a pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. INSTALLMENT BASIS

(a) Dealers in personal property: Under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, a person who regularly sells or otherwise disposes of personal property on the installment plan may return as income therefrom in any taxable year that proportion of the installment payments actually received in that year which the gross profit realized or to be realized when payment is completed bears to the total contract price.

(b) Sales of realty and casual sales of personalty: In the case (1) of a casual sale or other casual disposition of personal property (other than property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year) for a price exceeding $1,000, or (2) of a sale or other disposition of real property, if in either case the initial payments do not exceed 40 per cent of the selling price, the income may, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, be returned on the basis and in the manner above prescribed in this section. As used in this section the term "initial payments" means the payments received in cash or property other than evidences of indebtedness of the purchaser during the taxable period in which the sale or other disposition is made.

(c) Change from accrual to installment basis: If a taxpayer elects for any taxable year to report his net income on the installment basis, then in computing his income for the year of change or any subsequent year, amount actually received during any such year on account of sales made in any prior year shall not be excluded.

(d) Gain or loss upon disposition of installment obligations: If an installment obligation is satisfied at other than its face value or distributed, transmitted, sold, or otherwise disposed of, gain or loss shall result to the extent of the difference between the basis of the obligation and (1) in the case of satisfaction at other than face value or a sale or exchange—the amount realized, or (2) in case of a distribution, transmission, or disposition otherwise than by sale or exchange—the fair market value of the obligation at the time of such distribution, transmission, or disposition. The basis of the obligation shall be the excess of the face value of the obligation over an amount equal to the income which would be returnable were the obligation satisfied in full.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that on page 35, line 12, the word "amount" be changed to "amounts." That is a printer's error.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that on page 35, line 12, the word "amount" be changed to "amounts." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if there is any change made in existing law by this section, and particularly I want to ask whether there is any change in subdivision (b) of section 44?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The only change in (a) and (b) is liberalizing the provisions for the benefit of the installment sale dealers. We have changed the requirement of 25 per cent, as in the former law, to 40 per cent.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman tell me what is meant by the language "casual sale or other disposition of personal property"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a single sale that is not in the regular business.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is that in the existing law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; that is the same as in the existing law. It has been that way for a long while and we have never had any trouble with the provision.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 48. DEFINITIONS

When used in this title—

(a) Taxable year. "Taxable year" means the calendar year, or the fiscal year ending during such calendar year, upon the basis of which the net income is computed under this part. "Taxable year" includes, in the case of a return made for a fractional part of a year under the provisions of this title or under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, the period for which such return is made. The first taxable year, to be called the taxable year 1927, shall be the calender year 1927 or any fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1927.

(b) Fiscal year. "Fiscal year" means an accounting period of 12 months ending on the last day of any month other than December.

(c) Paid, incurred, accrued. The terms "paid or incurred" and "paid or accrued" shall be construed according to the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed under this part.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, this bill can not become a law until some time in 1928. It proposes to rebate 1927 corporation taxes, amounting to more than $150,000,000. A similar retroactive rebate of excess-profits taxes, also urged by the Treasury Department, was rejected by Congress in the 1921 tax bill. Why not now? We should be both just and consistent. If any provision in this bill is not right in the judgment of an individual Member it is his duty to offer amendments and, irrespective of political affiliations, he has the right to vote his convictions. I did so on the graduated tax amendment offered a few moments ago to relieve small corporations. The audible criticism was then made that three Republicans went through the tellers with you Democrats on this side of the aisle, and I regret if you felt contaminated by the presence of three Republicans. I would have been glad, however, to have voted with you on that proposition even if I had been alone, believing as I do that greater relief should be afforded small corporations than is contained in this bill. I believe we ought to relieve them, if possible, because their proportionate tax is too heavy. The large corporations of this country have been making enormous profits within the last year or so. They have been accumulating great surpluses and declaring frequent stock dividends that escape taxation while the small corporations have been glad to get by with any surplus at all for a rainy day. We all know that. I looked for another amendment to come from some gentleman on the Democratic side of the aisle. Such an amendment substituting 1928 for 1927 would protect the Treasury by $160,000,000 if that date was fixed for the time the corporate tax reductions in this bill are to go into effect. If the tax cut goes into effect for the 1928 tax, instead of for 1927, that great saving to the Treasury will occur and a retroactive tax refund will not occur to corporations that have passed on the 1927 tax to consumers.

I recollect reading the other day a pronounced article by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]—a very distinguished gentleman now sitting on the right-hand side of the aisle—to the effect that by making this tax reduction law for corporations to apply in 1927 instead of 1928, as this bill proposes, we will give these corporations a present outright of $160,000,000 in 1927 taxes, which they have already passed on to consumers. Thus we will relieve them from payment of a just tax they ought to pay. I also saw the answer of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], to the effect that the tax had not been charged to consumers, because he contends it is impossible to pass on the tax when a corporation is dealing with consumers. That may be true, so far as the exact amount of tax is concerned, but we took the position that it did pass on in the tax bill of 1921. That occurred when the question came up of making the excess-profits-tax repeal retroactive to cover the taxes of that same year of 1921. It was then decided that the tax had been passed on to consumers, and this same proposition was then defeated. In the excess-profits case it would have meant a loss of $400,000,000, but by the action of the Republican side of the aisle, taken in conference by a majority of 6 or 8 out of about 180 Republican Members who were present, we decided at that time the proposal to repeal the 1921 excess-profits tax would be a retroactive proposition and we struck it from the bill. The tax repeal was then dated in 1922 and saved nearly a half billion dollars to the Treasury. We passed the bill so that the enforcement of the act would take effect in 1922 and not affect the taxes collected by corporations from consumers in 1921. I was much interested, as some Members may remember, in that change then made against the recommendation of the Treasury Department.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There were some other reasons, too. We just simply did not have the money to spare at that time.

Mr. FREAR. Now comes the answer that was given a little while ago. We have no justification in making this tax reduction retroactive as is proposed in the bill before us or to give to corporations $160,000,000 taxes that have been passed on to consumers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But the gentleman, of course, is aware that I have always taken the position, following the professors of economics and all those who have made a special study of the subject, that except in unusual cases corporations could not pass on the tax. I made a speech three or four years ago on that subject and I have not changed my position at all.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Iowa was with me in 1921 and objected to having the excess-profits-tax cut made retroactive. It was argued then, successfully, that the tax had been collected by the corporation as a part of its profits. We took the position then, that it was also a retroactive tax. Now, if you are going to make this tax reduction for corporations become effective for the year 1927, as you propose to do by this bill, then all of the enormous profits that have been made by these great corporations—and they have never made larger profits than those accumulated during the last two years—those net profits are going to be placed in their treasuries without repayment of the tax they have collected from consumers and which we will permit them to keep.

I feel grieved that my distinguished friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who made such a splendid argument in the press against presenting this retroactive tax collection as a gift to corporations, and with which protest I was very largely in agreement, yet has offered nothing here to prevent that gross injustice to other taxpayers. Nothing has come from him by way of an offered amendment to prevent the injustice nor from his side of the Chamber. I would have been ready to have joined with him in such an amendment, and if the gentleman had made his usual forceful argument a majority might have been induced to support such an amendment and thus saved $100,000,000 for additional tax reduction.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman had been here last Saturday, he would have heard me reiterate that argument then.

Mr. FREAR. I know the gentleman must have made a very eloquent and forceful argument, but only an amendment will affect the bill.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I took the same position here last Saturday. I took the position that in my judgment it was economically unsound, was unjust, and was in the nature of a donation to the corporations.

Mr. FREAR. But only by an amendment to the bill could we make our impressions known or make them effective.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And I will say to our friend from Wisconsin that one of the reasons he could do something in 1921 that he can not do now is because the Treasury Department's influence is a little stronger now than in 1921.

Mr. FREAR. I do not feel the Treasury Department is controlling the provisions in the bill. If so, both sides of this Chamber are in agreement on many of its provisions and also with the department even on this great tax rebate.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The Treasury Department is insisting that this provision apply to 1927.

Mr. FREAR. But the Treasury Department, if the gentleman from Texas please, a few moments ago was in accord on small corporations with the gentleman's own amendment. I was in agreement with him and with the Treasury when the Republican side of the House was not, and we changed the bill by amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Wisconsin says the gentleman from Texas last Saturday made an argument——

Mr. FREAR. No; I regret I did not hear it. The gentleman from Texas said that he made such an argument.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas said he made an argument.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I admitted it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The fact of the matter is I had supposed the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] was conducting an entertainment for the benefit of the House, and the greater portion of what the gentleman had to say at that time referred to me personally rather than to any matter of argument on any of these taxes. Perhaps that is the reason the gentleman has not been ready to offer his amendment to-day.

Mr. FREAR. I will say, Mr. Chairman, I was prepared to support such an amendment when offered, as I understood it was to be offered by a member of the committee.

I was sure there would be an amendment offered from what I had seen in the press, an amendment that would have been consistent with the House action on the 1921 tax bill, and would not make this great gift to the corporations. If we could have passed such an amendment, it would not only have been just to the other taxpayers of the country who receive no rebate, but it would provide the Treasury with additional funds to the amount of $160,000,000, so that in the event we change the form of the bill later on by increasing reductions, we would then have funds available for that purpose and not exceed the tax cut recommended by the Treasury.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But that, of course, would only be for the next year.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; that is true.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It would not help any for the year following or the years after that.

Mr. FREAR. I understand the question of permanency raised in any tax reduction, but if it was later discovered we were not receiving sufficient revenue after saving this additional $160,000,000, then we could change the law next year or two years or three years from now. That would probably be unnecessary, but Congress can increase taxes when needed and if needed. I am seeking to save that necessity by preventing this gift to corporations through the 1927 tax they have collected and will now keep.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. I take it the gentleman is in thorough sympathy with the graduated income-tax principle.

Mr. FREAR. Absolutely.

Mr. HASTINGS. Can the gentleman give us any reason, in principle, why the brackets should stop at $100,000?

Mr. FREAR. No. I am in favor of going higher with them, but I will say that no matter what kind of graduated income rates you may draw for either individuals or corporations, you necessarily will have to make the brackets stop somewhere. It is a question of individual and collective judgment as to what we should do and where the brackets are to be placed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then does the gentleman believe in stopping the highest brackets at $100,000, or taking them up higher?

Mr. FREAR. I would make them higher; personally, that is my judgment. But that question is not before us now, and we had passed the place in the bill before my attention was called to it, where the tax year should have been inserted to prevent the retroactive feature. I regret I relied on others to offer the amendment.

GOOD AND BAD FEATURES OF THE BILL

This tax reduction bill, like all such bills, is a compromise, and I approve that part which refuses to follow Secretary Mellon's request for a repeal of the Federal estate tax. In fact, with a tempting surplus on hand, I am fearful that another assault on the Federal taxing system would come from another array of governors and lobbyists, recipients of banquets, and free excursions to Washington. The application of the surplus to debts by the Secretary occurs if this bill fails. If we can give substantial relief to small corporations and wipe out the remaining nuisance taxes, I believe the bill will be helpful to people generally, who have had a slight dose of the sales tax, to make them careful in the future. Improvement in the administrative features it is claimed will relieve uncertainty, but complaint that needed amendments will wreck the bill comes with poor grace from those who are handing over $160,000,000 in 1927 taxes to corporations that are swollen to the bursting point with surplus profits. This gift should be held up in the Senate, where opportunity for consideration permits discussion and a return to paragraphs as a matter of courtesy. The 1927 tax on corporations should not be rebated in whole or in part unless personal income taxes are also rebated.

THE ESTATE TAX

Mr. Chairman, I desire particularly to address myself to another proposal connected with the pending tax reduction bill, because if the Federal estate tax is repealed, as advocated by Secretary Mellon, I believe the State inheritance tax laws in turn will also be repealed. Such a serious loss to 45 of the 48 States will benefit no one excepting the owners of great wealth, who, like William Rockefeller, may own an estate of which two-thirds, as, in his case, $43,000,000, escaped taxation during his lifetime in the form of tax-free securities.

Secretary Mellon's estate, it is estimated, will have upwards of from fifty to one hundred million dollars Federal estate tax to pay under existing law on his own enormous wealth, subject to the 80 per cent State credit by payments made to Pennsylvania. He is chief proponent of the estate-tax repeal. He first argued that the Federal estate tax makes double taxation when a State inheritance law taxes the same property. To obviate double taxation Congress has extended a credit up to 80 per cent of the Federal tax where State inheritance-tax collections reach that amount.

By retaining the Federal estate tax Congress protects over 40 States from two or three States that appeal to residents of other States to come where no State tax exists, like Florida or Nevada for example, or where a nominal tax of only 2 per cent maximum rate exists, like in Pennsylvania and Wyoming.

Secretary Mellon further asserts that the Federal estate tax ought to be repealed because the Federal Government now retains only 20 per cent of the amount collected. That is the other horn of his former argument when he protested against double taxation. He now further discovers that the Federal tax interferes with State rights.

THE FEDERAL INCOME TAX AND STATE RIGHTS

This latter argument for a repeal of the Federal estate tax, to be consistent, would require also a repeal of the Federal income tax that produced in 1926 $1,974,104,000, or more than one-half of all Government receipts for that year. Both encroach on State rights and the income tax is also double taxation.

Federal income-tax collections affect 20 States that have State income-tax laws and it is double taxation without any State credit allowed to those States, whereas the State credit of 80 per cent removes the double tax on inheritances. No one at this time dares advocate a repeal of the Federal income tax law, although no State credit is given.

Not only a repeal of the Federal estate tax and the Federal income tax, however, are to be attempted eventually, but in view of his recommendation for a sales tax to float the soldiers' compensation bill, Secretary Mellon will, presumably, favor also a repeal of the State inheritance and income-tax laws and will be a strong and influential supporter of a sales tax. His argument then will be that to relieve capital from tax burdens will help business. The sales tax in 1923 was defeated by wide indignation evidenced by protests from all the great labor and farm organizations that believed wealth, largely created by the last war, desired to shift its tax burdens over to consumption taxes to be paid by the 4,000,000 doughboys and the millions of other wage earners and farmers who through higher prices would then pay taxes on everything they consume. The powerful Hearst press then and since during every session seeks the passage of a sales tax and is an able supporter of Secretary Mellon in that particular.

Mr. Chairman, a vigorous effort to repeal the Federal inheritance tax is threatened as a forerunner of a later effort to repeal the Federal income tax. This eventual purpose is the judgment of legislators who from the day the first income-tax bill was passed have been active in protecting these sources of income. State laws to the same end will then be assailed by the same powerful interests. In House committee hearings strong lobbies appeared in Washington well financed and engaged in flooding Congress with propaganda to this end.

MILLIONAIRES INCREASED 300 PER CENT UNDER HIGH TAXES

In 1914 this country, based on reported incomes, had 7,509 millionaires. In 1926 the number had increased to 30,513 millionaires, based on their reported incomes. In other words, in 12 years, during and since the war and a period of unprecedented high taxes, if paid by them, millionaires increased over 300 per cent in number in this country and their total concentrated wealth was in a much larger proportion.

Prosperity it is alleged in some quarters is more diffused than ever before and corporations are now alleged to be owned by "the people" who have come into their own. After skimming the cream off from manipulated corporations, including consolidations, stocks have been unloaded by professional operators. Often numerous split-ups previously occurred among these operators. To induce the lambs to buy these manipulated stocks past profits are cited, but in all history the average man from the humblest wage worker to the white-collared floor walker has never been so burdened with purchases on credit, on partial payments that mortgage his income and peace of mind for years to come, irrespective of his earning capacity or fixed employment. High war prices have continued.

Prosperity comes last to the small taxpayer. He is the first to feel its departure and he outnumbers the millionaires a thousand to one. The millions yet living on farms who rarely have been able to hold their taxes and farm mortgages down to war-time figures are not urging the Secretary's particular tax-cut program that the committee has refused to follow in the estate tax repeal.

FEW FARMERS PAY INCOME TAXES

Three million people, we are advised, have abandoned their farms within the past six years. Those remaining in many cases hold onto their places because of no other place to go. They are not interested in estate or income tax reduction, for they have little to do with either, but they will be rudely awakened if they have to pay a sales tax. A repeal of the Federal estate tax is a long step toward a sales tax.

To the 30,000 millionaires and several hundred thousand others in affluent circumstances out of our 120,000,000 people, the Federal income tax gained after many legislative struggles and the Federal inheritance tax are constant nightmares. Repeal of the Federal estate tax and repeal of the Federal income tax now based on the principle of ability to pay will both be demanded.

Mr. Chairman, a sales tax and indirect consumption tax must be substituted before wealth can force a repeal of both the Federal estate and income tax laws. Facts and evidence in support of these statements heretofore offered will not again be presented in detail, but students of taxation and the influences knocking at the doors of Congress all realize that arguments by powerful lobbies will be urged at this session and constantly hereafter for the early repeal of the inheritance and later for the repeal of the income taxes and for the substitution of a sales tax to provide revenues for the Government. The estate-tax-repeal lobby, well financed and eloquently represented by high-priced speakers, does not include in its numbers any laborers or farmers. The latter rely on Congress to represent them without any argument.

The Federal estate-tax-repeal lobby that reflects Secretary Mellon's views never sleeps, and its efforts are to be vigorously employed at the other end of the Capitol this session. The 30,000 millionaires can well afford to contribute unlimited funds to this lobby to "educate" Congress on the subject, because the Secretary alone, with holdings now rated by well-informed persons at from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000, could afford to give 10 per cent or more of his vast wealth toward that repeal "education."

OUR FEDERAL ESTATE TAX NOW IS ONLY ONE-HALF THAT OF ENGLAND

The maximum Federal inheritance tax rate is now 20 per cent of net estates exceeding $10,000,000. England and other countries have a maximum estate tax of 40 per cent, or double that of our own, with proportionate larger collections, but Secretary Mellon, in his presentation to the Ways and Means Committee, declared that no estate tax should be levied in this country excepting in times of war. Why not in the wake of war?

His cry was echoed by the press. Powerful influences immediately gathered in Washington to repeat his slogan and to sound his praises. Like other declarations of Secretary Mellon, who has been likened to Hamilton, his statement, I submit, will not stand analysis.

Our national war debt of $18,000,000,000, or eighteen times the pre-war figure, must be paid. It is a great war debt that will hang over our country for many years. It is as imperative for us to pay this $18,000,000,000 as though war was now with us. Every other country engaged in the last war recognizes its debt situation by maintaining its estate, income, and other war taxes.

For the Secretary to say that because the sound of guns has stopped the sources of great wealth and graduated taxation should be dried up is folly unknown elsewhere in the world and not worthy of a second Hamilton, whose personal tax contribution to-day is probably larger than that of a thousand combined other taxpayers on the average, and whose personal wealth probably exceeds the combined fluid wealth of the country when Alexander Hamilton was our first Secretary.

For what has this great wealth been collected by one individual, and to whom is it to be given? The present Secretary can not take this vast wealth, reaching hundreds of millions, with him nor can any of the other 30,000 millionaires carry theirs beyond the grave. According to statistics that wealth has increased over 300 per cent in 12 years, indicating the 30,000 were not heavily taxed in the past compared with many millions of people who have been struggling for a bare livelihood.

THE ESTATE TAX IS A JUST TAX

The estate tax is the most easily paid; it can not be shifted nor avoided, and it is the most just tax in principle that can be levied and paid. That is the judgment of economists of note. No estate tax or income tax has unjustly curtailed the accumulation of wealth by a handful of 30,000 millionaires, and whether the accumulation of the 30,000 have occurred through honest or dishonest means is not even the test, for they are able to pay the tax and should do so. If liquor bootleggers can be held by the Treasury to a payment of income taxes from their bootlegging activities, why should great wealth be permitted to avoid the Federal estate tax it now pays.

European countries like ourselves are paying their war debts in part by a 40 per cent maximum rate in their estate taxes. Unless all their financial experts and economists generally are at fault, Secretary Mellon's statement as to that tax and "war" debts is incorrect. His personal interest of upward of $100,000,000 in a Federal estate tax if to be paid at present rates may unconsciously influence his judgment as to taxes and also his recollection that our war debt is not paid. Until the $18,000,000,000 national debt is wiped out the 30,000 millionaires and those best able to pay should willingly pay their rightful share of taxes whether based on incomes or estates.

When urging that estate taxes properly belong to the State the Secretary failed to say that Pennsylvania has an inheritance tax law of only 2 per cent maximum or the smallest rate among all the States. Compared with the 20 per cent Federal maximum estate tax it is only one-tenth excepting as to the tax on collateral heirs. Secretary Mellon has persuaded Congress to reduce the English maximum estate tax rates we formerly had to just one-half of the English tax rates. Possibly the same reason accounts in Pennsylvania for its 2 per cent maximum State rate. Wyoming has that same rate.

STATES THAT HAVE NO ESTATE TAXES

Florida, now bidding for wealthy residents from Wisconsin, Illinois, New York, and other States, advertises it is a State without any estate tax for those who will come within its hospitable boundaries. Its taxes are collected from other sources. For years Florida circulated Northern States with attractive literature, but more inviting than any argument concerning its salubrious climate was its appeal to men of wealth who made their fortunes in other States to move to Florida for a temporary "residence" every year so as to avoid any estate-tax payments. Wisconsin furnished many such men, and the same is true of Minnesota, Illinois, and other northern States. These people "reside" in Florida briefly, but live in their northern homes eight months in the year.

In order to advertise to the world it is a haven of refuge from inheritance taxes Florida adopted a constitutional amendment providing its legislature shall not impose estate taxes. Nevada followed the same example of an estate-tax refuge as well as for would-be divorcees of the country, but of the 48 States, practically all, with two or three exceptions, have adopted and collect some kind of an estate tax, from the California rate of 12 per cent maximum down to the 2 per cent maximum in Pennsylvania and Wyoming. On indirect relations and with strangers to the deceased the fixed maximum rate is frequently higher.

Secretary Mellon complained of double taxation by both the State and Federal Government where such State taxes exist. The Pennsylvania and Wyoming maximum tax of 2 per cent is nominal, and if the Federal estate tax is repealed residents of Pennsylvania and Wyoming will carry their estates to the grave practically intact, yielding to the State only 2 per cent except to collateral relations.

Mr. Chairman, Congress has machinery for investigation and enforcement of both income and inheritance taxes. So, in justice to the States, Congress passed an amendment giving to all the States a credit based on their State laws up to 80 per cent of all Federal estate taxes collected where a State inheritance tax is paid. If the State has no estate taxes as in the State of Florida, then the northern resident may change his residence to the land of flowers, but the estate tax will not be escaped because the Government collects the tax from residents of all States with this difference that if Florida voluntarily absolved all its residents from estate taxes in the hopes of attracting wealthy people from 45 States then the tax not levied and collected by the State remains in the Federal Treasury.

New York has a maximum rate of 4 per cent for direct kindred: Tennessee and Vermont 5 per cent; Massachusetts, Texas, and North Carolina 6 per cent; Michigan 8 per cent; and Washington, Arkansas, and Wisconsin have a maximum rate of 10 per cent, while California is slightly higher.

On estates given to strangers or collateral kindred the maximum rates in each State are ordinarily higher, but, with the credit permitted to the State of 80 per cent of the Federal tax, the tax can not now be considered a double tax.

Until the two or three complaining States readjust their rates so they do not unscrupulously bid for residents from other States, any estate-tax loss is chargeable to the policy of the State that endeavors to rob other States of their residents by promised estate-tax exemptions.

REPEAL OF FEDERAL ESTATE TAXES MEANS REPEAL OF STATE TAXES

Only by retaining the Federal tax will the 48 States be induced to seek uniform State rates and only by retaining the Federal tax will States retain their own State inheritance taxes. The moment the powerful estate-tax lobby succeeds in a repeal of the Federal estate tax law, at that moment the same lobby will shift the scene of operations to repeal the estate tax laws of more than 40 States. I am speaking for the protection of every State, including my own, when I point out the danger of repealing the Federal estate tax as urged by Secretary Mellon in his argument before the Ways and Means Committee. It will involve a loss to Wisconsin of over $2,000,000 annually if the State tax is repealed and of $100,000,000 to the country at large.

An assault on the State inheritance laws in every State will be followed next by a demand for the repeal of the Federal income tax law that has been weakened by amendments and court decisions, which tax will fall in its turn. A sales tax that taxes every man "equally," not in proportion to his ability to pay, will then be substituted on the theory that any tax is a burden to business. Then the laboring man with six children and six pairs of shoes and six mouths to feed will pay six times the tax that need be paid by Mr. Mellon, subject to the different price paid by him for shoes and food. Not 2 per cent increase as represented by sales-tax proponents, but many times 2 per cent, depending on the number of turnovers. That is a "consumption or sales tax."

FEDERAL ESTATE TAXES, BY STATES, IN 1925

In 1925 the Federal estate tax amounted to $101,421,766, collected from the 48 States, including Florida and Nevada. New York, of course, contributed the major part, but this is explained by a tendency of people of wealth from the remaining 47 States to migrate to New York when spending their last days. In Florida the Federal estate tax collected in 1922 was $189,130 and that same year Wisconsin paid $1,291,782, or nearly ten times as much. California paid $4,241,140; Pennsylvania, $8,329,481; and New York, $47,023,286. In 1925, or three years thereafter, when northern residents rushed to Florida, the Federal estate taxes collected in Florida were $1,217,702; Wisconsin paid $1,125,099; California, $4,412,641; Pennsylvania, $10,123,406; and New York, $34,334,108. A jump in Federal estate taxes in Florida in four years from $189,130 to $1,217,702 indicates why the fountain of eternal youth has its variable moods, and why the Federal taxing machinery is of help to the States where they have like taxes to collect. State inheritance taxes collected in 1926 reaching $43,470,468 for New York and $2,034,989 for Wisconsin were credited to the extent of 80 per cent of the Federal estate tax, but Florida received nothing from estate taxes. Florida "residents" who had gone there from New York, Wisconsin, and other States to avoid their local State taxes paid tribute to the Federal Government, without any particular gain to the expatriated northern taxpayer and none to Florida. We do not love Florida less, but our own States more, when asking for square dealing.

A reduction in corporation tax in the pending bill from a present 13½ per cent rate to a lower rate is relatively not important. Nearly $100,000,000 is absorbed with every 1 per cent corporation tax, and a 2½ per cent reduction would dispose of the existing annual surplus according to estimates by the Treasury; but of infinite importance in our Federal taxing system is the proposal to wipe out the Federal estate tax, even as Secretary Mellon, supported by President Harding, unsuccessfully urged a Mellon tax bill and also a sales tax on Congress when the soldiers' compensation bill was passed over their opposition.

The Federal estate tax income of $100,000,000 annually in round numbers subject to State credits can not be wiped out this session if the surplus is absorbed by corporation-tax reductions or a repeal of remaining nuisance taxes, but the action of the House is only a first engagement. The real fight to repeal the Federal estate tax, when the time is propitious, will be made in the Senate. Possibly an amended Treasury tax reduction estimate may occur after this tax bill leaves the House, but in any event the powerful lobby and the gallery of State governors who urge that repeal were not brought here by accident. They are expected to overwhelm Congress even as the Mellon bill propaganda swept the country when Mr. Mellon gave the signal—but failed to sweep Congress. Congress refused to be stampeded in time of peace by war propaganda methods.

GOVERNORS WHO ORATE AGAINST THEIR OWN STATES

Mr. Chairman, governors of States are brought here by the estate-tax-repeal lobby to force repeal of a law that under its 80 per cent State credit provision protects and preserves their own State inheritance tax laws until we are forcibly reminded that the average man may easily be induced to sign a petition, without reading, to hang himself when executives of great States selected to guard the financial system of their States exercise no better caution.

They are captured by the lobby's glib argument of interference with State rights, when in fact the 80 per cent State credit protects the taxing State from faithless flapper invitations of any tax-free State. Only by retention of the Federal estate tax can State taxes be maintained through the 80 per cent State credit regulation, and it must be remembered that the Federal estate tax exempts the average estate left by 9 out of every 10 deceased persons.

State governors who favor a repeal of the Federal estate tax because of its interference with State rights in like manner seek to destroy our Federal income tax law that has been confirmed twice by the American people through constitutional amendments. Both the Federal income tax and the estate tax necessarily are invasions of State boundaries, and in most States to some extent result in double tax payments by the citizens affected. When these Federal taxes are repealed the estate taxes in the States will become a target for the lobby's fire and a vicious sales tax, the lobby's alternative will know no State boundaries when leechlike it fastens itself onto the necessities of life that every person consumes.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AUTOMATIC VOTING MACHINE

Since the World War there has come to the American Congress among other powerful lobbies a substitute for all the study service and statesmanship that governed the deliberation of Congress in the earlier days of American history. Wisely or unwisely our forefathers placed the responsibility for legislation on the American Congress governed only by the Constitution and the presidential right of veto. That responsibility is construed by the United States Chamber of Commence to have been shifted. A superbody now exists that neither studies nor finds need of statesmanship but undertakes to decide momentous questions by simply voting from Dan to Beersheba its preference, unaffected by facts or arguments.

It waives the constitutional prohibitions and directions that govern Congress and by a gesture substitutes mechanical voting, nondeliberative methods. By directing its membership through suggestion how to vote on subjects that presumably have not enlisted the study of 5 per cent of its highly intelligent organization, Congress is now solemnly, frequently, and vigorously informed as to legislation by the United States Chamber of Commerce, that reiterates its 850,000 membership. By a pompously announced vote this "chamber" decides that all taxes affecting its 850,000 membership are objectionable to a large majority of that body. These include a substantial reduction in corporation taxes, a repeal of all remaining war excise taxes, repeal of the Federal estate tax, also protection of the Mississippi Valley against future floods, opposition to any proposal for a Government shipbuilding program, and so forth. Like the old-fashioned church pastor who in his prayers and sermons told the Lord just what to do and how and when to do it, this superbody by "voting" solves all the troublesome problems which 500 Senators and Members were elected by 120,000,000 people to settle.

Without argument pro or con, the American Congress is advised by the chamber of commerce 850,000 membership that the wise constitutional provision which permits each House to be the judge of its own membership is overruled by the chamber's vote of 36,122 to 2,221, or some similar figure. Only a fraction of the individual membership presumably attempts to vote.

A recent referendum asks these 850,000 members of the chamber of commerce to vote on the question of whether Congress can or should test the qualifications of its own Senators or Members when presenting themselves, however serious the charges pending.

Elihu Root, when United States Senator, offered this opinion over a decade ago:

> There exists no power in our Government short of our amendment of the Constitution of the United States to limit or control the evidence we (the Senate) shall reserve or the grounds on which we shall act in judging the qualification and election of a Member.

The constitutional provision, however, did not anticipate a referendum vote of the 850,000 membership of the chamber of commerce. Referendums that run wild permit bombastic utterances to issue from those who control its overworked referendum machinery. These referendums now cover every conceivable subject from farm relief and flood control and expert tax reduction to weather conditions and the heights of skirts, all to be settled by "votes" of its generally uninformed membership.

"ABSURD" VOTES BY AUTOMATIC MACHINERY

And so in its prodigious task of supervising all legislation in addition to running the "Chamber" units and innumerable golf courses, the individual members of the chamber from Androscoggin on the east and Tillamook on the west and Coffeeville or Biloxi on the Gulf and Kokomo and Oshkosh on the north are "voted" by the directors at Washington to show that the "Chamber," by 2,581 to 199, in its infinite wisdom on all legislative matters desires a tax reduction of $400,000,000 annually, although the Treasury advises we vote only $225,000,000 when flood control, farm relief, and other indefinite expenditures await legislation and appropriations.

President Coolidge declared the "vote" of the "Chamber" to be "absurd." It demands great appropriations and at the same time it "votes" a greater tax cut than either the Treasury or the Ways and Means Committee believes safe to make. The chamber officials who prepare these "votes" assert with positiveness its membership is intelligent. Does anything in the record of its "voting" methods support that belief?

Notwithstanding the Treasury estimate is $225,000,000 for possible safe reduction, the economists, tax experts, and financial authorities voting in Podunk, Tillamook, and Kokomo by their vote have given Congress and the press and the public the exact figures reached by the intelligent (?) voting of its members. Congress and the country may feel relieved that the tax cut voted by the thousands of "Chambers" did not reach eight hundred million dollars instead of four.

Skeptics and scoffers may say that a vote of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, or the Woodmen of the World would be of equal value, based on the lack of information possessed by those whose "votes" are thus solemnly reported to Congress from Pittsburgh to Podunk.

The measures on which this superchamber of commerce directs us how to act necessarily have all been studied in Congress, in committee and in the House and Senate, with the aid of expert information. True, also, in House and Senate the measures are debated by legislators who often burn midnight oil while grasping details that are made known to the chamber of commerce voters without study. When the several States by appropriate action delegate this chamber of commerce to tell Congress what to do then individual responsibility of Representatives will cease, but until that time comes every Member naturally inquires what interests and influences are responsible for some of the suggestions that are solemnly voted by the chamber's 850,000 membership.

Congress has not always accepted these commands, and numberless votes lie at the bottom of the average wastebasket, yet the chamber directors with a flourish of trumpets in the press always announce the result of the last vote, that to the lay mind assumes at times to regulate the solar and legislative system and votes that the law of gravity and the inheritance tax should both be repealed by the Seventieth Congress.

HOW THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AFFECTS CONGRESS

If I remember correctly, this superlegislative advisory body once advised Congress to pass a vicious sales tax, that would have added a billion or more dollars to the high cost of living for ninety-five-odd wage earners out of every 100 people in order to relieve the remaining 5 per cent of a portion of the income tax levied against large incomes, frequently accumulated through war speculations. The sales tax or consumption tax, backed by the American Chamber of Commerce, did not recommend itself to Congress to the extent of even getting a favorable recommendation from a single committee of Congress. A vote of 15,000,000 Literary Digest selected names decided overwhelmingly that Congress should defeat a soldiers' compensation bill. Congress vetoed the vote and also placed its veto over a presidential veto. The chamber of commerce also shrieked against "capitalizing loyalty"; at least those members of the chamber who had cost-plus war contracts so voted.

The Mellon tax reduction bill looked like a winner and was enthusiastically referendumed by the chamber of commerce because of its generous tax reductions to those best able to pay. Again Congress after much study and debate ignored the referendum vote that was collected for its guidance. The chamber's referendum vote against the soldiers' compensation bill, like the Literary Digest vote, did not reflect the judgment of the American Congress, that was selected by the Constitution to determine such questions. Publicity but not legislation seems to be the primary purpose of the chamber's "vote."

AN OVERWORKED LOBBY

The American Chamber of Commerce is an important organization in our business life and within its legitimate field has a well-defined service to perform. In a lesser degree it may be contended Rotary Clubs, Lions Clubs, Kiwanis Clubs, and countless other organizations that thrive and prosper in America are of service, both in a large business sense and in the upbuilding of communities. Thus far none of these organizations has regularly given Congress the benefit of individual street opinions on legislative matters, nor can any objection be offered where the slightest intelligent understanding is evidenced by the vote returned.

We may soon look for group influences from the multitude of farm organizations that represent one-third of our population, and it is questionable whether the judgment of the tiller of the soil who has many moments of serious thought will not be of legislative value to the lawmaker equal to the votes on every conceivable subject now heralded through the press from the headquarters of the chamber of commerce.

This humble protest is not offered against the harmless referendums that regularly and often appear on Members' desks, but it is against a mechanical voting system, often without consideration, or at most, hazy street opinions gathered in hayrake style, then emblazoned on the front pages of reputable papers as the solemn deliberate conclusion of a highly reputable organization.

If its work is directed to enlightening members on legislative proposals every legislative agent has a useful duty to perform. The only criticism lodged against certain lobbies, including foremost the chamber of commerce, is the method used to try and influence legislative decisions. Those favoring the retention of the Federal estate tax, which it opposes, and Federal income tax without the emasculation of either, are our constituents back home, who have no paid lobby to send to Washington but who have elected their Representatives to protect their interests. That duty each Member of Congress must perform according to his best judgment, and the responsibility rests on votes in Congress and not on referendum votes cast by members of the chamber of commerce or by other organizations.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, earlier in the debate a question was asked of the gentleman who then had the floor, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], and as yet the question has not been answered.

The question was how many people would be affected and how much revenue would be lost if we were to increase the present exemption of $1,500 for single persons to $3,000, and the exemption of married persons from $3,500 to $5,000.

According to the 1925 returns, this increase of the exemption for single persons would exempt 676,000 single persons who now pay a tax, with a resulting loss of revenue of $7,600,000. The increase of the present exemption of $3,500 to $5,000 for married people would exempt from the operation of the present income tax law 551,000 more people who now pay an income tax, with an additional loss of revenue of $6,706,000.

But the significant fact then remains that although this total of $14,306,000 represents the relief that would be given by this increase in exemption to the person of small income, an additional loss of revenue of $136,000,000 would result, or to put it the other way, such an increase in exemptions would affect all those in the higher brackets by saving them $136,000,000.

I think these facts ought to be clear to the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that the total loss in revenue would be $150,000,000?

Mr. BEEDY. One hundred and fifty million dollars would be the total loss, of which only about $14,000,000 would benefit the man of small income, and only approximately 1,000,000 of our entire population would then come within the operation of our income tax law, which now applies to about two and one-half millions of our people.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 104. ACCUMULATION OF SURPLUS TO EVADE SURTAXES—1928 OR SUBSEQUENT TAXABLE YEARS

(a) Tax on personal holding company: If any personal holding company permits its undistributed profits for the taxable year 1928 or any succeeding taxable year to exceed 30 per cent of the sum of its net income for such year plus the amount of the dividend deduction and interest upon obligations of the United States, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for such taxable year, in addition to the tax on corporations imposed by section 13(a), a tax equal to 25 per cent of such undistributed profits.

(b) Definitions: As used in this section—

(1) The term "personal holding company" means any corporation if (A) at least 80 per cent of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from rents, royalties, dividends, interest (whether or not tax exempt), annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers in securities) gains from the sale of securities, and (B) either—

Eighty per cent or more of its voting stock (exclusive of stock limited as to dividends and exclusive of stock redeemable upon less than 30 days' notice) is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, through affiliation, stock ownership, voting trust agreements, or otherwise, by or for not more than 10 individuals; or

The right to receive 80 per cent or more of the dividends distributed by the corporation is vested, directly or indirectly, through affiliation, stock ownership, voting trust agreements, or otherwise, in not more than 10 individuals;

But such term shall not include any banking or insurance corporation.

(2) The term "dividend deduction" means the deduction specified in section 23 (p).

(3) The term "interest upon obligations of the United States" means interest upon obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax in whole or in part in the hands of an individual owner.

(4) The term "undistributed profits" means the net income for the taxable year increased by the amount of the dividend deduction and interest upon obligations of the United States, but diminished by—

(A) the amount of tax under section 13(a) for the taxable year;

(B) the amount of dividends declared out of earnings or profits for the taxable year, not later than the 15th day of the third month following the close of such taxable year and payable prior to the 15th day of the sixth month following the close of such taxable year. If dividends so declared are not actually paid prior to such date, then the amount not so paid shall be included in the undistributed profits, and the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be redetermined in accordance therewith.

(c) Tax on corporation formed or availed of to evade surtax.—If any corporation, however created or organized, other than a personal holding company, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon any of its shareholders through the medium of permitting its gains and profits to remain accumulated, instead of being divided or distributed among its shareholders, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1928 and succeeding taxable years, in addition to the tax on corporations imposed by section 13(a), a tax of 25 per cent of the net income of the corporation increased by the amount of the dividend deduction and interest upon obligations of the United States. Such tax shall be computed, levied, collected, and paid upon the same basis and in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as that tax. The following shall be prima facie evidence that a corporation, other than a "personal holding company" as hereinbefore defined, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of surtax upon any of its shareholders:

(1) That the corporation is a mere holding or investment company; or

(2) That the gains or profits are permitted to remain accumulated beyond the reasonable needs of the business. In determining whether gains or profits are permitted to remain accumulated beyond the reasonable needs of the business there shall not be included gains or profits remaining accumulated during a prior taxable year for which the corporation has paid a tax imposed by this section.

(d) Information statements.—A corporation which in the taxable year 1928 or any succeeding taxable year permits the accumulation of more than 60 per cent of its net income increased by the amount of the dividend deduction and interest upon obligations of the United States, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, shall (1) file as a part of its return a statement giving in detail the reasons for the accumulation and the purposes to which the amounts accumulated are to be devoted, and (2) from time to time thereafter file reports under oath giving the disposition of the amounts so accumulated until all such amounts have been accounted for.

(e) Optional tax on shareholders.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) shall not apply in respect of any taxable year if all the shareholders of the corporation include in their gross income, at the time of filing their returns, the amount of their entire distributive shares of the undistributed profits of the corporation for such taxable year. The tax imposed by subsection (c) shall not apply in respect of any taxable year if all the shareholders of the corporation include in their gross income at the time of filing their returns the amount of their entire distributive shares of the gains and profits remaining accumulated beyond the reasonable needs of the business as determined by the commissioner. Any amount so included in the gross income of the shareholder shall be treated as a dividend received by the shareholder. A shareholder who has so included in his gross income his distributive share shall be entitled to receive exempt from tax subsequent distributions made by the corporation out of earnings or profits until such taxpayer has received exempt distributions in the amount of such share.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of calling attention to this section 104. Unless you have the corresponding law of 1926 you probably do not know what the provisions of section 104 mean. I know I would not unless I had had some information about it.

Section 104 is entirely new. It is inserted in the bill in response to the advisory committee's criticism of the administration of section 220 in the present law. I am sure you will remember what section 220 in the present law is. It was intended to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to force corporations to distribute their profits and subject their shareholders to the tax levied by Congress. It has been in the statute for some years.

The advisory committee, in a very delicate way, intimated that the Treasury Department has not enforced the law. I say "delicate," because they call attention to the fact that it is very difficult to administer the law, and the result is that they suggest a remedy.

If you will take the report of the advisory committee that was placed in the box yesterday, you will find that the joint committee of the House and Senate recommended every provision in this advisory committee's report with the single exception of section 220. They did not recommend 220, but said they make no recommendation for 220. The reason was because the joint committee could not come to an agreement. The reason we could not come to an agreement is because some gentlemen, including the Treasury Department, is opposed to the recommendation of the advisory committee, which is in effect that you give an advantage of 20 per cent in taxes to those profits that are distributed against those retained in the treasury of the corporation.

I think that ought to be put in. I wish Congress would make a rate in this bill of 10 and 12 per cent instead of a flat rate of 11½ per cent. I wish it would make a rate of 10 per cent on distributed profits and 12 on profits retained in the treasury of the corporation. In this way you have an inducement to distribute the profits because you get an advantage of 2 per cent.

The individuals evading this tax do not want that done. No longer ago than the first part of last week you saw where the Federal Trade Commission, in response to a resolution of the United States Senate, made an investigation to ascertain the amount of stock dividends declared in 1920, and making a comparison for similar periods prior to 1920, when the Supreme Court held you could not tax stock dividends.

Now, that was an astounding report to me—an official report made by a bureau of our Government that six and one-half billion dollars of stock dividends were declared in seven years.

If the Government had been receiving a tax on that, we would have got something over $700,000,000. Suppose we distributed 50 per cent of it. The Government would have received in the surplus brackets from those gentlemen who did not pay the tax, in round numbers $300,000,000. In other words, the Treasury of the United States, by virtue of the nonenforcement of section 220 by the Treasury Department, has lost from three hundred to eight hundred million dollars in the last seven years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Now the committee—and Mr. GREEN is more responsible for it than anyone else—has in good faith undertaken to draw a provision that will be mandatory on the Treasury Department. When you find the Secretary of the Treasury is not enforcing the law as Congress intended, because he is not in sympathy with their paying in the higher brackets and compelling them to pay any more taxes than they can help, Congress now seeks to compel him to do it. When the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] asked one of the expert draftsmen if he thought this would do the job, the fellow being honest, had to say, no, he did not believe it would, that they could get around this tax.

But, gentlemen, you could not get around it; it would be impossible to avoid it if you carried out the report of the advisory committee and gave a preferential to the fellow who made an honest distribution of his profits as against one who makes a dishonest distribution and holds it in his treasury and then declares a stock dividend, and pays no tax. Six and a half billion dollars in six years—more than $1,000,000,000 a year of stock dividends declared in this country as compared with $300,000,000 six years prior to that time! You know and I know and everyone else must know that those profits were retained in the corporations and issued in the form of stock dividends to avoid the surtax of the individual who would have received those dividends from the corporations if they had been distributed.

You are not going to reach them with this. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has done about as good a job as he can do; but how can you reach it? I do not care what laws you write upon the statute books, if you have not a man who is in sympathy with the law to enforce it, you will not get anywhere with it. I do not care what you put in that statute, if you turn it over to a man who is not in sympathy with the statute, he will find a way to avoid it, and that is what has been done with section 220 for the past six years. There is not a single instance, so far as I know, where the Secretary of the Treasury has collected what the statute said that he should collect, where a corporation fails to distribute the amount of money to its shareholders that it ought to distribute. You know there have been some instances in this country—and I think the chairman of the committee, if you will ask him when he gets on the floor, will tell you that he thinks that there have been instances where the Treasury ought to have enforced this statute. If there have been, and the Treasury did not enforce it, was it maladministration? No. It is just simply because the present Secretary of the Treasury is not in sympathy with these high brackets, is not in sympathy with this graduated surtax and the result is that wherever his discretion comes, he uses it in favor of the taxpayer. I thought the House ought to know what these provisions were intended for, and I took the floor for a moment for that purpose.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does not the gentleman know that we could not possibly invoke that section because the information necessary is absolutely unobtainable.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that if he had been Secretary of the Treasury he would have made an effort at least to carry out that law, because he would have felt in honor bound to do it and no effort has been made to enforce it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas is right. This is a very important section. The gentleman from Texas has made an argument, and I am glad he has, because he has the brains and ability to make an argument when he tries. When he tries to entertain the House, he is a great entertainer also, and that is what he was doing last Saturday.

Section 104 is supplementary to section 105. Section 105 is very nearly the old section 220 reenacted. There is a slight change in it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is also right in saying that I have not been satisfied with the way that section 220 has been administered, and the gentleman from Texas is practically right also in saying that there has been almost nothing collected under it. A small sum has been collected under it.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] in his interrogatory which he propounded to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] referred to one part of 220. There is another part of 220 that is not discretionary at all because (b) of section 105 of this bill provides that—> the fact that any corporation is a mere holding or investment company, or that the gains or profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to escape the surtax.

Possibly the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be right about the second alternative, but the first part of it is not alternative at all. It requires that when a corporation is a mere holding or investment company it shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to escape the surtax.

Mr. GIFFORD. I was trying to express myself in this manner: The difficulty is that this section can not be administered. It is suggested that the officials could do it. This part of the law can not be administered, as sufficient information is unobtainable, and I am unwilling to have it blamed on this administration because it could never be administered under any administration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman is in error in that. There has been no demonstration, at least, of any effort to enforce it. At all events, this subject has interested me greatly, and there was a special report made upon the administration of section 220 by the chief of the investigating division of the joint committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman tell us what the objections were to recommending a preferential tax for those who distributed the profits?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will come to that presently. As I said, there was a special report made, which report showed that the tax had never been assessed. They have not taken any cases to the Board of Tax Appeals. In a general way there has been little, if any, effort made to enforce this section 220 with reference to the evasion of the surtaxes by corporations, and when the surtaxes were so high there was an enormous amount of taxes evaded in this method. I do not think at present there is as much evasion as there was. I do not agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] that the method of putting a differential tax on those profits that are distributed from those not distributed is the proper way to remedy this situation. The trouble about any remedy of that kind is that it hits the honest man just as hard as it hits the dishonest man.

I repeat, the difficulty with the proposition recommended by the advisory committee, the one proposed by the gentleman from Texas, to put a differentiated tax on profits distributed from the rate on profits which are not distributed, hits the honest man who has a necessity for keeping a surplus in his corporation just as hard as the dishonest man who is trying to avoid taxes. If there is anything men do not like to be penalized for it is when they have not done anything wrong. Take the banks in my State. They are having a hard time to try to build up a surplus. The plan proposed by the gentleman from Texas would simply penalize those banks trying to build up a surplus. They lost their surplus in the hard times. Take the small corporations just starting. They have to build up a surplus in order to try to compete with the larger institutions. This provision proposed by the advisory committee, which was not approved by the joint committee, and approved by the gentleman from Texas, would penalize those gentlemen who are honestly endeavoring to build up a surplus which they needed in their business, and without which they could not make a success of their business, and they are hit as hard or harder than those trying to avoid the tax.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The recommendation provided for a blanket tax on all profits not declared whether kept legitimately for building up a surplus or not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; the provision recommended was that there should be a differential of 20 per cent between profits distributed and those which were not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They would tax all profits not distributed whether they were kept for the legitimate building up of a surplus or not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. No matter how legitimate the purpose might be for keeping them—and in a majority of instances the purpose would be entirely legitimate, because in only rather exceptional cases they are trying to avoid the tax—in a majority of cases it penalizes the honest man who is doing what he thought was for the benefit of his corporation in building up a safe and sound institution. For that reason I have been opposed to it. I have done the best I could to try to get something enforceable as against this practice of trying to avoid the surtax by corporations when I proposed this section 104. Now, the gentleman from Texas, probably unwittingly, somewhat misquoted the legislative counsel, Mr. Beaman. What Mr. Beaman said was, it would be possible to avoid section 104. It would be possible to avoid any tax. There is not any tax that could not be avoided. It will not be very easy to avoid it in my judgment or keep from enforcing it. We have got a large number of corporations in this country which are organized simply for the purpose of avoiding the surtax. They do not distribute any dividends, or, if they do, only a small part of them. We have a large number of companies, one-man companies, where one man owns practically all the stock with a few dummies, a secretary and stenographer and two or three others, or something of that kind. They are organized simply for the purpose of avoiding the surtax. We have motion-picture actors even who have incorporated themselves, who do not want to pay tax on their salaries, who hire themselves out to the corporation for a small sum. I do not say that is always done. I think it is rather exceptional, but it has been done, and in that way they have been able to avoid the surtax on large salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, you will observe that this is a tax on personal holding companies, and that personal holding company is defined to mean—> any corporation if—(A) at least 80 per cent of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from rents, royalties, dividends, interest (whether or not tax exempt), annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers in securities) gains from the sale of securities.

In other words, it is intended to reach corporations that have no regular business except cutting off coupons, collecting rents, and receiving dividends.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Has the word "personal" any special significance—"personal holding companies"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think it may be said to have any special significance except the fact they are organized for the real benefit of one person—the person who was trying to get away from the surtax.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It means simply a tax on the holding company?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. The word "personal" was used to define the holding companies a little better. By that means we were able to make a better definition of the companies to which the tax applied.

As I said before, in nearly all of these cases there was one person who really got the benefit of all the profits of the company, but escaped the surtax by reason of the corporation.

Now, I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that these personal holding companies do not include any banking or insurance companies. We want the banks and the insurance companies to have a good surplus and to be perfectly safe, and all banks are justified in building up their business.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Do I understand that by the gentleman's definition of what a personal holding company means, it means a corporation limited to 10 stockholders? I call the gentleman's attention to that part of the provision contained in subdivision 3 on page 57, where it is provided that 80 per cent of the voting stock shall be held by not more than 10 individuals?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As I understand the question of the gentleman, the gentleman is correct. It is confined to those cases.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Confined to cases where the total number of stockholders does not exceed 10?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the gentleman will notice that it does not mean the number of stockholders, but where the right to receive 80 per cent or more of the dividends distributed by the corporation is vested, directly or indirectly, through affiliations, stock ownership, voting trust agreements, or otherwise, in 10 individuals.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It is where there are not more than 10 beneficiaries?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. "Beneficiaries" would be a more accurate term.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman any idea of what would be the practical operation of this if based upon past performances?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You will not find much direct revenue raised by this provision but the effect will be to dissolve a number of these corporations that were formed to escape the surtax, and the persons who own them will pay their surtax in the regular way, the same as other people. That will be the effect.

There may be some of them that will see fit to fight this proposition. Others may try to work out some method of evasion which is not covered by the language here. The statement made by the committee's eminent counsel, Mr. Beaman, may be correct, that there may be still some of them who will work through some process of evasion.

But you will notice that they will take a big risk in attempting to do that. They are liable to a heavy tax. My opinion is that few of them will attempt it. If we can not reach them under this provision 104, we still have the old 220, which with a slight change of verbiage we have still preserved.

I am told by gentlemen familiar with the operations of these corporations and gentlemen connected with large accounting firms and others that section 220 of the present law, while it never brought in any revenue, operated in such a way as to cause a great many of these corporations to dissolve. It has been, in fact, a most excellent scarecrow, if it has been nothing else, and it has driven these people into taking such action as to avoid the penalties prescribed. The committee has been criticized in relation to this matter, and I admit that I myself am not entirely satisfied with the way section 220 has been enforced. At the same time we all must admit that there is some difficulty in administering it, and the old provision that we had before the last law had a joker that was slipped into it in some way—I do not know exactly how—so that we did not consider the Treasury at all to blame for not enforcing section 220 as it was before the law was enacted in 1926. But I want to say this, and it is one thing that I think justifies the creation of the advisory committee: There have been a number of cases commenced against these people. At the time the joint committee was organized, at the time when its staff went to work, my understanding is that there was not a solitary case pending against those people.

I understand that now, to-day, there are 50 cases pending against them. I think a considerable revenue will be got out of them, far more than the cost of the joint committee; I think it will come from this source alone. The attention of the Treasury has been particularly called to this kind of a provision, and I am free to say this to the Members of the House: That I propose to see that the provisions of these two sections are enforced, so far as the Treasury can enforce them. I am not content that they should sit back and say, "We do not think this can be enforced." Let them assess the tax and if the party assessed has any grievance let him go before the board and get a construction. Let the matter be tried out. Of course, we ought to have the statutes applied.

That is the situation, gentlemen, with reference to these two sections. They are, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] said, two very important sections. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I just wanted to say to the chairman of the committee that if he desires to accomplish the purpose entertained under section 204, there should be a change in the definition of a personal holding company; that between the time this bill passes the House and goes to the Senate some thought should be given to that definition. As it now stands, you limit that to 10, and if the person or number of persons are anxious to avoid the law, they certainly would not have any scruples against taking on one additional person.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Those are the persons that would get the dividends.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It should be applied to these beneficiaries rather than the group.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If we do not catch them under section 204, then we can go to section 205, as to the intent; and if they make the attempt to evade, you can get them under 205.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is it not a fact that this paragraph was one of the most difficult things that the committee had to deal with; and if, when this bill goes to the other branch, the gentleman can offer some suggestion that will improve the law and make it more effective in its administration, the committee will be only too glad if he will make the suggestion.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think that would be difficult.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to make a correction in my remarks?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have been speaking of section 105 when I should have been referring to (c) of this particular section. Section 105 applies to the taxable year 1927. That is what misled me for the moment and that is how I came to make that mistake. In my remarks when I referred to section 105 I should have said subdivision (c) on page 58.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPLEMENT B—COMPUTATION OF NET INCOME

[Supplementary to subtitle B, Part II]

SEC. 111. DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF GAIN OR LOSS

(a) Computation of gain or loss: Except as hereinafter provided in this section, the gain from the sale or other disposition of property shall be the excess of the amount realized therefrom over the basis provided in section 113, and the loss shall be the excess of such basis over the amount realized.

(b) Adjustment of basis: In computing the amount of gain or loss under subsection (a)—

(1) Proper adjustment shall be made for any expenditure, receipt, loss, or other item, properly chargeable to capital account, and

(2) The basis shall be diminished by the amount of deductions for exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, amortization, and depletion which have since the acquisition of the property been allowable in respect of such property under this act or prior income tax laws; but in no case shall the amount of the diminution in respect of depletion exceed a depletion deduction computed without reference to discovery value under section 114 (b) (2) or to percentage depletion under section 114 (b) (3). In addition, if the property was acquired before March 1, 1913, the basis (if other than the fair market value as of March 1, 1913) shall be diminished in the amount of exhaustion, wear and tear, obsolescence, and depletion actually sustained before such date, and

(3) In the case of stock the basis shall be diminished by the amount of distributions previously made in respect of such stock, to the extent provided under the law applicable to the year in which the distribution was made.

(c) Amount realized: The amount realized from the sale or other disposition of property shall be the sum of any money received plus the fair market value of the property (other than money) received.

(d) Recognition of gain or loss: In the case of a sale or exchange, the extent to which the gain or loss determined under this section shall be recognized for the purposes of this title, shall be determined under the provisions of section 112.

(e) Installment sales: Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent (in the case of property sold under contract providing for payment in installments) the taxation of that portion of any installment payment representing gain or profit in the year in which such payment is received.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In view of the volume of criticism of the gain or loss feature of the revenue law that comes from my constituents I should be personally grateful if the chairman would here insert a sentence or two explaining why it was impossible to get rid of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman means the tax on capital assets?

Mr. LUCE. No. I refer to the gain or loss provision. All I am after is a word of explanation, because the law is so burdensome and is complained of by so many citizens.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is all very fully explained, as the gentleman will see if he will read the report of the joint committee on page 10. The net revenue from this 12½ per cent tax in 1924 was $39,567,000, and in 1925 it was $109,912,000. We had the joint committee set one of its staff at work on it, and singularly enough we found that by far the greater portion of this tax was paid by those whose incomes were along toward the very highest brackets.

The reason we preserved this tax was, as it seemed to me, at least, that we could not justify ourselves before the people in saying that a man who earns something through the product of his hands or his brain should be taxed upon it, but that the man who held some property for a long time and did nothing with it, or the man who was successful simply in a long-time speculation should be exempted from a tax. We did not see how we could justify ourselves.

Now, it is true that this kind of a tax is not levied in England, but that country is in a different situation from ours. We are constantly developing here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We are constantly developing in this country; our values are expanding; our corporations are developing; the prices of their stocks are rising, and there is an enormous amount of what we sometimes call unearned increment that is not reached in any other way than by this tax. It seems very hard, indeed, that a man who exerts himself to the utmost, so far as his personal exertions are concerned, either, as I said before, by his hands or his brain, should be taxed to the utmost, while those who gather in enormous profits without doing anything should be left untaxed.

Mr. LUCE. The serious complaint that comes to me is because in so many cases the time taken in computing the gain is so far out of proportion to the tax resulting. Has any thought been given to an attempt to get rid of the trivialities in this particular matter?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a fault of administration which we are trying to correct. It becomes purely administrative and we can not reach it directly. I think that in this country we are apt to be meticulous about our taxes, and that is why they get along better in England. They do not always try to collect the last cent, whereas here we think we have got to have the last cent if we spend 10 cents in collecting it. That is one trouble with our tax administration. I hope we will gradually get over it. That is about all I can say on that point, but, as I say, the total of this tax is enormous. As the gentleman will see, it amounted to over $109,000,000 in 1925.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 114. BASIS FOR DEPRECIATION AND DEPLETION.

(a) Basis for depreciation.—The basis upon which exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the same as is provided in section 113 for the purpose of determining the gain or loss upon the sale or other disposition of such property.

(b) Basis for depletion.—

(1) General rule: The basis upon which depletion is to be allowed in respect of any property shall be the same as is provided in section 113 for the purpose of determining the gain or loss upon the sale or other disposition of such property, except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection.

(2) Discovery value in case of mines: In the case of mines discovered by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, the basis for depletion shall be the fair market value of the property at the date of discovery or within 30 days thereafter, if such mines were not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, and if the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost. The depletion allowance based on discovery value provided in this paragraph shall not exceed 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property upon which the discovery was made, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance be less than it would be if computed without reference to discovery value. Discoveries shall include minerals in commercial quantities contained within a vein or deposit discovered in an existing mine or mining tract by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, if the vein or deposit thus discovered was not merely the uninterrupted extension of a continuing commercial vein or deposit already known to exist, and if the discovered minerals are of sufficient value and quantity that they could be separately mined and marketed at a profit.

(3) Percentage depletion for oil and gas wells: In the case of oil and gas wells the allowance for depletion shall be 27½ per cent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: On page 79, after line 24, add the following words: "This paragraph shall not apply to metal mines discovered after approval of this act," and add a new paragraph, as follows:

"In the case of metal mines the allowance for depletion shall be 15 per cent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph."

Mr. ARENTZ. Gentlemen, the matter of depletion of mineral resources has been the cause of a great deal of misunderstanding, the cause of litigation, and of expense to both the Government and the producer of mineral wealth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ARENTZ. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is such an important matter and there are so few here, would the gentleman object to unanimous consent being given that we may return to this to-morrow?

Mr. ARENTZ. I will be pleased to do that; yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to pass over this amendment for the present, with leave to return to it the first thing to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada and all amendments thereto be passed over for consideration the first thing to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any other amendment to this section that this request applies to?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It applies to any amendment to the amendment.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 116. EXCLUSIONS FROM GROSS INCOME

In addition to the items specified in section 22 (b) the following items shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

(a) Earned income from sources without United States: In the case of an individual citizen of the United States, a bona fide nonresident of the United States for more than six months during the taxable year, amounts received from sources without the United States if such amounts constitute earned income as defined in section 31; but such individual shall not be allowed as a deduction from his gross income any deductions properly allocable to or chargeable against amounts excluded from gross income under this subsection.

(b) Teachers in Alaska and Hawaii: In the case of an individual employed by Alaska or Hawaii or any political subdivision thereof as a teacher in any educational institution, the compensation received as such. This subsection shall not exempt compensation paid directly or indirectly by the Government of the United States.

(c) Income of foreign governments: The income of foreign governments received from investments in the United States in stocks, bonds, or other domestic securities owned by such foreign governments, or from interest on deposits in banks in the United States of moneys belonging to such foreign governments, or from any other source within the United States.

(d) Income of States, municipalities, etc.: Income derived from any public utility or the exercise of any essential governmental function and accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or income accruing to the Government of any possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

Whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered in good faith into a contract with any person the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility—

(1) If by the terms of such contract the tax imposed by this title is to be paid out of the proceeds from the operation of such public utility, prior to any division of such proceeds between the person and the State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, and if, but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title, a part of such proceeds for the taxable year would accrue directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then a tax upon the net income from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title, but there shall be refunded to such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia (under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary) an amount which bears the same relation to the amount of the tax as the amount which (but for the imposition of the tax imposed by this title) would have accrued directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia bears to the amount of the net income from the operation of such public utility for such taxable year.

(2) If by the terms of such contract no part of the proceeds from the operation of the public utility for the taxable year would, irrespective of the tax imposed by this title, accrue directly to or for the use of such State, Territory, political subdivision, or the District of Columbia, then the tax upon the net income of such person from the operation of such public utility shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in the manner and at the rates prescribed in this title.

(e) Dividends from "China trade act" corporation: In the case of a person amounts distributed as dividends to or for his benefit by a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, if at the time of such distribution he is a resident of China and the equitable right to the income of the shares of stock of the corporation is in good faith vested in him.

(f) Shipowners' protection and indemnity associations: The receipts of shipowners' mutual protection and indemnity associations, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder; but such corporations shall be subject as other persons to the tax upon their net income from interest, dividends, and rents.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, before we leave section 116, "exclusions from gross income," I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I presume this applies to the salary and compensation of the officials of the States and municipalities and, of course, their salaries are exempt.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are exempt under the Constitution.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is what I knew.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So far as my own inclinations are concerned, if I had any way about it, I think they ought to pay just the same as Federal employees, but we can not do it under the Constitution.

Mr. BRIGGS. Evidently, ever since the case of McCullough against Maryland was decided a great many years ago by the Supreme Court of the United States, that is not permissible; but I heard at one time that there was an effort being made to subject the officials of State and municipal governments, and of the subdivisions and agencies of the States and municipalities, to the tax, but I could not credit such information. I did not think this was in the mind of the committee and I just wanted this expression from the chairman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; and the committee did not deem it necessary they should be specially mentioned, being exempt under a constitutional provision.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, and read down to and including line 10, on page 90.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1, the revenue bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

JUAN SORIANO

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State requesting the submission anew to the present Congress of the matter of a claim against the United States for the death on October 2, 1923, at Guerra, Dominican Republic, of Juan Soriano, a Dominican subject, who was killed by the landing of an airplane belonging to the United States Marine Corps, which formed the subject of a report made by the Secretary of State to me in March, 1926, and my message to the Congress dated March 22, 1926, which comprise Senate Document No. 84, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, copies of which are furnished for the convenient information of the Congress.

I renew my recommendation originally made, that in order to effect a settlement of this claim the Congress, as an act of grace and without reference to the legal liability of the United States in the premises, authorize an appropriation in the sum of $2,000, and I bring the matter anew to the attention of the present Congress in the hope that the action recommended may receive favorable consideration.

A joint resolution for this purpose passed the House of Representatives on January 17, 1927, and was favorably reported to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations, but failed to be reached in the Senate before final adjournment of the Sixty-ninth Congress.

The attention of Congress is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State and House Document No. 631, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, therewith inclosed, in which the facts regarding this conference are set forth.

BOARD OF REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. NEWTON, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, and Mr. MOORE of Virginia as members of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ADDRESS OF HON. R. WALTON MOORE

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] on the life and services of George Rogers Clark.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THATCHER. Mr. Speaker, under the privilege granted me therefor, I extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therewith a very able and interesting address recently delivered by our greatly esteemed colleague, R. WALTON MOORE of Virginia, touching the life and service of one of America's most illustrious Revolutionary heroes, George Rogers Clark. Though a native of old Virginia, General Clark lived the greater portion of his life in the Kentucky region and died there. To-day his sacred dust lies in beautiful Cave Hill Cemetery in the city of Louisville, within my congressional district:

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK DELEGATION FROM KENTUCKY AND THE OLD NORTHWEST TERRITORY STATES

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is with something of maternal pride the people of this Commonwealth view the greatness of the States of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, which afford such a marvelous example of American genius and enterprise. A welcome evidence of the growing intercourse and contact is that representative citizens of those States are now visiting the scenes of their social and political ancestry, to which attach the noble memories which are our common heritage. We hope they will find here that the structure built upon the old foundations is being expanded and strengthened, without forgetfulness of the past, but mindful of the requirements of the present and the future, and with the same steady vigor that is marking the progress of their own communities.

Those memories are, indeed, the heritage of us all, for it is clear that the States mentioned and also that portion of Minnesota lying east of the Mississippi River when the Revolution began were as much a part of Virginia as the locality where we are now assembled. The country west of the Mississippi previously a part of Virginia ceased to be so only when it was transferred by the British Government to Spain, which later transferred it to France, and it might have continued always under French rule except for the wisdom of the statesmen who effected the Louisiana Purchase.

When independence had been declared and the Revolution was being fought under the flag of the United States, the title of Virginia to Kentucky and the territory northwest of the Ohio River was legally unassailable. Consider the facts: By the charter of King James I, the boundary of the Virginia Colony covered all the region from sea to sea, 200 miles north and 200 miles south from a straight line running westward from Cape or Point Comfort, a region 400 miles wide, stretching from the Atlantic westward to the Pacific. While the colonial status existed the British Government, exercising its dominant authority, made deductions from this original area not only by the grant to Spain but by limited grants to Maryland, Pennsylvania, and the Carolinas. But there was left to Virginia Kentucky and the Northwest Territory. And accordingly, the first Virginia constitution, the first written constitution in the entire world providing a complete system of government, after reference to the grants made by the Crown, it was declared "that the western and northwestern extent of Virginia shall in all other respects stand as fixed by the charter * * *." Virginia's ownership could not fairly be disputed. Kentucky and the northwest belonged to her as a colony and automatically continued hers when she became a State. Ownership and sovereignty were vested in her and could not be elsewhere. The principle upon which her claim rested was recognized by the Articles of Confederation, and the Continental Congress never denied that she was entitled to rely upon that principle. Without any elaboration it may be noted that subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States the soundness of the Virginia claim received judicial approval in a case decided by her own court and in two cases decided by the Supreme Court, in which Chief Justice Marshall delivered the opinion.

So long as the western country was an almost unsettled wilderness there could be no real governmental institutions or activities. There was even vagueness about the remote boundaries of the great Virginia counties, whose entire population lived in the East. Postponing for a moment any reference to Kentucky and turning to the Northwest Territory, the story is of deep and absorbing interest. That territory was the subject of anxious consideration at an acute stage of the Revolution. The Articles of Confederation had been adopted by the Continental Congress but not ratified by all the States. They reserved to the several States the unoccupied western lands. In December, 1778, the Legislature of Maryland insisted that such lands should be held by the United States for the use of all the States, and making that a condition of ratification. The resolutions were sent to Congress, with a statement that the proposed reservation would prove ruinous to Maryland and other States similarly circumstanced and destructive of any union that might be organized. It said by plain implication that should Virginia's ownership be maintained her power and wealth would endanger the well-being of her sister States. It would create, as was said, "essentially a subconfederacy, an imperium in imperio." That protest and the claims of certain land companies were referred by Congress to a committee, which in 1780 made a report not questioning Virginia's title, but advising that some liberal disposition be made of the matter and setting out how indispensably necessary that was in order "to establish the Federal Union on a fixed and permanent basis and on principles acceptable to all of its prospective members; how essential to public credit and confidence; to the support of our Army; to the vigor of our councils and the success of our commerce; to our tranquillity at home and our reputation abroad; to our present safety and our future prosperity; to our existence as a free, sovereign, and independent people." In view of the seriousness of the issue it can not be doubted that the success of the Revolution and the maintenance of the confederation were at stake. Had Virginia held off, there might have been immediate failure, and certainly the formation after a while of a more perfect Union under a better Constitution would not have been possible. But not more than four months following the appeal of Congress—in January, 1781—the Legislature of Virginia acted with unexampled generosity. It determined upon one of the most extensive gifts of which there is any record. It determined to give to the United States the lands northwest of the Ohio River, to be formed into States to be admitted to the Union on equal terms with the other States. Reasonable conditions were attached, among them being that the soldiers of the George Rogers Clark expedition should be properly compensated in land. When Jefferson, then governor, communicated to Congress what had been done he expressed the belief that should other States, having similar claims, assume a like attitude it might serve "to overweigh any success which the enemy might have hithereto obtained and render desperate the hopes to which these successes have given birth." There is no need to speak of the not material modifications made by Congress in accepting Virginia's proposal. It is enough to say that in 1783 the general assembly authorized the execution of a deed conveying the Northwest Territory to the United States. This deed, written on parchment, can be seen today in the manuscript division of the Library of Congress. It is dated March 1, 1784, and is signed, sealed, and acknowledged by four of Virginia's Delegates in Congress—Thomas Jefferson, James Monroe, Arthur Lee, and Samuel Hardy, two of them afterwards Presidents of the United States. A copy of the deed was then forwarded to the then Governor of Virginia, Benjamin Harrison, the ancestor of an Ohio President and an Indiana President. The historically exact comment of a brilliant New England historian is that "Virginia gave up a magnificent territory of which she was actually in possession." In the manuscript division may also be seen, written by Jefferson on two small sheets of paper, the report of a committee of Congress of which he was chairman suggesting a scheme of government for the new territory. That was the basis of the Ordinance of 1784 and expressed the fundamental ideas carried into the Ordinance of 1787. It is not to be forgotten that the Jefferson scheme included a prohibition of slavery which, though voted down in 1784, was finally adopted in 1787. That prohibition was in line with the long resistance of Virginia to the slave trade. It was in line with the provision contained in her constitution. A fact of the utmost significance, commonly lost sight of in studying his career, is that Jefferson urged the prohibition should be imposed not only on the Northwest Territory but on any subsequently acquired territory, which would have included the Louisiana Purchase and the Florida Territory. The opinion is expressed by Fiske and other historians that had this been done the fierce controversies which led to the Civil War and the war itself would have been avoided, and of this there can be no reasonable doubt. Here at Richmond, to which the Virginia capital at Williamsburg had been removed in 1779, the vital transactions took place. It was here that the cession of the Northwest Territory was authorized. It was here that the governor was informed of the execution of the deed which conveyed the enormous area of 266,000 square miles and 170,000,000 acres.

Jefferson was mainly responsible for the vast Louisiana territory becoming a part of the Union. It was his fellow Virginian, George Rogers Clark, who, in the service of the State, was primarily responsible for the vast Northwest Territory becoming a part of it. And it can not be doubted that the fate of Kentucky was involved in the fate of the Northwest. When the treaty of peace was made at the end of the Revolution, Great Britain could not reasonably contest the sovereign ownership of the States with respect to the regions which they had been able to take and hold by armed force, but she was unwilling to surrender other regions which she herself had been able to retain, as witness what occurred with reference to the boundary lines established between Canada on the one hand and New York and the New England States on the other hand. At the date of the peace negotiations, had the British been occupying the western domain of which we are speaking—Kentucky and the country north of the Ohio River—she would have applied to it the theory she urged with respect to Canada. This consideration measures the extraordinary value of what was accomplished by Clark.

It was at Williamsburg that the curtain was raised on the supremely important and picturesque drama in which Clark was to have the principal part. He and other adventurous spirits, nearly all from eastern Virginia, had located in Kentucky. When the sword began to write the record of the Revolution in the east, the pioneers were menaced by the British and their Indian allies. They were remote from the seat of government in Virginia, and there was an utter lack of definiteness and power in any local government. Clark, who had come quickly to the front as their leader, realizing the imperative need of closer relations with the Virginia authorities and of such assistance as they might be able to furnish, brought about a meeting which delegated him and another to represent the perilous condition of the frontier. In the summer of 1776 they traveled on foot toward Williamsburg, a distance of 600 miles. Before arriving they found the legislature had adjourned and it was agreed that Clark should proceed alone; and this he did, and remained for several months until the business in hand was settled. He saw the governor, Patrick Henry, who was ill at his home in Hanover County, and found him entirely sympathetic. At the suggestion of the governor, he waited on the council, which finally consented to furnish and transport a supply of ammunition. Then when the legislature met he took up the matter of having Kentucky created and organized as a separate county, which was effected after a long and stubborn contest in December, 1776. On the committee which drafted the bill dividing the county of Fincastle into three new counties, one of them Kentucky, were Jefferson and George Mason, who, from first to last, were Clark's unswerving friends and supporters, and they were instrumental in passing the bill in the house and breaking the deadlock caused by the senate's disapproval. Then Clark, not yet 25 years old, went back to Kentucky and exerted himself in repelling the Indians and in directing the various activities of the new county. But this was only the first step. With the vision of a statesman he conceived the wonderful plan which he was to execute as a soldier. For the purpose of securing indorsement of his plan to invade the Northwest, he returned to Williamsburg in the fall of 1777 and enlisted the interest of Henry, Jefferson, Mason, and Wythe. Legislation was enacted and letters of instruction furnished him by Governor Henry which authoritatively commissioned and fortified him for the undertaking which he had conceived. He took away with him the news of the American victory at Saratoga, and as he won his first success north of the Ohio he heard the news of the treaties with France, which gave him a conclusive argument with the people of the French settlements.

The British forts were Clark's objectives. Their capture would shift the substantial possession and control of the country from the British to the Americans, and nothing else could serve to put fear in the hearts of the Indians and restrain the cruel methods of warfare to which they had been instigated, notwithstanding the eloquent denunciations of Chatham and Burke. On the contrary, failure and defeat could mean but one thing, the complete extinction of the commander and his little army, which never numbered more than 200 men. All of the forts were captured except Detroit in a campaign lasting much less than a year. The fort at Kaskaskia, some 60 miles below St. Louis, fell into Clark's hands on July 4, 1778, while there was being celebrated in Philadelphia the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence. A little later the fort at Cahokia, nearly opposite St. Louis, surrendered. Soon the fort at Vincennes surrendered, and having in the latter part of 1778 been recaptured by the British, was again taken by Clark in February of the next year, among the prisoners being the British lieutenant governor, Henry Hamilton, who had before made his headquarters at Detroit. Hamilton was sent to Williamsburg, where, in retaliation for his encouragement of Indian barbarities, he was confined as a prisoner in a house I believe still standing, which he called his dungeon. It is true that Clark's purpose to reduce the fort at Detroit miscarried, but his other triumphs rendered the British cause hopeless throughout the entire region, and this fact obtained practical recognition when the peace treaty was being negotiated. He wrote to Henry and Mason that he was mortified to see slip, because of the lack of a few men, so fair an opportunity to push a victory, but he continued to yearn for the means of capturing Detroit. In 1780 the matter was brought to the attention of General Washington, who wrote of Clark that the enterprise could not be committed to better hands. In 1781 an entry in Washington's recently published diary, under date of June 9, refers to the fact that Clark had asked that the Ninth Virginia regiment and Heth's company be assigned as a force to go against Detroit, but that the request had to be refused for fear of weakening the defense of Pittsburgh.

Of course, the means of communication in those days was slight, but those who knew anything of what had occurred knew that Clark had conquered the Northwest Territory. He received the thanks of the legislature of his State, and the conquest which he had made was quickly followed in December, 1778, by an act creating the new county of Illinois, to include "all citizens of this commonwealth who are already settled or shall hereafter settle on the western side of the Ohio." In 1779 the Continental Congress adopted a resolution expressing its "high sense of the enterprising spirit of Colonel Clark, of the State of Virginia, and under the particular appointment of that State," and "that the thanks of Congress be communicated to Colonel Clark and the brave officers and soldiers under his command for their ardor, bravery, and intrepidity."

There can be no attempt to detail the career of Clark in any of its stages. There can be no attempt to tell the story of the unparalleled obstacles which he and his followers encountered and overcame; of their experience in a wilderness where there were none of the ordinary belongings and processes of civilization, but only constant peril and inconceivable hardship; of his unflagging fortitude and cheerfulness when to nearly any other man the conditions would have seemed without hope; of his willingness to risk everything and suffer and die for the cause which he espoused; of his ready sacrifice of his own resources by pledging them for the purpose of securing the most meager equipment and subsistence. In the report which his antagonist, Hamilton, made of the affair at Vincennes, he pays the American this tribute: "The difficulties and dangers of Colonel Clark's march * * * were such as required great courage to encounter and great preseverence to overcome." He so impoverished himself that to him might be applied the words written over the tomb of Thomas Nelson at Yorktown: "He gave all for liberty." He held the abiding admiration and respect of his foremost contemporaries who knew him best and were in the best position to estimate the magnitude and value of his achievements—Washington, Henry, Jefferson, and Mason. Numberless voices now swelling into a great chorus echo their opinion. Long ago John Randolph of Roanoke spoke of him as the "Hannibal who by the reduction of those military posts in the wilderness obtained the Great Lakes for the northern boundary of our Union at the peace of 1783." A New England historian has written, "No story of the Arabian Nights is more romantic or improbable than Clark's conception of his plan of conquest and his success in carrying it out." That his career is coming to be all the time more fully understood, and the pinnacle of fame accorded him which he deserves, is largely owing to the patriotic diligence with which the historical societies of the States of which he may well be regarded as the founder have gathered up the original material, the documents, and correspondence, showing the originality and brilliancy of his plans and the skill and valor with which they were executed.

It is not to be asserted that Clark was always justly treated by those in control or by individuals. Even Washington himself did not escape the distrust and criticism which were inevitable in such a confused and difficult period as that of the Revolution. But, as has been stated, he quickly received the praise and thanks of Congress and the State legislature; and when he gave up his commission in 1783, Governor Harrison wrote: "Before I take leave of you I feel myself called upon in the most forceful manner to return you my thanks and those of my council for the very great and singular services you have rendered your country in wresting so great and valuable a territory out of the hands of the British enemy, repelling the attacks of their savage allies, and carrying on successfully in the heart of their country." Years afterwards, in 1812, when he was old and poor and sick, the Virginia Legislature passed a resolution presenting him a sword with an expression of the gratitude and friendly condolences of that body and providing for the payment to him annually of the sum of $400. I like to recall that having received his earliest inspiration as a youth at Gunston Hall, in my own county, where he often visited George Mason, it was Charles Fenton Mercer, then a member of the General Assembly of Virginia and later a Representative of that county in Congress, who initiated the action taken by the legislature.

In the erection of the statues of heroes of the past, Clark has not been forgotten. It is surely fitting that he who fought the Revolution to a victorious conclusion in the West should now be exalted along with the man who fought the Revolution to a victorious conclusion in the East. There is a commission created by Congress, of which the President is chairman, charged with the duty of arranging an appropriate celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Washington, which occurs in 1932. It seems to me that the people of the mother Commonwealth of the statesman and soldier we are acclaiming and the Commonwealths formed out of the territory in whose history he is such a glorious figure might then unite to build in deathless commemoration of the conqueror of the Northwest a monument approaching in impressiveness and dignity the monument to Washington which towers above the Capital City of the Republic. No inscription could be devised that would adequately express what he was and what he did. No inscription would be needed except one name carved upon its face, the name of George Rogers Clark.

TUESDAY, December 13, 1927

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

May the words of our mouth and the meditations of our heart be now and always acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer.

Eternal God, who hast neither dawn nor evening, yet sendest us alternate mercies of the darkness and the day, there is no light but Thine, without, within. As Thou hast lifted the curtain of night from our abodes, take also the veil from all our hearts. Rise with Thy morning upon our souls; quicken every noble impulse and sanctify our best endeavors; and though all else decline, let the noontide of Thy grace and peace remain. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, urging the passage of legislation to authorize the designation of persons to act for disbursing officers and others charged with the disbursement of public moneys of the United States, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I desire to call up the order offered yesterday in regard to the assignment of Senators to committees, and I ask unanimous consent that so much of Rule XXIV as provides for the appointment of standing committees of the Senate by ballot may be suspended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that that portion of Rule XXIV of the standing rules of the Senate relating to the appointment of members of committees by ballot be suspended. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what method of election is to be substituted?

Mr. WATSON. Unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Are we to understand that now an election can take place only by unanimous consent?

Mr. WATSON. I have submitted a request for the present consideration of the order. It will be a viva voce vote.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as I understand the rule of the Senate, we can proceed to the election by ballot or by roll call or by viva voce vote. The request is to suspend that portion of the rule appertaining to the election by ballot.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the order? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the list of committees appearing in yesterday's proceedings of the Senate, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 481.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the order submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall not interpose any objection to the consideration of the order, but listening to the list of committees as it has been read, it seems to me there ought to be some expression of felicitation to the distinguished Senator from Indiana and to his colleagues on the other side for their very great change of front in reference to certain gentlemen on the majority side of the aisle.

Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Indiana will take his seat and bide his time.

Mr. WATSON. I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. It was not so long ago, Mr. President, when we read in the newspapers in big headlines such news as "The radicals read out of G. O. P. ranks." It was so stated by the Republican official organ, the National Republican, or whatever the name of the publication may be. It was not very long ago when deliberate action was taken on the other side of the aisle with reference to party policies by Senators who adopted a resolution which had teeth in it and which meant much. That resolution of the Republican conference, if the newspapers be correct, was presented by none other than the distinguished Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the committee on committees. Of course it had many champions when it was offered. Republican Senators who had held their tongues waxed eloquent on that day in behalf of that resolution. Indeed, the newspapers did not state that any Senator rose in opposition to it. I do not think that the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was there, and some of the other so-called progressives were not there, but the resolution was passed by the Republican conference. Merely to recall to the public what it stated, I wish to read it:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the conference that Senators La Follette, Ladd, Brookhart, and Frazier be not invited to future Republican conferences and be not named to fill Republican vacancies in the Senate committees.

And they were not. One of the distinguished Senators who is not with us any more but who has retired to private life up in Pennsylvania, said that he would be unwilling to return to his people with such an organization as the gentlemen named in the resolution would make of the Republican majority of the Senate; that he believed in efficiency in party organization, and that that was what the people of Pennsylvania believed in.

Mr. CARAWAY. And they demonstrated that.

Mr. HARRISON. And they demonstrated that. I notice from a reading of this list of committee promotions that the colleague of the then Senator from Pennsylvania, who absented himself from the Senate for many days and many weeks and toured the more remote and sparsely settled as well as the populous centers of Pennsylvania in support of Mr. Pepper's reelection, and who the other day took such a prominent part in the defense of corrupt politics in America, and who during the closing hours of the last session filibustered into the wee hours of the morning and throughout the day so as to defeat the passage of the deficiency appropriation bill, which will be called up next—I notice that this distinguished Senator, through the work of the committee on committees, is promoted more than anyone else save these once maligned and so-called radicals. I notice from a reading of the committee promotions that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] not only retains his place upon the Finance Committee, but he is given Mr. Pepper's place on the Foreign Relations Committee. Not only that, but the committee on committees have promoted him to the Rules Committee. They name him upon the Immigration Committee; and, not satisfied with that, they do the exceptional thing, conferring a privilege that is accorded to no other Senator on the other side or on this side of having more than two major committee assignments and make this distinguished friend of Mr. VARE, this Senator who filibustered against the deficiency appropriation bill last year, chairman of the all-powerful Military Affairs Committee of this body. So the Senator from Indiana and his colleagues did certainly compensate him well for the service he has rendered in this body.

But the gentlemen whose names have been given, who were driven out of the party—and I must say to the credit of my distinguished friend from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] that he stood up and fought like a man; he did not cringe; he did not surrender; he stood his ground—have been given fine committee assignments.

Is it not strange that in this body, which met a week ago last Monday and the first duty of which was to organize and begin in an orderly way to elect a President pro tempore, to elect a Secretary of the Senate and a Sergeant at Arms and other officers, up until this good hour the majority have not dared to try to organize the Senate? If rumors may be believed, it is because they had an unruly group over there who, they feared, might not vote for the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] for President pro tempore of the Senate, who, they feared, might not vote for the Republican conference nominee, Mr. Barry, for Sergeant at Arms of the Senate or for the reelection of the present Secretary of the Senate.

The so-called progressives defied the regular Republicans. They even went to the distinguished Senator from Kansas, the leader on the other side, and demanded of him that certain legislation be passed in this body. The newspapers did not say that they gave any promise that they would support the organization of the Senate if the regular Republicans would adopt that legislative program, but, so far as the country knows and we have been led to believe, the only legislative program which has been mapped out was by the so-called radical group that was driven from the Republican conference, and that program has been adopted by the leader of the Republican side.

When such actions as that are taking place it makes those of us who have great confidence in our fellow men grow a little bit suspicious. But we were willing to pass by this acquiescence upon the part of the distinguished candidate for President—and he would make a great President——

Mr. CARAWAY. To which one does the Senator from Mississippi refer? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. We would have passed that by, I say, but when the action of the other side takes us by surprise over here and committee assignments are suggested before there is any effort made to organize the Senate, some people are likely to wonder if there is any trade in the air, if any agreement has been made by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Indiana—and, of course, I know they do not like to make trades in behalf of their party's success—that for these promotions or committee assignments the so-called Progressives are to support the regular nominees of the Republican conference for the offices of this body.

Of course, it matters not what I may think and other people may think. I have such confidence in Senators over there who once defied the Republican majority and made them surrender that I do not believe they can be bought by such committee promotions and assignments. Of course, the future will tell. Tomorrow, I presume, it will be in order in carrying out the plans of the other side for a motion to be made to proceed to the organization of the Senate, and that the name of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] will be presented for President pro tempore and that for Sergeant at Arms of the Senate there will be presented the name of Mr. Barry, who passed through the troubled waters of the closing hours of the last Congress and who brought on his head criticism because he brought some Senators down here out of bed—a mighty poor thing to criticize him for—and the Senators who receive these promotions and who were once read out of the party will be called on to vote for him.

I do not know whether they are going to vote "present" or whether they are going to vote for the nominees presented, but if and when they do vote for them their action might be construed throughout the country as being due to some kind of a plum that they could not resist and so they accepted these committee assignments.

Mr. President, look how well these recalcitrant and progressive Senators on the Republican side have been taken care of. Mr. BROOKHART, whose name was listed in the resolution to which I have referred, who was driven from the Republican conference, has been given a fine place on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and on the Committee on Military Affairs, so that he will be in a position to keep the peace not only in the country but within the Republican Party. He is lifted high and placed on the all-powerful Committee on Banking and Currency. Those are fine committee assignments that the Senator from Indiana has chosen, as chairman of this committee, to give to him—this man whom the Senator once condemned as unworthy to wear the cloak of Republicanism.

Mr. FRAZIER is given a high place on Banking and Currency, so that he can work in unity with the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART]; and then he is placed upon the very important Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; and, not content with that, these gentlemen take this man who was driven from their councils and make him chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate.

Mr. NYE, whose picture has been published in the Washington Post as one of the progressive group, and one of those who demanded of the Senator from Kansas that a vote be had on certain legislation here, is taken care of. They need the distinguished Senator from North Dakota; but if I know him correctly, Mr. President, they will not get him by handing out such sops as are embodied in these committee assignments. Why, they give to him Immigration; they give to him Claims. What finer committee could you have than Claims? They give to him Commerce—in this Congress to be a most powerful committee. Ah, they say to him, "You certainly will vote with us for organization when we give you an assignment on the Appropriations Committee," and so he is placed there; but they may have been a little fearful of some of those other assignments, and so they give him the chairmanship of the powerful Public Lands Committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. The one they made Senator Ladd get off.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the one from which they drove the deceased Member from North Dakota, Mr. Ladd, or of which they would not let him have the chairmanship.

I suspect that the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had his hand in this. He was in line for the chairmanship of the Public Lands Committee. They put him on Appropriations, and Finance, and these various committees, but the distinguished Senator from Utah would not swap his place on the Public Lands Committee for anything. He was in line for the chairmanship of that committee; but he goes over to my friend NYE and he says, "You must be chairman of it. I will work with you."

They did not stop there. They gave to the distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] assignments on the Committees on Commerce and Post Offices and Post Roads, and Mines and Mining; and another distinguished Senator who has come into the body, whose picture has been placarded with the other so-called progressives, the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], is given assignments on Judiciary and Military Affairs, as well as others.

Mr. President, it is to be hoped that the country will not believe that this kind of bartering and sale will go through. You, the old guard, may do it, because you have been guilty even of keeping men in the Senate when corruption showed in every fiber of their being; but I do not believe that these men, progressives from the West, who have voted against such measures as that and have tried to uphold the standards of this country, for this mere pittance will vote for your nominees for Secretary of the Senate and Sergeant at Arms and President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I should like to obtain some information in reference to the demands that were made by the progressive Senators of the Northwest, and whether or not those demands have been fully complied with.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator want an answer to that question?

Mr. McMASTER. I should like anyone who would be willing to convey the information to answer the question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, if the Senator had attended the conference he would have been satisfied about promises. There were no promises made except that a majority of the Republican conference took the position that there should be no unnecessary delay in securing a vote on the three measures at this session of Congress. There is not a man in the Senate but who knows that any Senator who wants a vote on a measure may secure it if he wants it, and that is what they were promised. They were not asked to commit themselves upon anything, and to-day I do not know how they will vote. I want them to vote their own judgment.

Mr. McMASTER. Well, I am simply asking: Did the Republican side of the Chamber agree that there would be a vote upon these three measures?

Mr. MOSES. The Senator is a Member of the Republican side. What agreement did he make?

Mr. McMASTER. I am perfectly willing that they shall have a vote. I simply want to know if there are any here who are opposed to a vote upon the propositions they have demanded shall receive consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. All that was said to them was printed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me just one minute? I should simply like to suggest that the gentlemen take this matter back into conference, because now they are fixing to call out here and expose on the floor of the Senate what transpired in secrecy, and they ought not to do it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, there was no secrecy whatever. The letters were printed in the press. They were turned over to the press so that all the Senators and all who were interested might know what occurred.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why does the Senator get mad, then, when the Senator from South Dakota wants to find out what happened?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is not mad; but he thinks that when people read what happened it is unnecessary to ask questions about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I was coming to. I knew the Senator from South Dakota was asking questions about matters that ought not to have been exposed here on the floor, and I rose merely in the interest of peace; that is all.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, the only assurance that the progressive Senators have received in regard to the matter of their bills receiving consideration is the assurance from the Republican leader that he will do all in his power to bring that about.

I want to say that I have the fullest confidence in the assurances made by the fine, genial leader on the Republican side; and I want to say also that he has spent many years here in smoothing the pathway for other Senators, and making their trials and their burdens easier; but every Senator in this Chamber knows that no floor leader can commit the membership of his side of the the Chamber to any particular proposition. That was demonstrated here last spring when the deficiency bill was up for consideration—a deficiency bill that involved millions of dollars, that involved many departments. The floor leader on the Republican side was in favor of the passage of that bill, and yet two Republican Senators filibustered the bill to death.

The point I want to make, however, is this: For the sake of argument let us take it for granted that particularly this proposition of farm relief will receive the favorable consideration of the Senators on this side—that is, that they will not use any obstructive tactics against that bill. That promise, however, does not mean anything so far as farm relief is concerned. Of course, they are going to permit the farm relief bill to come to a vote. Of course, it may be passed by the Senate, but every Member of this body knows that if the McNary-Haugen bill is passed, or any similar farm legislation that is of an adequate nature is passed, it will be vetoed by the President. Of course, they are perfectly generous in giving to the Members on this side the right to vote upon farm relief, but it is not the privilege of a vote upon farm relief that we are asking. We are asking that farm relief be made a substantial fact, that it be made a reality; and I want to say to the Republican Senators that in my judgment the American farmer has received a lemon here with just a little sugar in the way of committee appointments; and in my judgment the only way we can ever get farm relief is for this side and the other side of the Chamber to attack the tariff. If we ever obtain farm relief from this industrial group we must attack them at their vulnerable point; and I wish to say that I propose to introduce a resolution to the effect that it be the judgment of the Senate that the hour has come for tariff revision, for the lowering of tariff schedules, and in that resolution I shall propose also that a copy thereof be transmitted to the House of Representatives, as I understand that all revenue and tariff bills must originate there.

I want to say to this gallant band of Senators from the Northwest that they have made a splendid fight for farm relief; that I think they did win their objective here on the Republican side in receiving consent that their bills shall receive consideration; but I repeat that we want more than merely consideration of a farm bill. We want farm legislation; and if we proceed to attack the tariff we will place the industrial group on the defensive, just as they have been placing the farmer on the defensive here during the last four or five years.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I have always listened to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] with interest. There is much amusement in what he says, and sometimes there is a suggestion of solid fact. That is somewhat the situation this morning. In addition to that, there is a challenge to those known as the progressive Members of the Senate, and I want to accept that challenge.

I was kicked out of the Republican caucus. I am proud of it. I do not belong to the Wall Street party. I was kicked out of the Senate. I am proud of that. The Senator from Mississippi helped to do that. The reason I was kicked out was because I do not belong to the Wall Street party on either side of this Chamber. There are only two parties in the United States now. One is the Wall Street party and the other is that opposed to it.

In reference to the challenge to the progressives that they shall vote with the Republican organization or against it, I want to say publicly in the Senate, as I said to the Senator from Mississippi in the office of the Democratic leader, that I stand ready to vote for an organization that will unite the South and the West in this issue against the financial domination of this country in New York. No Democrat came back with any proposition to me to meet that. Plenty of them had criticisms of the Republican side and something to say against what the Republicans were doing, but there was no constructive program suggested from the Democratic side.

How about taxes? In 1924 we passed the best tax bill that ever passed the Congress of the United States. It contained an inheritance tax graduated up to 40 per cent on the $10,000,000 and more estate. Then a little later Duke, the great tobacco king, died, and the great Democratic leadership that assisted us in passing that bill then turned around and joined in putting over a Mellon bill that gave several million dollars of rebate to the Duke estate, and other propositions like that.

We progressives are not for tax reduction; we are for paying the debt. We are not for returning 80 per cent of these taxes to the States. Those millions that were returned to the State of North Carolina because of the Duke rebate were collected from Iowa and South Dakota and from these other States as truly as they were collected from North Carolina. That pernicious principle was injected into the bill, and you can not lay it onto the Republican majority, because the Democratic side, the Wall Street part of the Democracy, had more to do with it than did the Republicans on this side. Now, at this time the Democratic majority is trying to out-Mellon Mellon in this tax reduction for the big financial crowd of the United States, which means higher taxes upon the common people of the country.

As to farm relief—there never has come such a calamity to agriculture in all its history as has come recently. The principal cause of it was a law passed during a Democratic administration, the Federal reserve banking law, with its power of deflation in the hands of a few men. Another part of it was brought about by a railroad law, a transportation act, with Republican names at the head of it, but with Democratic Wall Street votes making possible the passage of that law. At this moment the quotations on wheat in Winnipeg, Canada, and in Minneapolis, Minn., are from 20 to 25 cents a bushel apart, and the farmers of Canada are now receiving 20 or 25 cents a bushel more for their wheat than are the farmers of the United States, all due to freight rates under that Wall Street railroad law.

This Federal reserve banking proposition sent farm values down two and a half billion dollars in the State of Iowa, while it increased railroad stock values $3,000,000,000 on the stock exchange in New York.

The causes of this discrimination have been bipartisan, and I now challenge the Senator from Mississippi to put up a program for genuine farm relief from his Democratic side; to put up a program for correcting this unjust transportation act; to put up a program for correcting the inequalities in credit cost and control in the United States, and I will support it. Three or four hundred million dollars of the savings of my people in Iowa are now invested down in New York at 1¾ to about 4¼ per cent, while the farmers of my State are paying 7 to 8 per cent for their banking loans, due to the banking laws and the Federal reserve act.

This condition is due to somebody else fixing the price of everything the farmer must buy, under a tariff enacted by the Congress of the United States; somebody else fixing the rate of interest a farmer must pay upon his credits, under laws enacted by the Congress of the United States; somebody else fixing the value of the railroads and the rates the farmer must pay under laws enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Farmers are driven to extremity throughout this Union. I make no discrimination; East, North, West, South, their condition is about the same. When something is asked in the way of legislation for the relief of agriculture, the Senator from Mississippi rises in his place and, instead of answering these great questions, he says, "You vote for a Republican candidate for Secretary of the Senate whom you do not like, or for a Republican candidate for Sergeant at Arms whom you do not like." I say to him, bring in your program in the interest of the American people; I do not care whether you hail from Mississippi, or from what State you come, I am with you. I am ready to stand for this fight regardless of party lines, and I stand without compromise.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] that he poll the Republican Senators in order to ascertain the exact position of each. I agree with him that the Senator from Kansas can not bind his side unless Senators over there consent and agree to that course. I suggest to my progressive friends that before they tie themselves up in this unholy alliance with the old stand-pat Republicans of this body they know exactly what they are going to get in the way of support of farm legislation. If they do not have such an understanding, they are going to get something else and get it in the neck. [Laughter.]

You will not be able to satisfy your constituents at home by telling them that you had an understanding on the side that you were going to have an opportunity at some time during the session, maybe just before we adjourn, to have a vote, just a vote, on somebody's bill suggesting some kind of relief for the farmers of the country. That kind of agreement will not be acceptable to the farmer.

I suggest to the Senator from South Dakota and to the Senator from Iowa that they have this kind of an understanding with the Senator from Kansas, and each of the stand-pat Senators that, "We will take up a farm relief measure of some sort, and we will keep it before the Senate and make it the continuing order until it is disposed of." If you will do that, my progressive friends, you will get somewhere, and you will have help from this side. But if you let this thing hang where it seems to hang, up in the air, you are not going to get any real consideration of a farm relief measure.

You must not be too easily satisfied. You would better follow some of the suggestions of the Senator from Iowa and know exactly what you are about. Of course, I know that these committee assignments are very soothing and very pleasant to the taste, and they probably will have the effect of satisfying and silencing certain progressives and lulling them to sleep.

I trust you are not going to forget the cause of the farmer, because the farmers of this country are in a dreadful condition. The Republican Party has been in power six years and more, and since they came into power 2,000,000 American farmers have been whipped in the fight with those who have robbed them of their substance; and they have been driven from the farm. They have lost their homes and farms and have gone into the crowded cities where they are living in tenement houses, and eking out a miserable existence. The farmers that are left behind will lose their fight in a little while and go the same way, unless they receive legislative enactments that will enable them to have a fair deal.

Senators, they are having a hard time. As I speak to-day, the cotton gamblers of the East are robbing the farmers of my State of $25 to $30 a bale on their cotton. A thing unheard of in the history of the cotton industry is taking place. When the Government makes a report that the crop is going to be smaller than they formerly thought it would be, it breaks the price of cotton. Heretofore, when a report came out estimating the amount to be produced at less than what the trade thought it would be, it boosted the price of cotton; but this year, at least, three times to my knowledge, when the Government has reported that the crop would be smaller the price has broken on the New York Exchange from $2 to $5 a bale.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. MAYFIELD. In the cotton report of the Secretary of Agriculture, made on December 8, he estimated that we would make this year 12,789,000 bales of cotton. In the report for the year 1926, December 8, he estimated that we would make 17,977,000 bales. Therefore, according to these reports of the Secretary of Agriculture, we will make 5,180,000 bales less this year than we made during last year. In view of these facts should not the price of cotton have advanced $5 to $10 a bale on December 8 instead of declining $2 a bale?

Mr. HEFLIN. I agree with the Senator that it should have advanced at least $10 a bale.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Does not the Senator think that the reason why the price of cotton declined $2 a bale was that 60 days ago Secretary Jardine destroyed the cotton market, drove away all of its supporting influences when he predicted lower prices for cotton?

Mr. HEFLIN. That contributed tremendously to that unfortunate situation. I agree with what the Senator from Texas has said.

Mr. President, something has got to be done by Members of Congress who still have any conscience and courage left. There is an organized band of marauders who move upon the cotton exchanges and grain exchanges, and they are robbing the farmers of this country, and they are flourishing in evil doing. They are making money by the millions. Seats on the stock exchange and seats on the cotton exchange and grain exchange have gone up in leaps and bounds in price. They are bringing high prices. Men are seeking them now as never before. They have a place under Republican rule where they can go and sit around the table and speculate in farm products and beat down the price and control the spot market on cotton and grain in every State in the Union. That is what you have to-day under Republican rule. I want to warn my friends on the other side not to barter the birthright of the American farmer to the stand-pat Republicans of this body to-day in order to get some committee assignments that would be more agreeable than those they already have.

Now, a moment on the cotton situation. Here is a 12,000,000-bale crop selling for 18½ to 19 and 19½ cents, and up to 20 cents. There is no excuse under the sun for cotton bringing this year a cent under 25 cents a pound. It ought to bring that at least. But the speculators have combined, and they are taking the profits that should go to the farmer. They go upon the exchanges and sell millions of bales of fictitious stuff called cotton. They do not own a bale; they never deliver a bale; they settle the difference in money. The man who sells a contract has no cotton. The man who buys it does not intend to have any cotton delivered. It is a gambling deal. It is a dummy transaction. Yet the gambling gang on the exchange fix the price of cotton on the spot market in grain and cotton.

Mr. Jardine is not a friend of the farmer. I have studied this gentleman very closely for about three years. I lost confidence in him completely when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] during the last session of Congress found him hobnobbing with the grain and cotton gamblers of Chicago, when the Senator from Arkansas found the program of the speculators up there, and Mr. Jardine was on the program to speak to the gamblers on the subject of how to speculate successfully. Now, think of that, Senators! There is a man who is supposed to look after and safeguard the interests of the farmers going to the enemies of the farmer, going into the stronghold of the gamblers and teaching them how they can rob the farmer more successfully than now. God knows they are making a wonderful success of it now.

They have driven from the farm 2,000,000 farmers in six years. They are holding up and robbing the farmers in cruel fashion now. They have been denying them the comforts of life and now they are robbing them of the necessities of life, and at last they are robbing them of their homes and farms; and still nothing is done to give the farmer relief and to give him a fair chance in his struggle for existence.

When the Senator from Arkansas found Mr. Jardine camping with the enemy of the farmer I lost confidence in him, I repeat. This year Mr. Tenny, in his department, gave out his view about what cotton prices would do in the near future, which was a most unheard-of and outrageous thing—a subordinate of the Department of Agriculture under the Secretary expressing for publication his view about cotton prices. His view was against the producer and on the side of the speculator, and as a direct result of his terrible act the market broke $7.50 a bale the next day.

Senators, are we going to sit here and permit this kind of thing to go on? They are doing the same thing to the grain growers in the West. They are robbing them every year of hundreds of millions of dollars. They have a well-worked-out arrangement for speculating in cotton and grain. They claim that the grain grower and the cotton grower could not get along without it. We are going to have a chance, I believe at this session, to get along without both of them. I am going to introduce a bill in this session of Congress—and I believe that nearly every southern Senator and Member of the House will support it, because it will do away with the cotton-gambling exchanges as they are conducted to-day. And I believe that western Members will join us. The cotton exchange as run to-day is an infamous machine and, unfortunately, the conduct of the Secretary of Agriculture is aiding it to rob the cotton farmer.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. Why does not the Senator include in his bill a provision to do away with the grain exchange?

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall be glad to do that. I shall be glad to join with the Senators of the grain-growing States and unite our forces and rout these gamblers who are feeding and fattening on the substance of the farmers of the United States, reducing their number every year, robbing them of their produce, and then making millions more out of it after they get it into their own hands.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. SMITH. In view of the marvelous situation which has developed in the last 90 days in reference to the cotton market—and I am not advised about the grain market, because I have not kept up with it—involving not millions but billions of dollars, not only the welfare of this country but of foreign countries, does he not think it is the duty of this body to have a thorough investigation of what to the ordinary man is inexplicable, that in view of a comparative failure in the crop, in view of the unprecedented demand for this product, the price has steadily declined ever since it was positively known that the crop would be from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 bales less than it was last year?

I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that last year there was exported abroad from America the largest amount of cotton ever exported in the history of the cotton industry. There were 11,000,000 bales of the American crop exported abroad. There was an unprecedented consumption of cotton in America, evidencing the fact that what has been published in all the trade journals was correct, that the shelves of the textile merchants were bare, that the new uses of cotton in millions of pounds in automobile construction had increased the demand, and yet in the face of the fact that we will make this year 6,000,000 bales less than last year the price of cotton even yesterday went down $1.50 a bale. It seems to me that in acknowledgment of the responsibility of the Congress and in recognizing that responsibility it is our duty to investigate the whole situation as to the demand for cotton and cotton goods, and whether or not there is some artificial understanding by which consumption is being curtailed in order that there may not be a high price for the raw material.

I intend at a later time to take the floor to make a comparison between the prices of the manufactured goods and the raw material, to show the percentage of decline there was when cotton touched the ridiculous figure it did last year. I maintain that we ought to have a real investigation as to why this condition exists and whether or not it is justifiable. I do not know who is to blame—that is, I do not know the individual. I have my idea as to those who have helped to bring about this condition. But the American people, whose balance of trade is dependent upon this article, and the southern people, whose currency it is, are entitled to know whether or not this condition is justifiable, and we are the ones who should find it out and publish the facts. I have some data which I propose at the proper time to lay before the Senate. If the Senator will allow me just a moment, I will refer to it briefly now.

In September, when the estimate of the Department of Agriculture was that the crop would probably not exceed 14,000,000 bales but would be greater than 13,000,000 bales, cotton went to 24 and 25 cents a pound. When, in subsequent reports, they reduced their estimate as to the yield and brought it down to practically 13,000,000 bales, the prices began to break. The traders placed responsibility on the unfortunate bulletin issued by the Bureau of Economics, in which it outlined the fact that we were going to make an extremely short crop and that on account of the fact that the spinning world or the manufacturing world might curtail consumption, the prices for the next few months would decline. They also made the marvelous statement that we had 7,800,000 bales of the old crop to carry into the new crop. I investigated and found to my satisfaction, at least (because the bulletin had been considered by the world as official), that 7,800,000 bales was the exact estimate of a private concern. Side by side, in another column in a table said to contain the sources of their information to enable them to arrive at their estimate of 7,800,000 bales, was the estimate of the American stock by the Bureau of the Census. It evidently had been entirely ignored. In other words, one bureau of our Government quoted a private estimate as to the carry-over of cotton from the old crop into the new and ignored the Bureau of the Census whom we have charged with doing that work.

Mr. HEFLIN. Whose figures did they use?

Mr. SMITH. I wish I had them before me. They appeared in a New York commercial paper, whose name I will get, but I think it was the New York Commercial Chronicle. I believe their estimate was 7,818,000, and the estimate given by the Bureau of Economics was 7,800,000. In other words, they took this private estimate as to the carry-over, disregarding Mr. Hester, of New Orleans, who for 50 years had been accepted by the world as perhaps the greatest and fairest statistician in America. They ignored the Bureau of the Census and every other source, but accepted this private estimate almost down to the very last bale. That appeared on the opposite page in the bulletin that predicted that prices would go lower.

Mr. HEFLIN. In other words, they substituted a private estimate for the Government's figure?

Mr. SMITH. So far as the American crop was concerned. That is in strict accord with figures submitted to me. On one side was published the statement that the price would probably go down, and on the other side was the statement that we would have 7,800,000 bales of the old crop, while Mr. Hester was contending that it would be about 800,000 or 1,000,000 bales less. It does not make any difference who is right or wrong, I maintain that the Government had no right to state officially what the carry-over was until every consul in every foreign country had reported and every available means we have for information had been exhausted to know exactly how many bales of visible commercial American cotton were carried in stock in Europe and carried in stock in America. The addition or subtraction of a million bales would spell the difference between bankruptcy and prosperity in the great cotton-producing section of our country. And yet, seemingly without any care or regard for what they were doing, they stated the carry-over to be 7,800,000 bales. They did not give the source from which they got the information. The public was entitled to know where they got that information, because, had they printed along with that statement their source of information, it might have been discounted.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MAYFIELD. They finally admitted that the figures were unofficial, did they not?

Mr. SMITH. After hard work on the part of some of us to get the department to acknowledge that it was not official and should have been repudiated as an official document as soon as attention was called to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. They never did do it, did they?

Mr. SMITH. After a long time there was a statement by Mr. Jardine that it was not official.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the harm had been done and the market had been broken?

Mr. SMITH. The harm had been done. The thing that concerns me about our departments is that the heads of the departments should realize that they are responsible for whatever is done or said in any of the respective bureaus of their department. That is the reason a Cabinet officer is put into his position. I verily believe that Mr. Jardine never saw that bulletin until his attention was called to its disastrous effect on the market. What we ought to insist is that no estimate shall issue and no prediction shall be published as to prices from any governmental department, but that the department shall merely state the facts and leave the estimates alone.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with what the Senator from South Carolina has suggested; and there is no man in this body better equipped to introduce a resolution for a general investigation of that kind than is the Senator himself, and I trust that he will do it. I wish to assure him in advance of my hearty cooperation. I want the Agricultural Department investigated. I want Mr. Jardine interrogated and also those under him. It may be necessary to investigate the ginning bureau also. I have some inquiries I would like to make.

Along with what I was saying about Mr. Jardine when Mr. Tenny made his great mistake and colossal blunder in the early fall, which broke the price of cotton $7.50 per bale, amounting to millions of dollars loss to the cotton producers of the United States, I wired Mr. Jardine that this man Tenny's conduct was unwarranted and indefensible, and that it looked as though the speculators had reached him and were influencing him to give out such a statement, and that since he had given out that statement so dangerous and costly to the cotton farmers of the United States that he ought to be forthwith removed from office. Mr. Jardine wired me back that Tenny's performance would not occur any more. Think of that! Mr. Tenny's act constitutes a violation of every decent propriety surrounding his office and his act is a crime against every cotton farmer in the United States.

Mr. President, I hold that if a man at the head of a department has a crook in office under him, he should remove him, and the public generally believes that this man's conduct brands him as a crook and that he was influenced by pecuniary considerations to make the strange and unwarranted statement he did. As a Government official, this man under Mr. Jardine broke the price of cotton and helped to rob the cotton farmers of the United States of millions of dollars—but Mr. Jardine continues him in office. A man who has a crook in office under him and will not remove him is a crook himself.

I am sorry, Mr. President, to have to call this disagreeable and disgraceful thing to the attention of this body and to the attention of the country, but truth and justice demand it. Mr. Harding and Mr. Coolidge have been exceedingly unfortunate in some of their Cabinet officers. I recall that the Senate performed a solemn and righteous duty when it drove Denby out of the Cabinet. And it performed a great service when it drove Fall out of the Cabinet; and also later when it drove Daugherty out of the Cabinet. It seems to me as though there is something in the moral atmosphere of this administration that crookedness and corruption and graft hang to it as moss hangs to a tree. It seems as if Mr. Jardine has gone over to the crooked speculative interests, and I stand ready to impeach him, to remove him from the head of the Agricultural Department.

Think of keeping a man at the head of the great agricultural interests of the Nation who has hobnobbed with cotton and grain gamblers and is offering to speak to them in private and offering to teach them how to speculate successfully in grain and cotton. Mr. Jardine's action with regard to Mr. Tenny is greatly against him. We ought to summon him to the bar of the Senate or before one of its committees and interrogate him. I have had many men to tell me that they believed these officials got money from the cotton speculators for giving out and publishing a statement that helped the bear speculators to clean up millions of dollars on the cotton exchange.

Senators, I regret to say that the circumstantial evidence is overwhelming against these officials of the Agricultural Department. A Government official ought to be above suspicion of any kind. A man placed in charge of a great department of the Government ought to be so honest and straight and fair and just that when his conduct is brought into question he will come out in the open and explain the matter to the Senate and to the country. The burden of proof is on Mr. Jardine. His situation is far from being an enviable one.

He came out with a statement later in the fall that the cotton crop would not be so large as some thought it would be, and that statement helped the market a dollar a bale or more; but the very next day he undid the good effect of that statement by stating that he must not be taken too seriously when he was talking in private conversation. I wonder who suggested that he correct that statement. The department seems to be unwilling to let a statement which favors the farmer stand, but they knock it down immediately, because their influence and sympathies are on the side of those who rob the farmer.

Mr. President, it is high time that we were talking plainly and going directly to the issue here. Mr. Jardine has lost his standing and influence in the country. Men in the South who never complained heretofore have complained against him this year. I have had telegrams and letters saying "Get after Jardine about Tenny's report. It is unwarranted, hurtful, and is the most outrageous thing that ever occurred." Yet Tenny is still in the department, still holding his job, under Mr. Jardine. He did what somebody told him to do. He is responsible to Mr. Jardine and Mr. Jardine ought to compel him to do his duty honestly or he ought to get rid of him. He ought to require him to do right and be honest or drive him out of the Government service.

We have got to keep the fight up until the Agricultural Department is freed of crooked officials and there is a general house cleaning at this Capital. There is so much corruption around here, so much bribery in Government places, so much graft that some seem to think that it is all right. We have got to teach them to the contrary.

If this Republic is to live and the great masses of the people are to have a fair deal at the hands of their Government, the friends of the people have got to assert themselves in the Senate; and I want the progressives on the other side to cooperate with us to the end that we may accomplish something along this line this year.

Yesterday a very great American, a man with whom I served in the House of Representatives, Frank Lowden, of Illinois, afterwards a very distinguished governor of that State, a farmer on a large scale said—and I want Senators to pay particular attention to this—"I would have been better off if I had given my farms away seven years ago." Think of that, Senators! It is the worst indictment ever drawn against an administration when a big farmer, a man of wealth, says that he would have been better off if he had given his farms away rather than tried to conduct them under the present unfair conditions which he finds under the administration of his own party.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that that statement is not only not an exaggeration, but that it would apply to the farmers of his State? I know it would apply to the farmers of my State and that it would apply to me. I myself would have been better off had I not had a farm at all, yet I think that my farm is rated as one of the best in Lee County, S. C.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thank the Senator for that statement. Think of that, Senators! What are we coming to in this country if men who are able somehow to carry on and keep their farms say they would be better off if they should give them away. What must be the terrible struggle of those who farm on a smaller scale, and the one-horse farmers all over the country tugging away, trying to make a living for themselves and families, trying to gather up enough of the necessities of life to live decently. What must be their burden, and what must be the sad thoughts that occupy them when they are fighting under unfavorable conditions and fighting a losing battle every year. Let us resolve at the beginning of this session that we are not going to let the big highbrows of the Nation monopolize the time of this Congress. The big rich of the Nation somehow have legislation coming at their beck and call. We want to do justice by all classes and no injustice to any class; but let us resolve that we are going to see to it that the men who labor and earn their living by the sweat of their brows, the farmers who produce that which feeds and clothes the world, are going to have attention in this body at this session, and let us band together, stand together, and fight together until we accomplish something for them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I inquire if the pending question has been put to a vote as yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The question has not as yet been put to a vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the statements, and the inferences which might be drawn from them, which have been made by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I desire to print in the RECORD the correspondence which took place between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], the Republican leader of the United States Senate, and the five progressive Senators who signed the letters which were addressed to him.

In our first letter to the Senator from Kansas we made it perfectly plain that in so far as the Senators who joined in the signing of that letter were concerned their paramount interest in the matter of organizing the Senate was to secure assurance that votes would be had upon legislation which we considered of vital importance to the people of this country. We realized full well that we could not ask, and we did not ask, that Senators should be committed to vote for this legislation in advance. What we did ask was that there should be definite assurances that the legislation which we believed to be of vital concern should have an opportunity for a hearing and a final vote during the first session of the Seventieth Congress.

It would have been futile for the minority group of this body to demand or expect that Senators who were not in agreement with them as to legislative propositions should be requested to give assurance in advance that they would vote favorably upon those questions. Therefore, we addressed a letter to the Republican leader of the United States Senate requesting assurances with regard to a legislative program which we considered to be of importance. He replied assuring us that, in so far as he was able, as leader of this side of the Chamber, he would do everything in his power to bring about a final vote upon those three legislative proposals.

We again wrote the Senator in reply to his letter requesting an assurance from the Republican conference. He brought this correspondence to the attention of the Republican conference. Following that conference, at which this matter was fully discussed, he was authorized to confer with us further. In our conference with the Senator from Kansas he assured us that a majority of the Republican conference took the position that there should be a final vote upon these three propositions before the adjournment of the present session of Congress. With that assurance, and with the assurance given by the Senator from Kansas in his letter, we announced publicly that we would assist in organizing the United States Senate, reserving our right to pursue an independent course of action upon all questions which might arise during the session. That announcement was made before the committee on committees had had any meeting.

I desire to say upon my responsibility as a Senator that during our conferences with the Senator from Kansas we never either directly or indirectly brought up the question of committee assignments. We felt that the balance of power which passed into our hands as a result of the action of the electorate in the 1926 elections had placed upon us a responsibility not to feather our own nests, not to secure better committee assignments, but to advance a legislative program which we believed to be in the public interest.

I resent the imputation made by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that either I or any of my colleagues would engage in the business of trading a balance of power for better committee assignments. It is a fact well known to every legislator of any experience in this Chamber that a position upon a committee does not give a Senator an opportunity to bring about a vote upon legislation.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Is it not a fact that all of the chairmanships that were assigned by the committee on committees in every case, without any exception, were simply the natural promotions through service, and that not one exception was made save in the case of a Senator preceding another Senator who did get a chairmanship refusing to take the chairmanship because of other chairmanships he already had? Is it not a fact that not a single chairmanship was assigned excepting those that Senators had earned in the ordinary way, through service?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am not a member of the committee on committees.

Mr. EDGE. As a member of that committee, I will state that as a fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very glad to have the Senator make that statement. I also desire to say that, so far as I am personally concerned, although solicited by the chairman of the Republican committee on committees to indicate my preference with regard to committee assignments, without intending any discourtesy to him, I did not respond to that request. Having obtained what I believed to be assurances that we would have an opportunity for a vote on the questions with which we were vitally concerned, I was satisfied to assist in organizing the United States Senate.

Mr. President, I therefore ask that there be printed in connection with my brief remarks copies of the correspondence which was conducted between the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and five progressive Senators upon this side of the Chamber and a public statement in which those five Senators joined, which was made on the 9th day of December, 1927.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 1, 1927.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,

Republican Leader, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CURTIS: The undersigned progressive Senators desire to bring to your attention their attitude upon the question of organizing the Senate.

The importance of the control of the Senate committees is recognized by everyone. The legislative program of the entire session of Congress is involved.

The result of the 1926 elections has placed upon us a responsibility to our constituents which we must discharge. We are not so vitally concerned with individual preferment of Senators upon committees. The more important question with us is that certain legislation which we think is of paramount interest to the people shall not be pigeonholed in the various committees of the Senate which are about to be organized.

To that end we request definite assurance from the Republican majority that there shall be a final vote in the Senate before the adjournment of the first session of the Seventieth Congress upon the following measures:

(1) Adequate farm relief legislation on the basis of the McNary-Haugen bill to be reported from committee on or before February 1.

(2) A bill to limit the jurisdiction of Federal courts in the issuance of injunctions.

(3) A resolution for a thorough investigation of the policy of the United States in Central and South America.

We do not ask that any Senator shall be committed to support any of these propositions. We are simply determined that the organization which we help to construct shall not function to prevent a vote in the open Senate upon these important questions.

Sincerely yours,

LYNN J. FRAZIER.
HENRIK SHIPSTEAD.
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.
GERALD P. NYE.
JOHN J. BLAINE.

DECEMBER 3, 1927.

GENTLEMEN: I have your letter of December 1 and note the attitude of the progressive Senators who signed the letter on the question of organizing the Senate.

While I can not speak for the Republican majority, I can assure you that, personally, without committing myself on the measures covered by your letter, I feel that you are entitled to a final vote during the first session of the Seventieth Congress on these questions. As leader of the Republican majority, I will gladly make every effort to secure consideration and final vote on them when they are reported from the committees to which they are referred.

Knowing the Senators who will be made chairmen of the various committees, if the Republicans organize the Senate, I do not see why you should fear that any one of the measures mentioned would be "pigeonholed in the committees," as Senator MCNARY will no doubt be continued as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Senator NORRIS as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and Senator BORAH as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. These are the committees to which the matters you submit to me for assurance of action will be referred in the regular course of the Senate's procedure.

I have not named the committee on order of business, but I assure you it will be made up of Senators who will favor the speedy disposition of the matters before the Senate and an early vote on all important measures reported to the Senate.

Assuring you that as leader of the Republican majority I shall do everything I can to secure early reports, consideration, and final vote on all important measures that may be presented to the Senate, I am, with kindest regards,

Very truly yours,

CHARLES CURTIS.

Hon. LYNN J. FRAZIER, Hon. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., Hon. GERALD P. NYE, Hon. JOHN J. BLAINE.

DECEMBER 3, 1927.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,

Republican Leader, United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR CURTIS: Your letter of December 3, in reply to the letter which we addressed to you on December 1, has been received.

You disclaim any authority to speak for the Republican majority as to obtaining a final vote upon the propositions set forth in our letter of December 1. In view of your statement we ask that you obtain from the Senators of the Republican majority the assurance that they will assist in obtaining a final vote on the following propositions before the adjournment of the first session of the Seventieth Congress:

(1) Adequate farm-relief legislation on the basis of the McNary-Haugen bill, to be reported from the committee on or before February 1.

(2) A bill to limit the jurisdiction of Federal courts in the issuance of injunctions.

(3) A resolution for a thorough investigation of the policy of the United States in Central and South America.

No vote in the Senate will be possible upon these measures unless they are reported from committee. We have confidence in the chairmen of the three committees to which these propositions will be referred, but it has been demonstrated time and again that the chairman of a Senate committee can not report any measure or resolution unless authorized to do so by a majority of the committee.

In order that we may be assured that the committees to which these measures will be referred will report upon them to the Senate, we request that you obtain an assurance from the Republican members of the Foreign Relations, the Judiciary, and the Agriculture Committees that they will assist in reporting to the Senate the three measures mentioned above.

Sincerely yours,

LYNN J. FRAZIER.
HENRIK SHIPSTEAD.
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.
GERALD P. NYE.
JOHN J. BLAINE.

DECEMBER 5, 1927.

Hon. LYNN J. FRAZIER, Hon. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD, Hon. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., Hon. GERALD P. NYE, Hon. JOHN J. BLAINE.

GENTLEMEN: I have your letter of December 3, and assure you it, together with your letter of December 1, and my answer thereto, will be brought to the attention of the Republican conference at the first opportunity for such action as it deems proper.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

CHARLES CURTIS.

Senators FRAZIER, SHIPSTEAD, LA FOLLETTE, Jr., NYE, and BLAINE authorize the publication of the following statement:

"On December 1 we addressed a letter to Senator CURTIS requesting that he obtain definite assurance from the Senators of the Republican majority that there should be a final vote in the first session of the Seventieth Congress upon—

"(1) Adequate farm-relief legislation on the basis of the McNary-Haugen bill, to be reported from committee on or before February 1.

"(2) A bill to limit the jurisdiction of Federal courts in the issuance of injunctions.

"(3) A resolution for a thorough investigation of the policy of the United States in Central and South America.

"Senator CURTIS replied, stating that while he could not speak for the Republican majority and did not desire to commit himself on legislation in advance, he would assist in obtaining a final vote upon these measures and would appoint a committee on order of business which would expedite consideration of all important legislation before the Senate.

"We requested Senator CURTIS, in our reply of December 3, to secure from the Senators of the majority a further assurance that they would assist in obtaining a vote upon these three measures before adjournment of the session. Senator CURTIS referred the correspondence to the Republican conference which met Tuesday. After a thorough discussion Senator CURTIS was authorized to confer with us further.

"In our meeting with Senator CURTIS he assured us that 'a majority of the Republican conference took the position that there should be no unnecessary delay in securing a vote upon the three measures during this session of Congress.'

"Having obtained definite assurance from Senator CURTIS and the Republican conference, we shall assist in organizing the Senate, reserving our right to pursue an independent course of action upon questions which may arise during the session."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] seems to think that the little progressive group on this side of the Chamber have sold out or traded their birthright for a few assignments on committees. I want to assure the distinguished Senator from Mississippi and my other Democratic friends that the progressive group here have not sold out in any way. We did request of the leader on the Republican side, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], a statement as to securing votes on certain measures in which we were interested, putting the farm-relief measure first, as we believed that was the most important measure to come before the session. We received the assurance of the leader on the Republican side, and his statement that the majority of the Republican conference were willing to allow us to have votes on those measures. We did not ask anyone to pledge himself to vote for these measures.

I want to say to my friend from Mississippi that we are too democratic to ask anyone to pledge himself to vote for any measure for which he does not want to vote. We are willing that Senators shall vote according to the dictates of their consciences, and we grant that right to our friends on this side just as we do to our friends on the other side. We expect to be granted the same privilege; and I will say for the able and fair leader of the Republican side, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], that he did not ask any of us, so far as I know—I am speaking for myself, and I think I can speak for the rest of the progressives here—to pledge ourselves to vote for any particular bill or any particular candidates for office or anything of that kind; not even for the organization of the Senate itself.

I am in hearty accord with a great deal that was said over on the other side of the Chamber a few minutes ago in regard to the crop reports of the Agricultural Department of the United States; and I believe that the progressive group here are willing to back any investigation of that particular department or any bill that will rectify the mistakes that apparently are being made by them.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Does not my friend believe that the tender solicitude of our friends, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], is somewhat belated, when we consider the fact that both of them voted against the only farm-relief measure that has been before the Senate and been voted on in recent years?

Mr. FRAZIER. In reply to the Senator from Indiana, I am very frank to say that I do think that some of our Democratic friends are not as consistent as they might be. I can remember only a very few months ago when bills were put forward here that seemed to me to be in the interest of the financial group of the Nation, and when there were not enough votes on this side of the Senate to pass them, enough individuals on the other side of the Chamber who apparently thought along the same lines united with those favoring the measures on this side to put across bills like the 1926 tax law, for instance, like the bank-relief bill known as the McFadden bill, and many others that I might mention.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a minute?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Indiana suggests that I voted against that bill. I did in the form that it came in here because it included cotton, and was going to apply the tax to cotton immediately. I had voted for it before with the understanding that we would let our farmers have two years to study the question and decide for themselves whether or not they wanted to apply that principle to cotton. I voted for it with that understanding in order that the West might have it, because the West wanted it. The last time, when some smooth person got into conference with the friends of the measure and made them clamp cotton right into it—and I think some of them thought it would lose our support when they did it—I could not vote for it.

I have no apology to make for my vote under that condition. I would vote for the bill again now with cotton left out, to give us two years to work on it here, and let the West have it. I am friendly to anything that is substantial for the farmers of the country.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have no criticism to make of the vote on any measure of any Senator who votes according to his own conscience. I want to say that personally I am very much interested in farm legislation. I believe it is the most important piece of legislation that will come before this session of Congress or any other session of Congress until it is taken care of. I want to say further that the Democrats do not need to worry about the votes of the Progressives on this side. We have in the past shown by our record, I think, that we have voted according to the dictates of our conscience, regardless of whether it was with the Republicans or with the Democrats, and we will continue to do so in the future as we have in the past. Any measure that comes up that we believe is for the good of the people of our States and of the Nation we will be glad to support, whether it is a so-called Republican measure or a Democratic measure.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. Gladly.

Mr. COPELAND. I should like to ask the Senator if he heard the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. McMASTER] a little while ago, when he pointed out that there is a sure means of getting farm relief, and that is making an attack on the protective-tariff system? Would the Senator from North Dakota join the Senator from South Dakota in that suggestion?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am very frank to say that I think there should be some tariff revision. I am also frank to state that I believe that if a tariff revision bill were proposed here there would be enough of what my friend from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] calls Wall Street Democrats, together with the Wall Street Republicans, to prevent any worth-while change in the existing tariff legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I happen to come from the city where Wall Street is located. Does the Senator include me in that list?

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not mention the Senator's name.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I think in justice to the Senator from New York it should be stated that he is the only Senator from the East who voted for the McNary bill when it was on its passage.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator who is speaking has forgotten that, has he not? Has the Senator from North Dakota forgotten that the Senator from New York voted for the McNary-Haugen bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no; not at all. I appreciate the progressiveness of the Senator from New York as shown in the vote that he cast.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say that in my judgment if the Senators representing the group to which the Senator from North Dakota belongs will get together in an attack upon the protective-tariff system, the industrial group—I suppose he means the Wall Street group over there—will then be ready to give farm relief; and that is the way to get it. If you will adopt the slogan "Protection for all or protection for none," you will win your fight, and I shall be glad, for myself, to join in that battle.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President——

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McMASTER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution with reference to the tariff, and ask its immediate consideration.

Mr. WATSON. That can not be done while the Senator from North Dakota is on the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I will conclude in just a moment.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator can not take a Senator off the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the resolution is withdrawn. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the fact that there has been a slogan for a year or two or three years in the Northwest, "Protection for all or protection for none." The Senator has been too close to New York to know what was going on.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I did not get the full import of what was said by the Senator from Iowa. Will he repeat it, please?

Mr. BROOKHART. I say, the distinct slogan in the Northwest for two or three years has been "Protection for all or protection for none."

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator imply that the senior Senator from New York had not heard of that?

Mr. BROOKHART. His remarks led me to believe that he had not heard of it.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Iowa think the votes of the Senator from New York indicate that he has not heard of it?

Mr. BROOKHART. Sometimes.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to say, Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will permit me, that I believe the farmer must have relief, and the only way I can see for him to get it is to put that slogan into operation. I believe in the protective-tariff system, and I should hate to see it broken down; but the only way you can hope to have farm relief is to make it clear to the Senators from industrial centers that if farm relief is not given and the farmer given the benefit of protection, the protective-tariff system will be destroyed.

Mr. BROOKHART. If the Senator will present a bill embodying that principle, I will vote for it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the progressives from the Northwest not only believe in protection for all but in a square deal for all. That applies to farmers, workers, and all others.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, when I made my few interesting remarks this morning I did not intend to stir up trouble on the other side of the aisle, and I would not now say anything if it were not for the charge of the Senator from North Dakota that I am inconsistent. It comes in poor grace, indeed, for the Senator from North Dakota to say that I am inconsistent when he stands among his brethren over there and realizes that just a few months ago they thought so little of him as to try to drive him from the councils of the party, and deliberately passed a resolution expelling him from conferences, refusing to give him committee assignments. He defied them here, and now he sees his brethren over there turn somersaults and come back into the fold, and he rises to their defense.

That is what I call inconsistency. I do not care whether the inconsistency is more upon the part of the Senator from North Dakota in his turning a somersault, or the Senators over there who control the destinies of the Republican Party.

Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. BLAINE, and Mr. NYE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to all three of them, and we will have it out right now. I yield first to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I want to say that I did not rise in defense of the Republican Party or the Republican organization or the Republican machine, or anything else you want to call it. I rose in defense of myself.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad to hear that apology. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to add just one word more. The genial Senator from Mississippi stated that he did not know how the progressive group would vote here on the organization, whether we would vote "present," or how we would vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I think I know now.

Mr. FRAZIER. I want to call to his mind a circumstance which took place here not so many years ago, when there was an attempt to elect a chairman of a committee.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator voted in the right way on that occasion.

Mr. FRAZIER. My colleague from North Dakota, the late Senator Ladd, had been chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and the Republican conference deposed him. An attempt was made on the floor of the Senate to continue Senator Ladd as chairman of the committee and enough of the Democrats voted "present" so that the majority group on this side elected their man.

Mr. HARRISON. Now I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, as a new Member of this body I would like to be informed what effect on legislation the election of a Sergeant at Arms, who is the policeman of this body, or of the clerk, and some other officials, who perform clerical work, and the President pro tempore, who presides in the absence of the Vice President, would have. I would like to know just what effect the election of any specific individual to any of those positions would have on the question of farm relief, the issuing of injunctions by the courts in labor disputes, international questions, revision of the tariff, banking and currency, or any other question of vital importance to our Republic and to our people? What has the election of a policeman or a clerk to do with any of those problems?

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator finished his question?

Mr. BLAINE. I have.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator propound the question to me?

Mr. BLAINE. I do.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator does not know, I am surprised at his constituency sending him here.

Mr. BLAINE. I am asking for information, so that the Senate may be advised what would be the effect of the election of these officers on legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator does not know, I can not tell him.

Now, Mr. President, if I may proceed, I did think the Senator from Wisconsin knew what the duties of the Presiding Officer of the Senate are. If he does not know what the duties of the Secretary of the Senate or of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate are, he can read that little manual that is on his desk and find out.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield further.

Mr. BLAINE. My question has not been answered. I put this specifically: Has the Secretary of the Senate any other power than that which may be authorized by the Senate, or any other duty to perform than that of a clerical nature which may be directed by the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BLAINE. Wait a moment. Has the Sergeant at Arms any other duty than to see that decorum is preserved, under the direction of the Senate to appoint the necessary doorkeepers, and such other duties as devolve upon some one who holds an office of that character? Or has the President pro tempore any other duty than to preside under the rules of the Senate in the absence of the Vice President? Therefore, in what respect can the election of a single one of those officials have in bringing about farm relief, tariff legislation, banking and currency legislation, or in settling any other problem that may come before the Senate? I would like to have a specific answer.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator know that if a particular party in the Senate is able to organize by the election of the officers that party then controls the majority of the members on each committee, and that the committees initiate legislation, and that if we had the power to organize the Senate we would have the power then to name more members on the committees than we would have if we were in the minority? The Senator knew that, did he not?

Mr. BLAINE. That is not answering my question.

Mr. HARRISON. I can not answer the Senator's question.

Mr. BLAINE. I am very sorry the senior Senator from Mississippi fails to answer and will not detain him longer.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question? Would my answer to his question influence his vote to-morrow or the next day on the question as to who is to be selected Secretary or Sergeant at Arms?

Mr. BLAINE. I reserve the right on the floor of the Senate of freedom of action. I want the Senator to understand that I am not interested in this question of who may hold these offices. Little does it concern this Republic or the people of this country who may occupy those positions. But the people are interested in the action of this body upon legislation that relates to the interests of our Republic and the people thereof. If the Senator has a logical proposition that appeals to me, it will have its proper consideration by me.

Mr. HARRISON. I feel quite sure of that, and I want the Senator to understand that I do not want to get into any misunderstanding here with the Senator from Wisconsin, because I know that he and I are going to vote alike a great many times during his service here in the Senate. I regret that the Senator from Wisconsin sees fit to somewhat criticize my position here when I rise to defend the action of a distinguished Senator from his State and some other men who have collaborated and worked with him in the progressive ranks. I am merely pointing out the inconsistency of the Republican organization of the Senate in "firing out" from its councils, if I may use that term, men who saw fit to vote differently from them, but they now turn around and give them fine committee promotions.

I am glad those men received those committee assignments. That is fine. I believe that in most instances they will render greater service than some of the other men who could have been appointed to those majority places. I know now that all the banking and currency reforms of this country are to be put in force, that the great fiscal policies of this Nation are to be solved in the interest of the American people, because the distinguished Senator from Iowa will now be a member of the Banking and Currency Committee and his distinguished colleague, I believe, Mr. FRAZIER, goes on that committee.

Mr. President, the country will know of these inconsistent positions taken by the stand-pat old guard group of the Senate, throwing men out of the party one year, and then offering them every kind of inducement to bring them in the next year. I do not know what circumstance has arisen which causes the quick change upon the part of my friend from Indiana. I read the speech that he uttered in that conference and I read his speech in defense of his action upon the floor of the Senate. I know, as other men here and the people know, of his troubles out in the State of Indiana, but it does seem to me, as confused as might be the policical situation in Indiana, and as troubled as might be his heart, he has certainly taken the most radical departure from his former policies in bringing into the fold these men in this particular way.

I know not what has moved my distinguished friend from Kansas to have changed so completely with reference to the progressive group here. He gave succor and assistance to the distinguished Senator from Indiana a few months ago when they took formal party action in expelling these men from the conferences. I know that he has had some trouble in keeping harmony within the ranks of the party, and any leader of the Republican Party who tries to keep harmony within its ranks is going to have trouble. That is natural, because there are men here belonging to the majority who would put a tariff as high as possible on the things in their particular States, and would give no protection to the people in the West. There are others who want to give protection to everything in this country. However, they are a very small minority of the majority in this body.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I think that the Senator from New Jersey ought to rise in his defense——

Mr. EDGE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Because the Senator from New Jersey was one of the distinguished Senators who rushed to the defense of his party caucus when they expelled from their conference Senators BROOKHART and FRAZIER and LA FOLLETTE some years ago. He occupies a high and influential and powerful position upon the committee on committees, I think, and was one of the distinguished Senators who turned this political somersault and appointed these men to these high places, men he once assisted in throwing out of his party.

Mr. EDGE. I thank the Senator for his compliments. He referred to harmony. I am wondering if the Senator from Mississippi thinks the Republican Party has a monopoly on endeavor to maintain harmony within its ranks?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, we have harmony. We always have harmony in the Democratic Party. [Laughter.] We do not have to use oil to smooth the machinery of the Democratic Party.

Mr. EDGE. It did not seem to worry the American people three years ago.

Mr. HARRISON. The people have waked up and have seen their mistake already. Even the Senator's own leader, the man in the White House, has refused in his good judgment to take another chance with the American people. [Laughter.] Not only that but another distinguished Republican, the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, sees the handwriting on the wall and refuses to become a candidate. It looks to me like you will have to run either my friend FRANK WILLIS or my friend CHARLIE CURTIS after all. They are about the only ones who will accept the nomination of the Republican Party. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I think there should be no word of criticism of the so-called regular stand-pat Republican organization for readmitting the progressive Senators and for giving them political advantage. I think it grew out of nothing but a somewhat tardy desire to raise the general average, and I am always in favor of that.

But I want to say seriously that I hope nothing said here will be taken as a charge that the so-called progressive element made a coalition with the other branch of the party for any improper reason or by any improper method. I have watched the course of the insurgent Republicans in the Senate for a good many years. I have differed from them many, many times. But I have always believed that they were patriotic, and I have frequently seen that patriotism manifested by their support of propositions in which we on this side of the Chamber believe. I see no wrong whatever in those Senators requesting some assurance that certain legislation in which they were interested should be given a chance to have consideration and be brought to a vote. Outside of that it is, of course, rather humorous to see men who were so recently expelled now called back and received with open arms, but I think we understand why. The majority is getting a little narrow and the votes of the insurgents are a little more necessary.

So far as the organization of the Senate is concerned, it is true, as stated or intimated by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], that who may be Sergeant at Arms or Secretary or President pro tempore is of little consequence. It is likewise true, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] stated, that membership of the committees is of great importance. But whether the insurgents or progressive Republicans sit by appointment of the Republican Party or should join with the Democrats in the organization of the Senate and the Democrats should then assign the insurgents to places, makes but little difference, because my opinion is that the insurgents or Progressive Republicans, whichever term they like best, generally vote as they think they ought to vote, and that they would do it regardless of which side assigns them to committees.

I think we can pass the incident by, at least I hope we can, without anybody's feelings being hurt, and that the humor and wit and satire in the speech of the Senator from Mississippi will be appreciated, as I know it was intended as merely a bit of pleasantry indulged in on an occasion when it was perfectly apparent that the olive branch had been extended because it was necessary at this particular time to extend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the order submitted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

The order was agreed to.

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE CLERKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have been requested by the financial clerk of the Senate to request the chairmen of committees not to make the appointment of clerks of committees effective until the 16th of December. They may send in their names now, but if the appointment should be made effective at once it would require some additional bookkeeping, which it is desired to avoid.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had adopted a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 8) providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 21, 1927, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Wednesday, January 4, 1928, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOLIDAY RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the resolution just received from the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 8) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 21, 1927, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Wednesday, January 4, 1928.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the concurrent resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so referred.

INVESTIGATION OF MEXICAN PROPAGANDA

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce, out of order, a resolution, and I ask that it may be read. Then I desire to have an opportunity to submit an explanatory word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 53), as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed pursuant to Senate Resolution 7, of the Seventieth Congress, first session, agreed to on December 9, 1927, be authorized and directed to investigate the origin and authenticity of any documents published in the Washington Herald, a newspaper printed in the city of Washington, D. C., in its issues of November 14, 1927, to December 10, 1927, inclusive, which purport to be the records of a foreign government or governments or the officials or agents thereof, and which relate to the actions and policies of such governments, and which affect the interests of the Government and people of the United States.

And further to investigate whether any such government or governments have expended moneys to influence public opinion in the United States or to influence the decision of any international tribunal involving the interests of the United States or its citizens, and/or to support or maintain any revolutionary movement in any foreign state affecting the safety and interests of the United States or the people thereof.

The powers hereby granted are in addition to and not in derogation of the powers conferred by said Senate resolution, agreed to December 9, 1927, and said committee shall in the performance of the duties herein prescribed possess all the powers conferred by said Senate Resolution 7.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the object of the resolution is this: The Senate rather hastily passed a resolution which, at the time it was called up, I thought gave to the committee the power to investigate all of the documents which have been recently printed and all of which, in a certain sense, are interlocked. Part of the documents related to the alleged use of money with United States Senators. On examining the language of the resolution I find that it would seem to be confined to that one proposition. I would like to see the powers of the committee so enlarged that they can examine into the authenticity of all of the documents which have recently been published. They have come forward in a series of articles.

The claim is made that various documents have been printed, that facsimiles of them are before the public, and that the originals are in the possession of the proprietor of the newspaper. A few of those documents or of the series of documents deal directly with the question covered by the resolution which was passed. It seems to me a proper investigation would naturally lead into proof regarding the rest of the documents, where they all came from, and how they came to be in the possession of this paper. I would like to see the whole question thoroughly sifted. If the documents are genuine, then they are of vast interest and importance. If they are not genuine, then the paper publishing them has accepted a very grave responsibility.

I would have spoken to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] before introducing the resolution, but I did not see him in the Chamber at the time. He is here now. I hope that these additional powers will be quite satisfactory and agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator ask immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not demand it. I would like to have it, because I think the Senator's committee meets within a day or two.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The committee has set Thursday morning as the time for its first hearing. I should prefer to talk the matter over with my colleagues on the committee before stating our attitude toward so exhaustive an investigation.

It seems to me that the additional subjects of inquiry proposed by the resolution, as I have heard it read, are subjects that fall rather under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Relations than of a special committee appointed, as was ours, for the specific purpose of running down an allegation of bribery of one or more Senators. Those are matters I should like to consider before expressing an opinion.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania so desires, I am willing that the resolution shall lie over until the next session of the Senate, but I have this to say: Having followed to some extent these articles in the newspapers, and not in any manner vouching for them, but because they are here printed, it would seem to me, if the question arises as to whether certain documents relating to Senators are forgeries the investigation of that question naturally will lead into an investigation as to the genuineness of all the other papers presumptively secured at the same time, and that it would be almost impossible to confine the investigation of the special committee to the simple question of the two or three instruments that relate directly to the senatorial bribery proposition, which, so far as I am concerned, I do not believe ever occurred in the world. I make that suggestion; I am willing to have the matter lie over and let the Senator from Pennsylvania consider it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I feel very sure that the members of the special committee would not want to usurp the privileges of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I feel that if our inquiry shall be ordered to be broadened to such effect as the resolution purports we are apt to do all of our work badly, when, as a matter of immediate duty, we want to do our one job well, find out, if it is possible to find out, whether or not there is anything to the charge made by this newspaper that four Senators were paid money by the Mexican Government.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. I recognize the wisdom contained in the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri that a committee which is investigating the one subject might be led into the other; but it seems to me that the matter referred to in the resolution could be more properly investigated by the Foreign Relations Committee. If the letters shall be ascertained to be genuine documents, then question will arise in connection with the policy which this Government should pursue, which would involve foreign affairs and would naturally appertain to the Foreign Relations Committee. I think an investigation ought to be made to ascertain whether or not these documents are genuine. After that shall have been done, an investigation should be made and a conclusion reached by the committee as to the policy to be pursued by the United States, in case the documents are genuine documents, as affecting our relations with a foreign government.

I could not consent that such a matter should go to a special committee in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who, I am sure, ought to be consulted in the matter. I could not consent that the special committee should supersede the duties appertaining to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I do not know how the Senator from Idaho feels about it. If he desires the special committee to investigate the matter, and does not wish his committee to do so, that would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me a suggestion, I desire to say that I am now told that the Committee on Foreign Relations has been called to meet to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Why not refer the resolution of the Senator from Missouri to that committee? If it agrees with him that the special committee ought to make this investigation, it can make its report to-morrow, and no time will be lost. If, on the other hand, the committee disagrees, it can express its conclusions to that effect to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, while the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] is on his feet, I feel moved to say that in all probability the Senator from Pennsylvania spoke inadvertently when he stated that a certain newspaper had charged that certain Senators had been bribed. I did not understand from my reading of the newspaper in question that any such charge was made.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator was not present, I believe, on Friday when this incident occurred. The headlines of the newspaper article charged in bold type that $1,215,000 had been paid to four Senators. Following the story down to the small reading type one found no such charge; and on the following day the newspaper came out with a further statement that it had no evidence that any Senator had received any money; but the charge was made in the headlines. That is what attracted our attention on the first day of the publication of the story.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I merely rose thinking that the Senator from Pennsylvania had made inadvertently a statement which he did not intend to make. Apparently, however, the statement was deliberately made.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; because I think the headlines did make the charge.

Mr. SWANSON. I think the suggestion that the resolution go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which will meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock, will afford a very wise disposition of the matter at this time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The only desire I have is that this entire matter shall be thoroughly looked into. I repeat, it seemed to me that as the special committee was undertaking the investigation of one part of the matter, it naturally would run into all the other questions, and that it ought to have such authority as would enable it, if it desired to do so, to bring witnesses before it. I am quite content that the resolution shall go to the Committee on Foreign Relations for its judgment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ARTICLE BY HON. HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask the privilege of inserting in the RECORD—and I ask to have it printed in 8-point type—a very interesting and learned article, which is entirely nonpolitical, by HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives for many years, and formerly president of the American Bar Association, in which he discusses the construction of the constitutional phrase commonly known as the "general-welfare clause." I think it will be of great interest to the Senate, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri allow me an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment.

Mr. WARREN. Would it answer the same purpose if the Senator from Missouri could let the matter lie over until to-morrow morning or to a later hour? I have allowed the debate to run on on a resolution which the Senator had up, although desirous of proceeding with the appropriation bill.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think there will be no debate on this request, which is an ordinary request. I do not wish to read the article.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only objection which I have to the request of the Senator from Missouri is that he has asked that the article be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type. The Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses has objected to that, and there is a rule against having documents so printed. I shall not object to having the article printed in the kind of type in which such articles are usually printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Just one moment, with the indulgence of the Chair. What I have requested, however, can be done by the order of the Senate, can it not?

Mr. MOSES. No.

Mr. SMOOT. It can not be done by order of the Senate, but requires the action of the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Then I will let the request lie over until to-morrow morning and renew the request then, because I think it will do little good to print the article in the smaller type.

Mr. REED of Missouri subsequently said: I desire to renew the request I made a few moments ago with reference to the printing in the RECORD of an article by Mr. HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER.

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator, if it will not lead to debate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well. I ask to have the article printed in the RECORD in the ordinary type and I also ask to have it made a public document. I will say to Senators who are interested in constitutional questions that it is well worth printing as a public document.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator, while he is on his feet, whether he asked to have this address printed in the RECORD?

Mr. REED of Missouri. In the RECORD, but in the ordinary type; and I also asked to have it printed as a public document.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is a very unusual request, Mr. President. I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thought we absolutely agreed on that about five minutes ago. I withdraw the request.

CONSPIRACIES TO DEFRAUD THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. WARREN obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WARREN. I will yield if the Senator desires to present a paper.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, we had not reached before the expiration of the morning hours this morning the order of reports of committees. I am very desirous of submitting a report which I think will give rise to no discussion and I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming to give me that opportunity.

Mr. WARREN. If it will lead to no debate I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If debate should ensue I will ask that the report be withdrawn.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1397) amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. 220), and I submit a report (No. 2) thereon.

Mr. President, this is a bill which was introduced by me on yesterday morning, the nature of which I then explained to the Senate. The Committee on the Judiciary unanimously directed me to report the bill favorably. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Montana, as I recall, introduced two bills on yesterday. For which bill is he now asking immediate consideration?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I refer to the bill reducing the period of the statute of limitations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1397) amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. 220), which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. 220), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1044. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to any offense for which an indictment has been heretofore found or an information instituted, or to any proceedings under any such indictment or information."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. I call up for consideration House bill 5800, being the first deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DILL. Under what order of business is the Senate now proceeding?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there is now before the Senate the deficiency appropriation bill, and the Senator in charge of that bill has the floor. I move that the Senate proceed immediately to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. DILL. We had no opportunity this morning to present morning business, and I should like to introduce a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consideration of the order presented by the Senator from Indiana consumed the session until 2 o'clock, at which time the morning hour closed. Morning business may be presented at this time only by unanimous consent.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will take but a moment. On yesterday House Concurrent Resolution No. 7 providing for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of the President's message and the report of the engineers on flood control came over from the House, and was referred to the Committee on Commerce. The House committee says that its business is delayed because of the failure to get the documents printed. So I ask unanimous consent that the committee may be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and I wish to ask that it may be adopted at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Commerce is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution (H. Con. Res. 7) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed with illustrations 10,000 additional copies of House Document No. 90, being the message from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Hon. Dwight F. Davis, Secretary of War, transmitting with favorable recommendation the report of Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, containing the plan of the Army Engineers for flood control of the Mississippi River in its alluvial valley, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Committee on Flood Control of the House of Representatives, 3,000 for the use of the House document room, and 2,000 for the use of the Senate document room.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wheatland, Wyo., praying for the exemption of Chautauqua entertainment tickets from admissions tax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ODDIE (for Mr. DU PONT) presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Delaware, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 3, memorializing the Congress of the United States to abolish the Federal estate tax

Whereas the Federal estate (inheritance) tax law, as amended February 26, 1926, provides that the estate liable thereunder shall be credited with any inheritance tax paid by the beneficiaries to the State or States, the credit not to exceed 80 per cent of the Federal levy; and

Whereas this amendment menaces the rights of the States, because its object is to persuade them to abandon their State inheritance tax laws in favor of statutes based on the Federal law. The tax not being required for revenue at this time, its only object now must be coercion of the States; and

Whereas the joint levy is contrary to the theory of this Government, unprecedented, and offensive to the independence of the legislatures of the sovereign States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That we hereby request the present Congress to repeal immediately the Federal estate (inheritance) tax provisions of the revenue law effective February 26, 1926, and abandon this field of taxation in time of peace; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to Delaware's Senators and Representative in the Congress of the United States.

WM. F. ALLEN,
President pro tempore of the Senate.
WILLIAM WINTRUP,
Speaker of the House.

Approved March 9, 1927.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer a substitute for the committee amendment and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out it is proposed to insert the following:

To pay to the Indians of the Shawnee Tribe, and 13 Delaware Indians affiliated with the same tribe, their heirs or legal representatives, in accordance with the official findings, arbitration award, and report of the Secretary of the Interior to Congress, made in pursuance of the twelfth article of the treaty between the United States and the Shawnee Indians, proclaimed October 14, 1868 (15 Stat. The Shawnee Indian superintendent and the council of the tribe at Shawnee, Okla., shall execute a release binding on all beneficiaries having no legal representatives.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this is an old claim——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Committee on Appropriations will accept my substitute, I will yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. This is an old claim. It has been before the Congress for many years. It has been recommended for payment repeatedly by the Secretary of the Interior. It has been reported favorably repeatedly by committees of both Houses of the Congress. I respectfully call attention to House Report No. 1653 of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress; also, to House Report No. 827 of the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress; also, House Report No. 1293 of the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress. This item, in substantially the same form, has been reported favorably by numerous committees of the Senate; and I respectfully call attention to Senate Report No. 607 of the first session of the Sixty-first Congress; also, to Senate Report No. 401 of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress; also, to Senate Report No. 235 of the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. In addition to having been introduced and having received favorable committee action, this claim has been approved by each of the two branches of the Congress on many former occasions. This item, identical in substance, has been considered and acted upon favorably at least three times by the Senate of the United States.

In the Sixty-second Congress Senate bill 459, being a bill "To adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians," was reported favorably by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, February 22, 1912 (p. 2319, vol. 48, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 62d Cong., 2d sess.). The bill as reported passed the Senate on May 10, 1912 (p. 6209, vol. 48, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 62d Cong., 2d sess.).

In the Sixty-fourth Congress Senate bill 1098, being a bill "To adjust and settle claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians and to report the same to Congress," was reported favorably March 9, 1916, by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs (p. 3795, vol. 53, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 64th Cong., 1st sess.). The bill as reported passed the Senate on June 3, 1916 (p. 9233, vol. 53, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 64th Cong., 1st sess.).

In the Sixty-ninth Congress Senate bill 2113, being a bill "To carry into effect the twelfth article of the treaty between the United States and the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribes of Indians proclaimed October 14, 1868," was reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, May 11, 1926 (S. Rept. 807) (p. 9183, vol. 67, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st. sess.).

On July 2, 1926, H. R. 5218, being an identical bill and which had already passed the House, was substituted for Senate bill 2113 and in that form passed the Senate (p. 12667, vol. 67, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 69th Cong., 1st sess.).

The fact that this item has been recommended for payment numerous times by the Secretary of the Interior, has been considered favorably by committees of each House of the Congress, and has been acted upon favorably numerous times by each branch of the Congress, and the fact that it has never been rejected when up for final consideration by either branch of the Congress, would appear to settle the merits of the item. However, in order to make the record complete, I will make a statement relative to the history and merits of the item.

The Shawnee Indians prior to the Civil War were located in southeastern Kansas and were in an advanced state of civilization, so much so that in the fifties it was reported by the Indian Office that the members of such tribe were so advanced as to justify their allotment in severalty of their lands.

These Indians had made frequent treaties with the Government, and were always a loyal and peace-abiding tribe of Indians. Over 200 of these Indians served in the Union Army during the War between the States. The Government had by previous treaties, including that of 1854, guaranteed to protect them, and Congress appropriated money to pay for claims for destroyed property in accordance with the treaty of 1854.

On January 28, 1867, the Secretary of the Interior reported to Congress as follows:

> The Shawnees as a friendly tribe, strictly regarding their treaty stipulations with the Government and abstaining from acts of private revenge and retaliation, but relying upon the good faith of the Government, are entitled to its protection and for remuneration for losses at the hands of its citizens. It is apparent from an examination of the evidence that the Government of the United States had the use for its troops of a larger amount of the property taken.

Following this report to Congress, a treaty was entered into between the Shawnee, Seneca, Mixed Senecas, and Quapaw Indians and the United States on February 23, 1867, ratified by Congress on June 18, 1868 (15 Stat. L. 513), and proclaimed on October 14, 1868.

Article 12 of this treaty provided for an ascertainment of the Indians' claims for losses during the Civil War and for a report to Congress. The provision reads as follows:

> ART. 12. Whereas the aforesaid Senecas, Mixed Senecas, Shawnees, and Quapaws were driven from their homes during the late war and their property destroyed, it is agreed that a commission of not to exceed two persons shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall proceed to their country and make a careful investigation of their claims and losses, and make full report of the same to the department; and the Secretary of the Interior shall report the same to Congress.

Following the ratification of this treaty, the United States appointed two Indian agents, John H. Pickering and Jonathan Richards, as the commissioners, as provided for in article 12 of such treaty. The said commissioners were instructed to proceed to examine each claim for damages filed; the claimants were to be investigated and examined, and all testimonies possible were to be secured in order to ascertain the exact amount of the property destroyed, the value of such property, and all facts relevant thereto; and the commissioners were instructed to make a complete report thereon.

The report of the commissioners, Pickering and Richards, sets forth each individual claim, the aggregate being $463,732.49. The commissioners included in the claims the claims of certain Delawares who were affiliated with the Shawnees, and who by treaty had been guaranteed protection by the United States, as in the case of the Shawnee Tribe.

On May 11, 1874, the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to article 12 of the treaty of 1868, reported the losses to Congress as found by the commissioners. The United States since then has paid the claims of the Senecas, Mixed Senecas, and Quapaws, which were filed, examined, and reported under the same twelfth article of the treaty of 1868, leaving unpaid only the claims of the Shawnees and affiliated Delawares, embraced in the pending bill. No impeachment of this report has been made, and no evidence has been offered that the allowances by the commissioners were excessive or not justified.

The report of the Department of the Interior, dated March 15, 1926, appended hereto, states:

> The twelfth article of this treaty of 1868 (15 Stat. L. 513) provides for the establishment of a commission of not to exceed two persons to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to make a careful investigation of the claims of the Senecas, of the Mixed Senecas and Shawnees, and Quapaws for losses sustained through United States and Confederate troops during the Civil War. The claims of all the abovementioned Indians except those referred to in the bill have been paid.

Inasmuch as the various items which make up the claim were investigated and reported by the agents of the Government and accepted by the Secretary of the Interior and reported to Congress at the time for payment, it appears that there is no question of fact in dispute.

The item embraced in the substitute amendment is to carry out a solemn treaty obligation between the United States and the Shawnee Tribe of Indians. This item is an admitted debt owing by our Government, as the guardian, to such tribe of Indians as our wards; and I submit the amendment to the Senate in the hope that this debt, now too long past due, may be paid and canceled.

I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator, if this amendment should be accepted, what will become of any funds that might properly belong to Indians who, if they were alive, would have received them but who are dead and who have no heirs?

Mr. THOMAS. Under the terms of this amendment the appropriation is made in a lump sum; but in its administration it will be divided in accordance with claims now on file in the Indian Office. Those claims are made by individual members. If they should be dead, the amount of money due the claimant would go to his heirs.

Mr. KING. Suppose there are no heirs.

Mr. THOMAS. It will go, then, to the remaining members of the tribe equally.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that would be just?

Mr. THOMAS. In this case there will be no remainder, because it will all be claimed.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean that all those whose property was damaged are alive, or have direct descendants?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. KING. I know that in a number of instances which have been brought to my attention, one in my own State, it was impossible to find the heirs of the deceased. As a matter of fact, many of the families become extinct, as the Senator knows, and I am inclined to think that an examination of the facts will disclose in this instance that many of these families are extinct, and if they owned their property in severalty, not in community form, I was wondering whether it would be just that the appropriation which might go to an Indian if he were alive or to his heirs if he had any, should be allocated to a community and distributed among those who had no interest in it. My understanding is that this property was owned in severalty, not in communal form.

Mr. THOMAS. The report is very exhaustive, and is itemized—I am advised that if any appropriation is made there will be no difficulty in ascertaining the proper apportionment of the sums among the heirs of those who have died since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment offered. It is legislation, and an entire change. In fact, we had nothing on which to base this, either from the Budget officer, or from any other source which we could recognize as giving us the authority. We have stricken out the appropriation, because it is well known—and no doubt to the Senator from Oklahoma who offered the amendment—that there is litigation now pending in the Court of Claims, case No. H–121, Okanogan and Other Indians against The United States, which must be settled before we could even consider the recognition of such a case as this. There is no law upon which to base such an appropriation, and there is no estimate for it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I submit that the point of order is not well taken, for the reason that this item is now in the bill, and I have a right to perfect an amendment which now appears in the bill before it is finally passed upon. Inasmuch as the item is now in the bill, I submit that a point of order will not lie against an amendment to such an item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will hold that the point of order is not well taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 16, to insert:

Payment to Charles J. Hunt: The Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to allow the claim of Charles J. Hunt for compensation in the sum of $1,228.33 for services as financial clerk in the office of the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes at Muskogee, Okla., from April 25, 1926, to September 8, 1926, inclusive; which services were at the rate of $3,300 per annum, and which claim was disallowed by the Comptroller General in his settlement dated January 27, 1927.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment at the top of page 41.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That being a separate amendment, the Chair will request the Senator to withhold it until the committee amendments shall be disposed of.

Mr. FRAZIER. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are considering committee amendments now, as I understand, and I wanted to refer to an amendment on page 68, the Federal Farm Loan Bureau provision, whenever that is to be acted upon.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator refer to an amendment we have already made? If he wishes to amend the language as it came over from the House, I shall ask him to wait until the committee amendments shall have been considered.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 20, after the word "thereto," to insert "removing, reconditioning, and using vault doors now in the Subtreasury Building," so as to make the paragraph read:

San Francisco, Calif., Mint Building: For an additional vault and work incidental thereto, removing, reconditioning, and using vault doors now in the Subtreasury Building, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 2, to insert:

Durango, Colo., post office, courthouse, etc.: Toward the construction of the building, $50,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to construct said building, except for the courts, at a limit of cost of $150,000 in lieu of $200,000 heretofore authorized: Provided, That the work be so done that the courts can be added later.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 4, to insert:

Juneau, Alaska, Federal and Territorial Building: Toward the construction of the building, $200,000, under an estimated total cost of $775,000 in lieu of $177,500 as authorized in act of June 25, 1910.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 5, after the figures "1927," to insert "without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, including also in connection with the erection of barracks at Fort Jay, Governors Island, not to exceed $30,000 for the employment, by contract or otherwise, of the services of architects, or firms, or partnerships thereof, and other technical and professional personnel as may be deemed necessary without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law governing the employment and compensation of employees of the United States," so as to make the paragraph read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of committee amendments as printed in the bill has been completed, except the one which was passed over on the request of the Senator from Connecticut, on page 83.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in connection with that amendment, I wanted to call attention to the fact that I presented an amendment yesterday with regard to a structure on Governors Island, and I would ask that the committee amendment, which I favor, should go over until there has been an opportunity to act on the amendment which I presented yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment on page 83 will be passed over on the request of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. KING. I would like to inquire, Mr. President, whether that will mean that we pass over also the appropriation called for of $6,160,000, found on line 14, together with the subsequent enumeration found in the same paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that the entire paragraph will be passed over.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I now offer an amendment, which I ask to have acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 83, after line 18, to insert the following:

For construction and installation of officers' quarters at Fort Riley, Kans., including utilities and appurtenances thereto, as authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1927, without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, $126,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator want to ask any question about this amendment?

Mr. KING. I want to make an inquiry with respect to a number of these items.

Mr. CURTIS. This item?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. This item is brought about by the fact that we have just had a very disastrous fire at Fort Riley, and there are 30 families of the officers of the fort without any quarters or places in which to live. The amendment makes available money already authorized in two previous acts, and also part of an estimate that will be acted upon in the next bill.

It is recommended by the department. The winter is coming on, and the department wants to begin to erect the buildings at once, so that those thirty-odd families now without quarters, and without any places in which to stay, may be taken care of. The amendment is recommended by the Budget, recommended by the War Department, and I will state that it was recommended by the committee of the House, but the amendment could not be prepared until yesterday, just before I offered it.

Mr. KING. The inquiry I was about to make was in connection with the appropriation of $6,120,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Will not the Senator let the amendment be acted upon first?

Mr. KING. I was just wondering why these various appropriations for military posts, and so on, are not provided for in the general military bill.

Mr. CURTIS. This was provided for and appropriated, as I understand it. All I ask in this bill is to add an additional amount, that has already been estimated to go into the next general bill.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send the following committee amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

On page 6, after line 12, insert:

For maintenance, including miscellaneous items, and for all necessary services, fiscal year 1928, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I also offer the following amendment; and let me say that all these were sent up from the Budget, which had the recommendations and the legislation before them, but the amendment was received after the report was made yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

On page 29, after line 17, insert:

Administration of the produce agency act: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled "An act to prevent the destruction or dumping, without good and sufficient cause therefor, of farm produce received in interstate commerce by commissioned merchants and others and to require them truly and correctly to account for all farm produce received by them," approved March 3, 1927, including the employment of such persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere as the Secretary of Agriculture may deem necessary, and the purchase of such perishable farm products as may be necessary for the detection of violations of the act, fiscal year 1928, $10,000: Provided, that all receipts from the sale of such products shall be credited to this appropriation and shall be reexpendable therefrom.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to make some inquiry in regard to the amendment just offered by the Senator from Wyoming. If I understand the amendment, as read it calls for the purchase of farm products by a commission, and the disposition of the same.

Mr. SMITH. No; this is pursuant to the deficiency bill passed last year. I think it is of importance to every man in the Senate. It is to correct the custom of commission men making false or erroneous statements in their reports to the effect that they found certain things in bad order. Perhaps they were in bad order, perhaps they were not. They justify that practice on the ground that such a thing occurred. Perhaps it did, and perhaps it did not. The bill was approved by the Budget, was passed and approved by the President, and everyone who saw it thought it was a necessary piece of legislation. There was proposed to be appropriated $25,000 for the purpose of carrying it into effect. That item came to the Senate in the deficiency appropriation bill just as the unfortunate filibuster arose, and, of course, it died with the other items in the bill.

It was not included in the present bill as submitted to the House because they were not apprised of the importance thereof. I went to see General Lord and those interested, and told them the spring crop would begin to move along in February and in March, beginning at Florida and moving north, and that until the $25,000 should be made available for the spring of 1929 we would need enough to protect the farmer at this time. General Lord readily agreed and sent the recommendation down that we use only $10,000. Out of that $10,000 they will, of course, purchase some of the goods to bring here to prove whether or not they are in the condition claimed by the commission merchants. They are not going to purchase anything else except for that particular purpose.

Mr. KING. The appropriation is merely to see that the act, which was passed by Congress, is enforced?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. Let me explain to the Senator one further point. If a man ships a carload of vegetables to any one of our great markets, before they can make their report that it is in bad order or that they are getting a less price than the current quoted price, they have to get a certificate from some one designated by the Agricultural Department that the facts alleged are true.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment offered by the chairman of the committee will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 29, after line 25, insert:

For an additional amount to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the existence of the Parlatoria date scale in California, Arizona, or any other State, including the same objects specified under this head in the agricultural appropriation act, fiscal year 1928, $25,000, to remain available until June 30, 1929.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I send to the desk another committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68 strike out the proviso in lines 5, 6, and 7 in the following words:

Provided, That the amount to be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1928 shall not exceed $242,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the purpose of the amendment. The appropriation bill which passed Congress on January 26, 1927, provided for the Federal Farm Loan Bureau as follows:

Salaries: For six members of the board at $10,000 each; for personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $415,000; in all, $475,000, of which amount not to exceed $194,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Of course, there are seven members of the board, but the Secretary of the Treasury is ex officio chairman of the board, and I take it he does not get any additional salary by virtue of being a member of the board; so that there are really only six members of the board to be paid $10,000 each. The other item is:

For traveling expenses of members of the board and its officers and employees, per diem in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $6, contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including books of reference and maps and for the examination of the national farm-loan associations and for the expenses of the registers' offices, including rent and miscellaneous items, $205,000; in all, Federal Farm Loan Bureau, $680,000, payable from assessments upon Federal joint-stock land banks and Federal intermediate credit banks.

We are now considering items which are taken care of by assessments imposed upon joint-stock land banks, Federal land banks, and intermediate credit banks. In other words, all of the money that is being appropriated here for the benefit of the Federal Farm Loan Board must come back from those banks and be charged up against the operation of the system.

In the bill as it was proposed at the last session of the Congress on March 2, 1927, at page 68, under the head of Federal Farm Loan Bureau, we find two items, salaries amounting to $10,000 and miscellaneous expenses amounting to $5,000. In other words, the proposal of the last session in the deficiency bill was for $15,000. We have been told that the pending bill is practically the same as the deficiency bill which failed at the last session. The proposal at the last session was for an addition of $15,000 only to this total of $680,000. That bill, as we know, did not come to a vote on account of some proceedings which we need not go into now, but it was proposed at the last session, in the deficiency bill—and I say this because we have been informed that this is practically the same bill as the one that failed—to add to the overhead for the operation of the system $15,000.

Now, the pending bill provides at page 68, in the item which we are now considering, for an additional amount required for salaries of members of the board and for their personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field for the fiscal year 1928, $75,000. Then there is the proviso, which it is now proposed to strike out, that the amount to be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1928 shall not exceed $242,000.

In the general appropriation act there is this limitation:

Of which amount not to exceed $194,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

It is proposed to increase that amount to $242,000. Of course, if we add $75,000 to $194,000 we get $269,000, but it is suggested here that the amount be made only $242,000. I am not in favor of striking out the proviso. It is a safeguard, although it does not quite harmonize with the proposed addition of $75,000 to the $194,000.

Further provisions under this head are that an additional amount be appropriated as required for miscellaneous expenses of $10,000. In the concluding clause it is provided:

In all, Federal Farm Loan Bureau, $85,000, payable from assessments upon Federal and joint-stock land banks and Federal intermediate credit banks.

At the last session, when the bill was pending, it was estimated that we were to add $15,000 to be assessed against the joint-stock and Federal land banks and intermediate credit banks. Now we are to add $85,000 under the provisions of the pending bill. It is queer to me that these increases should be piling up in addition to the regular appropriation of $680,000. Here is $85,000 added, in addition to the regular appropriation of $680,000, within the last few months.

I wonder if the reorganization of the Farm Loan Board has anything to do with that? It should be borne in mind that last May three members of that board, who had been serving there for some years, who were acquainted with the provisions of the act and who were entirely reputable and competent men, were asked to resign, and in their places were installed, during the vacation of Congress, three members of the expiring and liquidating War Finance Corporation. The latter organization has been winding up its affairs for a year or two. It is supposed to be about concluded. Somehow or other it looks as if the members of that organization had to be taken care of in some way. That organization is identified with the Treasury Department, connected with it, related to it, under its control and protection to a large extent, and cooperating with the Treasury Department in the buying and selling of Government bonds and that sort of thing. It is about to be wound up.

These gentlemen, who are closely related to agriculture and have manifested a serious, intelligent, and faithful interest in the welfare of the farmers of the country, and particularly those who are taking advantage of the benefits of this great system—which, in my judgment, is the greatest thing ever done for agriculture since the establishment of the Department of Agriculture—had been asked to resign in the way I have stated. Over $2,000,000,000 has been made available for farmers and loaned to them at 5½ per cent, with the right to pay off any portion or all of the principal at any interest-paying period, and with the right to pay off the principal at 1 per cent per annum. Great benefits have resulted to agriculture from the operation of this system.

The law provides that the banks can not charge the borrower exceeding 1 per cent more than they pay as interest on the bonds. Consequently, when that interest is low the farmer must get the benefit of the low rate of interest. This 1 per cent is intended to take care of the cost of administering the system. It ought not to cost 1 per cent to administer the system. The less it costs to administer the system the greater the benefit to the borrowing farmer. He is to be given the benefit of the low rate of interest obtained on the bonds and the cost of administering is to be paid out of the assets of the Federal land banks, and so forth, so that all this expense is taxed or charged up against the system. The greater the expense the more the 1 per cent is eaten into. The farmer has to pay this cost.

It was claimed that we were going to get some advantage by this change of personnel on the Farm Loan Board.

This system was organized for the benefit of agriculture; it was intended from the beginning to serve the needs and necessities of those engaged in agriculture in this country. It is not a commercial system. These are not banks in the technical sense at all. There is not a dollar deposited in any one of these banks. There is no reason why they should be linked with the Treasury Department. It is a separate and distinct system entirely from the commercial system. Congress never intended, it was never expected, it was never planned or designed that the Treasury Department should operate this system. There were powers, rights, and duties vested in the Farm Loan Board, and the members of that board are charged with certain responsibilities and functions under the act of Congress.

It is proposed to destroy that independent functioning of the Farm Loan Board by appointing men who are connected with the Treasury, having to do with the Treasury, and never having anything to do with agriculture in all their lives, so far as can be found. They are to administer the system, and therefore accomplish by administrative law what Congress has refused to grant in its statute.

It is proposed by the change of personnel of the Farm Loan Board to effect a policy and to bring about results which are a distinct departure from the original plans and purposes of Congress in creating this system. It is intended absolutely to destroy the independent functioning of this board and to place the entire system under the domination and control of the Treasury. It is to be done by demanding the resignation of honorable, intelligent, and capable members of that board, who understand the law, who have been administering the system faithfully, who are qualified to carry out the purposes and intentions of the act, and to discharge the duties which are vested in them under the law. It is proposed to take them off the board and to put on in their stead men identified solely with the Treasury and to give them the control of the operation of this entire system. The gentlemen who have been nominated to take the place of these three members, who have resigned on request, together with a member of the board who came originally from the War Finance Corporation, will give the War Finance Corporation a majority on the board, giving it four members, and control absolutely of the Federal land banks, the joint stock land banks, and the national farm loan associations, with power to adopt regulations in connection with the operation of the whole system.

That is the situation which confronts us, taking this system out of the hands of those who are in sympathy with agriculture and placing it absolutely in the hands of those who are serving the dictates of the Treasury—"big business," if you please. What is the first thing with which we are confronted by this change? Before these three men had to tender their resignations Congress was asked to give them $15,000, in addition to the regular appropriation of $680,000.

Mr. KING. For what?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can turn to the clause. That amount was:

> For an additional amount for salaries, including the same objects of expenditure specified in the act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments, * * * approved January 26, 1927, * * * $10,000—

And—

> For an additional amount for miscellaneous expenses, including the same objects of expenditure as specified in the act, * * * $5,000.

Those were the two items in the deficiency bill which failed. Since then one effect evidently of the change of the personnel of the system has been to increase the overhead, to add to the charges taxed up against the joint-stock land banks and the intermediate credit banks. We are now asked instead of the $15,000, which a few months ago was regarded as sufficient, to add $75,000.

Where are we going to end? I think a great mistake has been made; I think a serious if not a deadly assault has been made upon this great beneficent system, and here is the beginning of it. Within a few months we are asked to add to this overhead $75,000, making the total amount to be charged up against these banks $680,000 plus $75,000. Of course, the more we add in the way of overhead cost the more we are taxing the borrowing farmers of the country.

I am opposed to the amendment as proposed. I do not think this whole proposition is properly conceived. If we are going to give them anything at all, it seems to me we ought to give them what was in the last bill. That may or may not have been advisable. However, there were hearings had on it and that amount was proposed at the time. Now, why should we go on to adopt this new policy, changing the personnel of boards and commissions, thereby changing constructions and interpretations of statutes, and thereby putting into effect in this country what is thoroughly well known in continental Europe as administrative law, giving to bureaus and to executives the power to depart from expressed statutes of Congress and to provide their own law by regulation and what not as they see fit? That is evidently the purpose.

At the last session of Congress a bill was introduced in the Senate to bring about Treasury domination of the Federal Farm Loan Board. That bill failed. A similar bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, where hearings were held on it, but it was never reported out of the committee. Then came the Supreme Court decision holding that the President of the United States had the power to call for the resignation of any officer appointed by him by and with the advice of the Senate. So when Congress dispersed the President called for the resignation of three members of this board and put in their stead the remnant of the War Finance Corporation to administer an act intended for the benefit of agriculture and not a commercial banking system in any sense.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it advanced as one of the reasons for the increase in amount that the three new commissioners are dirt farmers?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is not alleged here, and, so far as my information goes, not one of them ever had even a garden patch; they know nothing about agriculture. If any of the gentlemen who were on the board were not faithfully attending to their duties, there are plenty of people in this country who are in sympathy with agriculture, who believe it is the foundation upon which the Republic rests in an economic and industrial way, and who want to preserve it and serve those who are engaged in producing the Nation's food, and why not go to that group or class, if it may be called a class, to those identified with that great industry to fill this board? Why go to the Treasury Department and pick up the remains of a financial organization controlled and directed and linked up with the Treasury and put them in charge of this system which is supposed to be in the hands of those engaged in agriculture?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have recently seen in the newspapers criticisms of the administration of the affairs of the farm loan organization anterior to the change to which the Senator has just referred. The statements contained in the press were to the effect that a number of joint-stock banks were in the hands of receivers and a number of persons connected with such banks had been indicted for alleged violations of law. The charge was also made that several of the banking institutions organized under laws of Congress and related to the farm loan system were to be reorganized because of bad management.

May I further say, without desiring to precipitate discussion or project myself into the remarks of the able Senator from Florida, that one of the new members appointed by the President served the War Finance Corporation with great ability, and, so far as I am advised, exhibited marked sympathy for the agriculturalists and those engaged in the livestock business. I refer to Mr. Eugene Meyer. He interpreted the law under which he and the organization with which he was connected acted in a broad and liberal spirit and rendered great service to the livestock interests of the United States. He served, so far as I am advised, with so much ability in the position referred to that I believe, whether he is an agriculturalist or not, that he will discharge the duties of his new position with fidelity and with a proper regard to the needs of the farmer.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I had not intended to say even this much and I did not expect at this time to go into the questions which the Senator's inquiry opens up. I may say, however, that we will have occasion to consider all matters in connection with that appointment before we finish with the question of confirmation. Of course, some good came out of the War Finance Corporation and its operations. If you will give me a few hundred million dollars I can do something with it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROOKHART. I should like to answer briefly some of the suggestions made by the Senator from Utah. The trouble was in the joint-stock land banks and not in the Federal land banks; they are separate institutions. The joint-stock land banks are private institutions. The trouble was uncovered by the whole board before Mr. Meyer had anything to do with it, and the prosecutions started before Meyer ever came in. So far as the operations of the War Finance Corporation are concerned, I think there will be disclosures before this session is over that will change the opinion even of the Senator from Utah, because there are some things that can not be defended in the administration of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me say in further answer to the Senator from Utah, who naturally is interested in the reports that have been circulated regarding the bad conditions in some of these banks, that the fact is that after all these years of the operation of this system there are just three joint-stock land banks that are in a bad way—three out of 55.

Is that any terrible record? Three out of 55 joint-stock land banks, after all these years, are found to be irregular in some of their practices; and even they have not yet been declared to be insolvent. There are receivers in them, but it is believed that the bondholders will get all their money, and will not lose a cent. In fact and in truth, however, just three out of 55 joint-stock land banks up to this time have been found to be engaged in irregular practices.

I should like to have you look over the face of this country and see how the commercial banking systems have been operating, and see whether you do not find scattered all over the land the remnants and remains of commercial banks that have toppled down day after day, and particularly since 1920. That is the record with reference to commercial banks. You do not think the whole system is bad and that we ought to have a revision of the whole system, because commercial banks have failed. Now, because three joint-stock land banks out of 55 have been found to be engaged in irregular practices, you want to denounce the whole system, and say that the people in charge of it and giving it supervision and direction were incompetent and incapable!

Not at all; not at all; and let me ask you this: Why was it that Mr. Dewey, the representative of the Secretary of the Treasury, sent to sit in with the Farm Loan Board last year, just before these bills were introduced, without any notice to the Farm Loan Board, without their knowledge or consent, caused special agents of the Treasury Department to go into five of these joint-stock land banks at the same hour of the same day and seize their records and close them up? There was no authority in the world for it. There was no law for it. If that sort of attack had been made upon commercial banks, they would have toppled over like pins in a bowling alley; and yet, notwithstanding all of that sort of thing, up to this date only three have been found to be in bad shape.

Mr. SMITH. By whose authority was this done?

Mr. FLETCHER. By nobody's authority except Mr. Dewey's own will, and perhaps the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, who was acting under his advice, I take it.

We will go into some of these other questions later. I did not expect to take this time on the matter. I do not want to delay the consideration of the bill. I will vote "nay" on the motion to strike out this language, and I will vote against the whole provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. I do not at this time wish to refer to the appointment of the new members of the board, as referred to by the able Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I do want to say, however, that the increased expense asked for here is for the very purpose of examining the banks more closely than they have been examined in the past.

The Senator referred to the fact that three of the joint-stock land banks have failed; and they are bad failures, too. The Secretary of the Treasury found that in these investigations that were made they had investigated or examined only a very few, and they could not possibly cover the field; it was impossible for them to do it. Most of this increase is for extra examiners to examine these banks more often and more in detail.

You all remember what my position was on joint-stock land banks. I think a mistake was made in the creation and organization of joint-stock land banks. The Federal farm loan banks themselves could have handled all that was handled or all that is necessary to be handled in the United States; but that is not involved here. The question here is as to the increase of some $70,000 for the fiscal year 1928 in order to pay the extra expense to which the Federal Farm Loan Board is put in making the proper examinations of these banks, and in the future, if possible, through those extra examinations and closer supervision, to see that the failures that have occurred in the past will not occur again.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I quite agree with my colleague on the committee that for such purposes this money ought to be appropriated; but that is not what it is appropriated for, according to this statement. It says here—

> For an additional amount required for salaries of members of the board—

And so forth. Why should that language be used? We have appropriated for the salaries of the members of the board, and they are fixed by law at $10,000.

Mr. SMOOT. They will not get a cent more than that; but there is a deficiency.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wondered why this language is used.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is a general deficiency; and perhaps the Comptroller General, if an item had been paid for other purposes than the salaries of members of the board, covered everything for which the money was originally appropriated; and this is an amendment covering it all. The law fixes the salaries of the members of the board, and therefore not a cent of this amount will be paid for increased salaries; but the original act did provide not only for the employees but for the members of the board as well, and of course this is a repetition of it. I assure the Senator that not one cent will be paid to the members of the board out of this amount, because there is no deficiency there.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was just at a loss to understand the language. I could not see how any additional amount would be required for salaries of members of the board.

Mr. SMOOT. It is just a repetition of the existing law. There is not a thing in it other than that.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee I think I ought to say, without repetition, that it is a plain business proposition; that the increase involves no indorsement of policy, as has been stated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. It does not involve the question of the management beyond a desire more effectually to examine these banks and avert any further failures.

As to the efficiency of the board as now constituted, I may say that the last bond sale of these banks was placed at the lowest rate of interest that has prevailed since the institution of the banks, and that one of these gentlemen criticized here—and I am not now going into the question of his confirmation—is responsible for saving this system $900,000 thereby. So that when it comes to the question of a trivial appropriation designed to avert a repetition of failures, we can put over against that trivial increased expense a saving of nearly $900,000 in the sale of the last bond issue of these banks.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that while the interest rate was reduced in the last sale of bonds, still it has been more than $900,000 too high.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, well, I have no doubt in the world that the Senator from Iowa could take the place and save that much more; but not everybody is as expert as he is in these matters.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, if he will allow me to interrupt him, that it is not the function of the chairman of the Farm Loan Board or of the Farm Loan Commissioner to find a market and sell farm-loan bonds. The banks sell those bonds. They are issued by the banks, and there is a fiscal agent paid by the banks $25,000 a year to find a market for the bonds.

Mr. GLASS. And Mr. Meyer found one that saved the Government $900,000 in one bond sale.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another amendment offered by the chairman on behalf of the committee, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 121, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "1928," and to insert in lieu thereof "1926, 1927, 1928."

Mr. KING. What does this amendment relate to?

Mr. WILLIS. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. WARREN. It is a committee amendment, simply to add the three years instead of two.

Mr. KING. Just a transposition of figures, is that it? What is the object?

Mr. WARREN. It is an addition, not a transposition.

Mr. KING. What does it do?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Utah that the amendment is on page 121, line 11, and for the information of the Senator the Secretary will again state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 121, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "1928," and in lieu thereof insert "1926, 1927, 1928."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that it is extending a deficiency appropriation for one year. Originally it was 1926 and 1927; now it is 1926, 1927, and 1928. In other words, instead of making an appropriation directly here, we can extend that deficiency appropriation for the next year, and this covers the point entirely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is one other committee amendment which was passed over at the request of the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. BINGHAM, in order that his amendment which relates to the committee amendment might be offered. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 83, line 18, it is proposed to change the period to a colon and to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for any permanent construction on Governors Island so located as to interfere with the possible use of a part of Governors Island as a municipal airport or landing field.

Mr. WILLIS. Where does that come in?

Mr. PHIPPS. On page 83.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is legislation.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it appears to me that this is a limitation on an appropriation, rather than new legislation, and that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. WARREN. It simply adds legislation, I think, as the Vice President will see if he will read it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to suggest that it goes further than mere legislation and changes the existing law.

Mr. WARREN. It can be put either way, that it changes existing law or makes new law, but it is certainly repugnant to the rules governing appropriation bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold that the point of order is not well taken. He calls the attention of Senators to the holding in the Sixty-third Congress, in 1914, where the President pro tempore held:

The Chair is not disposed to take the view that this limitation or direction as to the manner in which a specific sum of money is to be expended is general legislation in the sense of our rule on the subject. The Senator from Wyoming [Clark], however, spoke to the contrary with such confidence that he has raised a doubt in the mind of the Chair.

The Chair will state that his ruling is in line with a precedent made when we had under consideration an item in an appropriation bill providing that certain officers should be exempt from the operation of the civil service law. The appropriation was designed to make a certain investigation in connection with this class of officers, and the Senator from North Carolina made the point, and the Vice President sustained it, that any legislation which sought to give direction for the expenditure of or place a limitation upon a particular item of appropriation was not subject to that point of order; that it was not general legislation. If Congress has power to appropriate the money, it has an incidental right to say how it shall be actually expended. The Chair holds that the point of order is not well taken.

The tenor of the holdings seems to be against sustaining the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Is the point of order overruled?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask permission to perfect the amendment. The amendment is based on the committee print, and it should be page 83, line 18, instead of page 80, line 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be perfected in that regard.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WARREN. I can not consent to having that go in. It must be put in by a vote of the Senate, if at all.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if the purpose of his amendment is in any way to interfere with the use of the ground in question for military purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator, not at all. On the contrary, the object of the amendment is to prevent anything being done at this time which would prevent the adoption ultimately of a part of Governors Island as a landing field. I will say to the Senator that the necessity for adequate airport facilities for New York has been acknowledged for a long time.

A few months ago a committee was appointed by the Secretary of Commerce to look into the question of finding the facts as to the possibility of securing adequate landing facilities for the metropolitan district. That committee consisted of representatives of the mayor of New York, the Governor of New Jersey, and the mayors of nearby New Jersey cities, and various State and municipal chambers of commerce, merchants associations, and other civic organizations.

At the first meeting of the committee, on August 4, an executive committee was appointed, with authority to study the situation from all angles. The results of these studies are to take the form of a report to the mayor of New York recommending a definite plan to be followed. The executive committee has given about four months' careful study to this problem, I am informed, and it is expected that the final report will be issued in the near future, probably not later than December 20.

The report of the committee will set forth an airport plan for the New York metropolitan district, not only with the idea of meeting the present needs of this area but to provide for the airport needs for the district for some time to come. It will outline an airport plan which can be developed in keeping with the increasing needs of commercial aeronautics in this area. The plan as set forth is wholly constructive, and is meeting with hearty approval and response on the part of the State and county officials interested in this project.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator suffer an interruption? I did not hear the personnel of the executive committee which made this investigation and which will make the report within a short time.

Mr. BINGHAM. The committee consists of representatives of the mayor of New York, the mayors of nearby cities, the Governor of New Jersey, the representatives of chambers of commerce, and so on. They are a fact-finding committee to try to determine what areas of the 70 which have been suggested are really needed or are likely to be needed for use as an airport or landing field for New York.

The object of this proviso is merely to see to it that none of the money appropriated here shall be used for permanent construction which in the future may be held to be the expenditure of millions of dollars for one thing which will thereby prevent us from doing another if we choose to do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have yielded to the Senator from Utah. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee next.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator if he does not think that the War Department has made an examination with a view to determining the protective needs of the country, and that the plan which the Senator has in mind, and which might ultimately be reported favorably upon by the executive committee referred to, might interfere with the plan which has been devised and accepted by the War Department.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. May there not be a conflict between the determination of the War Department, contemplated by the appropriation, and the determination by this executive committee? Suppose the executive committee should report that a large portion of this field should be used for an air port, and the War Department has determined that it should not be used for an air port but should be used for purely military purposes. Would there not be a conflict, and whom should we follow, the recommendation of the mayor of New York and of surrounding cities or the recommendation of the War Department and the military authorities, who determine largely our military policy?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that it seems to me that the determination of this question ought to come after the committee has reported, when the whole matter would be before us. This amount of money, $6,000,000, is to be appropriated in such a way that the War Department might use it; I do not say they intend to use it—in fact, I have been assured by the Secretary of War that he believes such construction can be put up there as will not interfere with their program for the use of Governors Island as a landing field, but the object of this amendment is to make sure that no million-dollar construction is put on that island in such a place as to make it unlikely that, if it seems best, Congress could then set aside part of that island as a landing field.

Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut merely provides for delay until a thorough investigation can be made to see what should be done.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the Senator. That is exactly the purpose of it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask that the amendment be reported first before I submit the remarks I want to make?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that the word "ultimate," to which he objected, has at his suggestion, been changed to "possible."

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator for making the change. I want to say, for myself, that I am far from convinced that Governors Island is an appropriate place for an airport, and it was because of that feeling that I asked the Senator from Connecticut to change the word "ultimate," which seemed to me to give the intimation that we were closing the matter to further discussion. But I do think it is proper for us to provide that the immediate construction on the island shall be so located that if ultimately we decide that that is the place for an airport, the matter will not be closed because of this construction.

So, for myself, I am glad to support the amendment of the Senator as amended by the change of the word "ultimate" to "possible."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 83, line 8, after the word "Treasury" and before the period, insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for any permanent construction on Governors Island so located as to interfere with the possible use of a part of Governors Island as a municipal airport or landing field.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, may I say that I have also consulted the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and that this meets with his entire approval.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator tell the Senate what it actually means? Under this provision can the Government economically spend this amount of money for the benefit of the Army, that is so greatly in need of a post there?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Secretary of War assured me at a conference yesterday that it could be done.

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary of War knows more about it than I do, but I am a little doubtful.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator who offered this amendment will not deny that he has undertaken, not only before the Committee on Appropriations but heretofore in the Committee on Military Affairs, to estop entirely the use of Governors Island for a post or for any military purpose, except for a landing field. There is nobody connected with the Army, not a single individual, so far as I know, who is willing that that should be done. They are as willing that there should be landing places as can the Senator from Connecticut possibly be, but Governors Island, situated as it is, in the very teeth of the City of New York, and when those instant happenings that sometimes take place in cities occur they have, in addition to their own helpers, in case of fire or accident, these military men, almost all of them of the Infantry Arm.

Whether Governors Island is large enough for the location there of a landing field can be determined at a later date. The purpose now is to block the appropriation entirely. There has been a fire there. Those poor wretches there—and I call them "poor wretches" because of the condition in which they find themselves now—are living in tents and stables, and places of that kind. The Senator was able to put this estoppel over a year ago, when the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs was Senator Wadsworth, of New York. Senator Wadsworth was disappointed when he left this body because the effort had been successful for the time being in blocking the commencement of the building for a military post on Governors Island.

Since the point of order I have made has been overruled, I shall ask the Senate to vote on the question, and let us have a yea-and-nay vote and settle the matter.

In my opinion, we are putting it beyond our power ever to accomplish what the Army wants. It is all right to say what the Secretary of War may state, but I have talked to all those people, and without discounting or disputing anything the Senator says, I do not know of any such necessity as he sets forth. The authorities are willing, probably, if they find room there, to have an airport, but we should not undertake to determine that that post shall be dwarfed so much that it may be a little knob on the corner of the island, the balance of it to be used for airplanes, when New York can provide room enough for flying ships to land. But there is but one Governors Island in the world like that one there, there is but one city situated as New York is situated there, and which so needs the military right there. As I say, they are the teeth of the city.

Mr. President, it seems to me that to be enthusiastic is a great gift for a man. I used to think I was enthusiastic myself, but it ran away with me sometimes, and I have found that it would be better if we should move a little more slowly. There will be plenty of time to take this matter up after we have commenced to build, but this is no time for us to be won over to a proposition which really means no post at that point.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I rise with mingled feelings. I have never been convinced that Governors Island is an appropriate place for an air port, but I find there are many persons qualified to speak who feel that it is a proper place. In view of this difference of opinion, I think it would be a great mistake for the Senate to enact any sort of legislation which would prohibit the use of the island for this purpose if it is found ultimately to be a desirable place.

It must be recalled that New York geographically and topographically is a peculiar community. In order to find an open space where airships can land it is necessary to go a long distance, many miles, perhaps 25 or 30 miles from the center of the city. Now, here is a place near to the heart of the city, apparently capable of enlargement and possibly such enlargement as to make it a suitable place for an air port.

As I said, I am not fully convinced of the wisdom of the plan. It is for that reason that I asked the Senator from Connecticut to strike out the word "ultimate," as if it were a determined and settled thing, and to substitute the adjective "possible."

I may say to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], whom we all love, that I always feel guilty, as if there were something wrong with me, when I am in opposition to him.

However, we should not perform an act that may interfere with construction on that island. Certainly I do not want to do so. But we have the assurance of the Senator from Connecticut, and my own knowledge of the island would make me indorse what he has said, that the construction can go on elsewhere and be almost as favorably situated. Many times we see construction carried out in an inappropriate way, as happened in the case of the McKinley High School in this city. But if the warning is given to our friends in the Army that there must be some rearrangement of the buildings, there will be found a way. If it shall be determined ultimately that this is the place for the airport, it would be a shame for us to have spent millions of dollars upon construction which would have to be torn down to make available that land as an airport in the future.

I trust the Senate will see fit to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, this question came up last year. The then Senator from New York, Mr. Wadsworth, stated the position of the War Department at that time. I do not know that the War Department has changed its mind on the subject since then. As a matter of fact, I find that General Cheatham, when asked by the House Appropriations Committee what the position of the Army was, stated that the War Department did not agree to the use of Governors Island as an air port. At page 518 of the House hearings the chairman said to him:

It has been stated that Governors Island ought to be used for an aviation base, a landing field?

General CHEATHAM. The War Department does not agree to that, as I understand it. The area is too restricted.

I do not like to disagree with anything that my friend from Connecticut says because I believe that his advice on aviation matters is of infinite value to the Senate and to the country. I disagree with him with diffidence. But it must be obvious, Mr. President, that if we are to place a regiment of infantry on Governors Island—and that is the intention—we can not coop that regiment up in a building on the island without a parade ground, without space devoted to the exercise and the training of those troops. It would be an impossible thing to restrict the troops to the buildings and leave the vacant ground for the use of the municipality as an airport. That situation could not exist.

As for the necessity for troops being there, I think we must all recognize that within a mile of Governors Island is probably the greatest amount of wealth ever assembled in any spot on the globe at any time in history. To have that additional safeguard there against riot or to preserve order in case of a great conflagration or earthquake or some such calamity seems to the War Department a matter of very necessary precaution.

As I said, much as I hesitate to disagree with my friend from Connecticut, I am going to vote against his amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] whom we all love and respect, has said, this is not the first time I have had something to do with the Governors Island project. In former sessions I tried my best to do what I could to carry out the recommendations of the select committee of the House of Representatives on the United States air services. They recommended that Governors Island be set apart as a great air port. At the present time I am not assuming that position, although it is only fair to say that all of our great authorities on aviation, particularly the Assistant Secretaries appointed to take care of Government aviation, except the one immediately connected with the War Department, agree that there is probably no bit of land in the world more important for the development of that commercial aviation which we hope will go forward, with the enthusiastic backing that it has received since Colonel Lindbergh made his famous flight, which would do more to aid the progress of commercial aviation than Governors Island, which is only a few moments from the financial district of New York. There are other places which could easily be used for troops. Bedloes Island, for instance, is practically as near and, although a small island, a regiment could be housed there.

But I am not asking that that question be decided to-day. I am merely asking that the Senate provide some way of waiting until this committee of experts, this fact-finding committee, shall make its report and give us a chance to see what they think about it. If they say Governors Island is not needed, I will submit. But if we go ahead and appropriate the money in such a way that one or two million dollars may be spent to build a great building right in the middle of the area needed, as I believe, for a landing field, I believe we shall all live to regret it. When the day comes, as I believe it will, when we come to a really true appreciation of the importance of having a landing field as near to the heart of New York City as is Governors Island, and there is no other that I can see that compares with it for a moment, we shall then see that if we have spent one or two million dollars for beautiful buildings right in the middle of that field we will be told we can not destroy that amount of the people's money so quickly. I am merely asking that the matter of a permanent barracks on Governors Island, which has been hanging fire for a great many years, back to the days of Secretary of War Root and Secretary of War Taft, shall be postponed for a short time until we get the decision of the experts, and not at all that the matter be decided finally to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRATTON obtained the floor.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming yet been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not. The question is on the amendment offered on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Are all the committee amendments disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes they are.

Mr. BRATTON. I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, following line 29, add the following:

For personal services and traveling and other expenses necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to determine the property loss by flood sustained by certain property owners residing at or in the vicinity of Hatch and Santa Teresa, N. Mex., in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 25, 1927 (44 Stat. L. 1792, private, No. 396, 69th Cong.), $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended from the reclamation fund.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. My understanding is that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] offered an amendment and it was accepted, but the understanding was that the amendment would be again considered after the other amendments were acted upon. If my understanding is correct, it would now be proper to consider the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was referring to a different amendment. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I could not hear the Senator from Alabama. Let me say that as to the amendment to which the Senator from Alabama was referring, relating to four hundred thousand and odd dollars to be paid to Indian tribes, it was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, but when the bill gets into the Senate I shall ask for a separate vote upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. I send to the clerk's desk another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 39, line 3, add the following:

Additional land for Jicarilla Reservation, N. Mex. (tribal funds): For purchase of certain lands and appurtenances thereto situated within the exterior boundaries of the Jicarilla Reservation, N. Mex., as authorized by the act of February 12, 1927, $10,000, payable from funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Jicarilla Indians (act Feb. 12, 1927, vol. 44, p. 1089), $10,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I desire to make an explanation of the item for the benefit of the Senator from Wyoming. The item was authorized by a statute enacted at the last session——

Mr. WARREN. We have no authority before us for it, I wish to say to the Senator from New Mexico, and I am rather astonished that he offers it. The Indian appropriation bill will be before the Senate very soon, and his amendment can be offered then. It is in no wise permissible in the particular bill now before us.

Mr. BRATTON. If the Senator from Wyoming will allow me to make an explanation of the item, I think he will withdraw the objection.

The item was proposed and is in the report of the Budget which was transmitted by the President and is now before the Senate. It comes out of the tribal funds of the Indians now on deposit in the Treasury and not the general fund. This transaction was agreed to more than two years ago, and this item was in the deficiency bill which failed in the closing days of the last session. It is purely a matter of tribal funds of the Indians. The item has been approved by the department; the expenditure is authorized; is in the Budget, and, I think, the point of order is not well taken under the rule.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I insist upon the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds the point of order to be not well taken.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to say, if I may, that the amendment is obnoxious to the rule on the ground alone, if on no other, that it never was presented to the committee for consideration. I supposed I had brought to the attention of the Chair sufficient reasons to indicate why the amendment should not be allowed to go on this bill. The point of order can be made against it on several grounds. It was not printed; it was not presented one day in advance of being offered on the floor; it never has been to the committee, and the committee has no information that it has ever been estimated for or recommended by the Budget; and certainly there is no law authorizing it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico state that this item was estimated for in the Budget?

Mr. BRATTON. The language that is in the item was taken from the Budget at page 490.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say to the Senator that what he says about the necessity for the amendment may be all true, but the amendment has no place on this bill; it has not been recommended that it be placed on this bill; and if we are to open that door in connection with deficiency bills, which under the rules are to care for a shortage in previous appropriations, and to make appropriations that are necessary to complete the work of the year, I would have to stand here all night or probably the remainder of the week speaking in regard to amendments that might be offered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico could properly be offered during the consideration of a later bill, such as the bill making appropriations for this Interior Department, which provides the funds for the Indian Bureau, but I ask the Senator, and I ask the Senate, to treat this bill as the rules require that a deficiency bill should be treated, and permit only such items to be placed in it as can properly be included within its pages.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from New Mexico that while the Budget does recommend the item covered by the amendment it really belongs to the Interior Department appropriation bill. I shall have that bill in charge, and I assure the Senator that if it is possible to put it on that bill I shall be glad to assist him and shall recommend that it be done with all the power I have. I think, however, that the item should be attached to the bill to which it properly belongs, namely, that providing appropriations for the Interior Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule upon which the Chair has acted in holding this amendment in order is Rule XVI, which provides:

* * * and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill—

And so forth—

unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

The Chair would hold that the item covered by the amendment presented by the Senator from New Mexico is in the Budget and the amendment is to carry out a project in pursuance of an estimate made according to law.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to call the Chair's attention to the provisions of the rule with regard to the treatment of appropriation bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair bases his ruling upon Rule XVI, which provides that if an amendment is moved by direction of a standing or select committee or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law, then it is in order. This is an amendment proposed pursuant to an estimate in the Budget.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, perhaps I have not made myself clear as to the rule to which I referred. It is one of the standing rules of the Senate, however, that in the treatment of appropriation bills amendments shall be first presented and printed and shall be before the committee at least one day before being considered. Hence, I say that under that provision of the rules alone the amendment is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct with reference to all amendments except, as the rule provides, those that are proposed in pursuance to an estimate submitted in accordance with law. This estimate was submitted in accordance with law and is in the Budget message. The rule makes an exception to amendments of that nature.

Mr. WARREN. If this were a bill making appropriations for the Navy, would the Senator wish to attach to it an amendment providing for some irrigation plan because it had been estimated for in the Budget? The reference which the Chair makes to the Budget, of course, is correct, but that does not make the amendment in order on the pending bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to the fact that the Budget has estimated for this item for the year 1929? The pending deficiency bill, however, has reference to appropriations for 1928. The item in the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico is not a deficiency, but it is in the Budget, which, as I have said, has estimated for it for the year 1929. I hope the Senator will withdraw the amendment, and when the Interior Department appropriation bill comes up this item may properly be presented to that bill making appropriations for 1929.

Mr. BRATTON. The pending bill is important, and in order to stop debate I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has sent an amendment to the desk, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, For the reimbursement of local levee boards for funds contributed by them on emergency work on the lower Mississippi River on account of the flood of 1927, $1,323,073.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I sent this amendment to the desk a few moments ago, but I am not now going to press it, because the Committee on Appropriations did not have before it the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, and they have been very generous to us. I am quite sure, however, that when the Committee on Appropriations go into this matter they will find that this appropriation should be carried in the next appropriation bill. So I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I shall say to the Senator that there was no unkindly feeling in any way.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that.

Mr. WARREN. But it was a matter of order under the rule. It was not permissible to consider the amendment on this bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I will withdraw the amendment in the hope that we may get it on the next bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is withdrawn.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, but before I do that I wish to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if he intends to continue the session until we dispose of the bill? I ask that because I have been waiting patiently here for about four hours to offer the amendment, but have yielded to the convenience of other Senators.

Mr. WARREN. My disposition, of course, is to give the Senator time to offer the amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Ohio appreciates that courtesy; he thinks he can offer the amendment inasmuch as he has the floor, but he wants to know whether the Senator intends to go on and finish the bill to-night. I desire to make some brief observations about my amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I hope that we may finish the bill to-night, because certainly the people who have been waiting nine months for their salaries, or for what may be due them on account of merchandise supplied, or for other reasons, ought not to be kept waiting longer. We ought to finish the bill and provide for the payment of all such necessary items.

Mr. WILLIS. I am perfectly willing to proceed, and I hope I may have the attention of Senators, as I think this a matter of some importance. On page 50 I move to strike out lines 3 to 13, inclusive. The matter proposed to be stricken out is as follows:

United States Industrial Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio: Not to exceed $100,000 of the appropriation "United States Industrial Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio, 1927," shall remain available until June 30, 1929, to enable the Attorney General to furnish the necessary material, supplies, and equipment, and to defray such other expenses as may be necessary to provide adequate facilities for the employment of prisoners and the development of the institution in accordance with the act entitled "An act for the establishment of a United States Industrial Reformatory," approved January 7, 1925.

I shall explain as briefly as I can why I offer the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that I do not wish to cut him off from debating his amendment, but I shall be compelled to make the point of order against it because it is legislation and the amendment does not come to us in the regular way? Of course, I can state the reasons for my point of order later.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, if the point of order is made, I shall discuss that, but the amendment which I shall propose is not subject to the point of order. I am willing to discuss that matter, however, for it certainly can not be out of order to move to strike out lines of the bill. I move to strike out from line 3 to line 13, inclusive, on page 50 of the bill. The first reason I am moving so to do is because of the important and far-reaching matter involved in those lines, contemplating as the language does indirectly a change in the attitude of this Government with reference to the conduct of its business. There has never been, either in the body at the other end of the Capitol or here, before a committee an opportunity for the people most directly interested in this matter to be heard. I have here requests from a large number of constituents, honorable men representing labor organizations, representing employers of labor, asking for an opportunity to be heard upon this proposition. They had no hearing at the other end of the Capitol; they had no hearing here.

I shall undertake to show that there is a very serious proposition involved, contemplating as it does the establishment of the policy that this Government shall engage further in business.

So far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of the Government of the United States invading the field of private enterprise. We are told on other important questions that the Government ought to get out of business; we are told, for example, that at Muscle Shoals we shall junk the plant there or do almost anything in order that the Government shall get out of business; we are told, touching the merchant marine, that there must not be any replacements and that the Government must get out of business; and yet here, carefully guarded and camouflaged in this language, is a proposition to commit the Government of the United States to the very idea of engaging in business.

In order to show how that has been developed, I wish to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This matter was very fully discussed in the other House, although, as I have stated, there was no hearing. I am referring to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 4941, under date of February 26, 1927. The amendment, when it was then before the body at the other end of the Capitol, read in this fashion, and I invite the attention of Senators to it:

United States Industrial Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio: Not to exceed $100,000 of the appropriation "United States Industrial Reformatory, Chillicothe, Ohio, 1927," shall remain available until June 30, 1928, for the erection of dryers, kilns, and other buildings, purchase and installation of machinery, supplies, and equipment, and all other expenses necessary and incident to the construction of a plant to manufacture brick—to be used in constructing such reformatory and other Federal buildings.

Note this:

I assert that when this idea was brought before the body at the other end of the Capitol it was openly asserted and claimed and admitted that the proposal was not merely to manufacture bricks to be used in the construction of buildings and other structures at the institution named, but that was to be a permanent plant and that they were to manufacture brick for the use of the Government of the United States. These brick were to be shipped so far as freight rates would permit them to be shipped.

I beg of Senators to consider the situation by which they will be confronted and to be advised whether they are in favor of that; whether they are in favor of a situation that will thereby be created, whereby when a new Federal post office shall be erected in their State they can point with pride to the fact that it has been constructed out of brick that have been made by convict labor in some public institution.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator properly refers to what was said in the other House, but he fails to refer to what was said by others along different lines.

Mr. WILLIS. I am going to read more, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the Senator from Ohio to believe, as coming from me, that I do not propose to consent to any amendment to put the Government into business anywhere. I merely desire to suggest that those poor unfortunates who are in the penitentiary should have something to do sufficient to enable them properly to digest their food, so that they may be reformed if there can be any reformation in them, and so that they may be kept in the best condition that can be afforded them for life and health.

The Senator knows, because he is a hard-working man, that men must work hard if they are going to enjoy health or are going to be happy. Those men confined there, unless they have some work, are very unhappy, very miserable. I believe it is our duty to reform along proper lines, as I said before, all of those unfortunate prisoners so far as we can. On the other hand, I believe we should restrict this provision so that not a brick shall be sold, and so that the bricks can be used only in the penitentiary buildings in the different localities—the penitentiary itself or the connecting buildings.

Mr. WILLIS. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment providing that the bricks to be manufactured at the reformatory should be used only in that institution?

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator knows more about penitentiaries than I do.

Mr. WILLIS. I question that.

Mr. WARREN. As to using the bricks at one institution, there may be a good many little buildings that are connected in a way and yet are separate buildings; but, if I can do so in order, I should not object to an amendment that would carry out the very idea that the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee expressed in the House in his debate, near where the Senator is reading, where he was very vehement in his idea that this brick should be for the use of penitentiary buildings only, and nothing else.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, of course, I would believe any statement that the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Wyoming, might make. I should want also to express the fullest sympathy with the humanitarian sentiments which he has expressed, and I fully absolve him from any purpose in the world to camouflage this proposition; but I still maintain that as the matter has come to us it is difficult to escape the conclusion I have stated. That was the way the amendment stood as it was offered. I repeat the language. It read:

> The construction of a plant to manufacture brick to be used in constructing such reformatory and other Federal buildings.

A point of order was made in the other body.

Mr. WARREN. Of course that is in the RECORD but not in the appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I am coming to that, if the Senator will be patient with me.

A point of order was made in the body at the other end of the Capitol as to that form of language, and the point of order was sustained. Then able parliamentarians drafted another amendment to escape the objection that had been made when the point of order was raised, and that amendment is the amendment that appears in this bill exactly, word for word.

Yet it was said by these same gentlemen, who evidently knew what they were doing and what they had written, that this proposition would permit not only the making of brick to be used in the building of this institution but the sale of these bricks to other departments of the Government to be used in constructing other buildings.

Now we are told that we must consider the humane side of this matter. Very well. I know something about the situation. These persons who are at Chillicothe are not in any very difficult situation. If you will go into the city of Chillicothe at this hour you will find some of them riding about in automobiles. You will find some of them at mealtime in the restaurants down town eating their meals along with other people. They are not in as difficult a situation as are the families of the men who heretofore have had employment in the brick plants of our State.

The State of Ohio leads in clay products. I have stacks of telegrams and letters here calling attention to the fact that in many sections of the State 75 per cent of the brick plants are idle, the men without work, their families without provisions; and yet we hear much about the humanitarian sentiments that we must lavish upon these strong young men who happen to be in the reformatory. We hear nothing about the men who are out of jobs, nor about their hungry families.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to read a few words?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Then I am willing, if I may be permitted, to withdraw the point of order.

When this matter came up on the other side Mr. MADDEN said:

> I am citing this preliminary to my answer to the gentleman's question. We found we had to do something to house the people that were incarcerated at the place. There were nothing but temporary war buildings there and we had to construct new buildings. We had to find employment for the men who were incarcerated. There were about 120 men there a year or so ago and there are now 375 men there.

Apparently the morals of Ohio are deteriorating.

Mr. FESS. These delinquents come from all over the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Most of those came from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. We are glad you took them.

Further, Mr. MADDEN said:

> They will go crazy if we do not give them something to do.
>
> Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman if it is contemplated that the brick to be manufactured in this plant shall be used at this institution?
> Mr. MADDEN. Only.
> Mr. LANHAM. Only; and not put in competition with outside brick manufacturing?
> Mr. MADDEN. That is it. It is a humanitarian proposition.

As I said before, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, I do not believe this item should be stricken out. I will oppose it on a vote; but, so far as I can, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, it perhaps would not be proper to go into an analysis of arguments that were made by Members of the other body, no matter how distinguished they might be. I may say, however, since the name of one distinguished leader of the House has been mentioned, that if you will read right on in the RECORD it will be found that two others perhaps equally distinguished took exactly the contrary view, and argued as I have been arguing, only they argued with very much more ability, that if the proposition were adopted which is now proposed by the committee the very thing could be done which I have pointed out. So there was at least a difference of opinion; but let us see what they said in the hearings. That is rather interesting. I quote, from page 823 of the hearings upon this bill, part of the statement of Mr. Conner. He said:

> I just figured far enough to get up to 7,500,000 brick, because when you get 7,500,000 brick then you have justified the building of this brick plant. It will pay for itself if you use that many brick.

That is the statement of Mr. Conner, who is in favor of this proposition.

Mr. WOOD, of Indiana, a distinguished leader, says:

> If it can be run as advantageously as that, why would it not be a good scheme to keep on making brick? We have demands for brick in the Government departments.
> Mr. CONNER.—

He is the superintendent—

> We intend to do that. After we get the brick that we need ourselves, of course we would be delighted to sell it to as many departments as we can.

Let us not deceive ourselves about this matter. If the Senate wants to do this thing, if it wants to put the Government further in business, let it do it; but let us not deceive ourselves. If there is any doubt about it, let us see what the committee report itself says.

I am reading from the House report, at page 10, just a sentence. This is the report of the committee which we are told wanted to construct a plant just so that they might make a few brick to be used in building these buildings. The committee say:

After the completion of construction work at the reformatory, brick could then be sold to other branches of the Government.

Mr. President, I do not believe in putting the Government in business. I do not believe in invading the field of private enterprise.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BROOKHART. Does not the Senator believe enough in his Government to think it can transact business honestly once in a while?

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, yes; I believe in my Government pretty thoroughly.

Mr. BROOKHART. The remarks of the Senator indicate that he has no such confidence.

Mr. WILLIS. No; the Senator is not authorized to draw that conclusion. I have great confidence in my Government; but I do not desire that the Government of the United States shall invade the field of private enterprise and kill individual initiative, the thing that has made possible the development of the business of this country.

Take this very situation in the State of Ohio and in the other States.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIS. Just a minute. These employees, the men that work in these plants, live there and pay taxes there. You are saying to them, "Very well; we will take of your substance and construct a plant to operate in opposition to you, where the overhead and the initial expenditure will not be counted at all"; and it was not counted by the committee. The committee said, "Why, we can make brick here for $5 a thousand"; but they admitted upon inquiry that in making that statement they did not take into consideration at all the capital investment, nor did they make any allowance for sinking fund. They just charged that all up to the taxpayer, of course. That is the way these socialistic schemes are generally planned out.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. FESS. There is a movement in many of the States to employ convict labor to produce certain articles that are used in the institution. That has gotten to the point where some of those articles are being sold outside to such an extent that there has been an effort to pass Federal legislation against convict labor.

My only fear in this proposal is, while I have sympathy for the purpose that is in view here, that there is a door open that ultimately may put the Government in the production business, to sell its own products even in the open market. I think that would be quite serious; and while I have great sympathy with the humanitarian purpose that is involved here, and would, if I could limit it to that, vote for it, I am inclined to vote with my colleague on striking out the item.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, I think the facts amply justify the position of my colleague.

I beg the pardon of my friend from Florida. I should have yielded to him before.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I just wanted to ask the Senator if he did not think the worst feature of this proposition was that of having convict labor utilized in manufacturing or other private business in competition with open, free labor, and private enterprise?

Mr. WILLIS. Why, absolutely.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is what this seems to contemplate, as I understand.

Mr. WILLIS. That is what it does contemplate. There is no question in the world that that is exactly what it will lead to; and then there is another objection.

We are talking about the men in this institution. There are 2,000 acres of land owned by the Government there, as good land as ever lay outdoors, Mr. President. If it is desired that these men should work more—and I can readily conceive that they could very well work more, as I have observed the institution—let them work at the best place for any man to work on this earth, and that is on the farm, instead of taking $100,000 of the taxpayers' money with which to buy machinery.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if he thinks that everybody else ought to be protected from competition but not the farmer?

Mr. WILLIS. No; but I think there is quite a difference in this situation, because the Government of the United States already has there a 2,000-acre farm of the best land the Senator ever saw. He never saw any land like that in Nebraska. My judgment is that these citizens in Nebraska who have come temporarily to live with us in Ohio ought to have the privilege of tilling that 2,000-acre farm, and then they can go back to Nebraska and teach the Senator's constituents better about farming.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I think that diagnosticians who have investigated agriculture's plight have all concluded that fundamentally the trouble is that the farmer is the victim of unrestricted competition, whereas everybody else is eliminating competition for the insurance of profit. Here it is proposed to protect others from competition in industrial lines and put these convicts to work tilling the ground and competing with the farmers. Why will we not think somewhat of the farmer in the United States Senate?

Mr. WILLIS. The Government now owns the land. Would the Senator be in favor of selling that land? Is he opposed to these men working upon this farm which the Government already owns?

Mr. President, we can not at this late hour go into this general question of how we are to handle convict labor, but what I am trying to say to the Senate is that without hearing and in this form I do not believe we ought to commit the United States to another line of business activity, and particularly when it is not such a line of activity as is of benefit to these delinquents. Most of them are young men, and they are there for only a short period. That is only a stepping stone on the way out. They are there only six months. They can not be sent there until they are eligible to parole. The purpose is to teach them some useful trade, to educate them, to help them get hold of themselves. Let anybody explain, anywhere, how the establishment of expensive machinery to make brick is going to be of any help to these men.

Oh, no, Mr. President; it is simply a device to put the Government into business, and I am opposed to it.

I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD certain telegrams which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegrams referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1927.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Senate Office Building:

Business interests of Ohio urgently request hearing on House bill 17291, known as second deficiency bill, under which the Government, through its penal institutions, would enter into the manufacture of brick.

Re: House bill 17291.
Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Care of United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILLIS:

* * * * * * *

If you are familiar with the clay industry in the State of Ohio you will readily recognize what it means to this State to have another brick plant in operation, and especially one operated by the Government with prison labor. Fully 75 per cent of the brick plants in this State are at the present time either closed down because of surplus stocks or are about to close down on account of the fact that the industry is overcrowded.

* * * * * * *

The brick industry in this State has millions of dollars invested and gives employment, not only to a great number of men on their own plants, but practically all of the plants in this State use coal and other supplies furnished from factories in the State of Ohio. To further handicap the brick industry in this State would also work a detriment to as many people outside of the brick industry who are dependent on us for the purchasing of their material.

* * * * * * *

Yours sincerely,

HYDRAULIC-PRESS BRICK COMPANY,
GEORGE C. EARLE, Manager.

SUGARCREEK, OHIO, November 29, 1927.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Senate will be asked to act on House bill 17291, known as the second deficiency appropriation bill, which passed the House at the last session of Congress. This bill no doubt will be introduced into the Senate some time next month. The bill, as you probably know, is calling for an appropriation of $100,000 to erect a brick plant at the United States Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio. The appropriation occupies an inconspicuous place in the wording of the bill, and every Senator should pay close attention to its readings.

As brick manufacturers, we are opposed to the passage of this bill for the reason that it will throw upon the market an additional tonnage of brick by prison labor. There is already an overproduction of both face brick and common brick in the United States and particularly in the State of Ohio.

We are therefore protesting against the passage of this bill for the reason that we are employing at the present time approximately 200 men at our brick factory and are endeavoring to obtain sufficient business to keep these individuals and their families from going to the poorhouse. Hoping that we can count on you to use your influence as well as your vote to defeat this bill.

Very sincerely yours,

THE FINZER BROS. CLAY CO.,
Per R. C. BAHLER, Sales Manager.

The VICE PRESIDENT: The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I wish to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 21, on page 90, strike out "$5,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,500,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I shall make a point of order against that amendment. It would increase the amount to almost double what the committee recommended and what was recommended by the Budget.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOWELL. Did I understand that the Vice President ruled upon the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair upheld the point of order.

Mr. HOWELL. I would like to make a statement which I believe will render it clear that my amendment is not subject to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be glad to hear any remarks on the point of order.

Mr. HOWELL. In the rivers and harbors bill adopted last year there was authorized the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal, for the sum of $11,500,000.

The canal company has bonds outstanding amounting to about $6,000,000, bearing 5 per cent interest, and under the contract if these bonds are not paid they become Government bonds, practically, and will be worth 125 in the market.

The purchase of this canal has been authorized. Now, the question arises as to the manner of payment, and it seems to me that a point of order does not properly lie against an amendment which provides for supplying all the money necessary, not merely to pay for the equity, but also to take up the bonds.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. We acted upon the suggestion the Senator has made as to the deficiency bill a year ago, and the matter has been looked up since. Of course, the Government should not be called upon to pay this additional money to anybody anywhere until it can get clear title, and the Senator is not able to say that if we appropriate that $5,500,000 we can immediately procure a clear title.

The Senator does speak of the contract under which one side asserts that it could obtain 95 per cent; but I am not one of those who is going to involve this Government in even 5 per cent of eleven or twelve million dollars. Therefore I say we should leave that until some later day, when money can be in hand and title clear.

Probably the State of Massachusetts might better have taken this responsibility—in fact, it did take it up first. Perhaps it would have been better if the Government had left it there, but when the Government officials believed that the mortgage that is on the property is one that can be in time extinguished, and they put their money in for the first half, as they are doing, it is little to ask that we wait until we have a clear title before the balance is paid.

The assertion that the bonds become United States bonds hardly holds true. It may be that they may have the value of United States bonds. The Government may lose something, but it will be dollars and cents, and not so much as it might lose in a percentage with all the costs, and so forth, that might follow under the reservation which the Senator must admit is in the contract.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As to the point of order, the Chair would like to say that if the amendment is for the purpose of carrying out the Cape Cod Canal purchase act, it would be in order.

Mr. PHIPPS. May I read from the hearings held by the House committee? They are very brief.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, have I not the floor?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. We have had the item for the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal with us for a long time. Last spring this item of $5,500,000 was estimated as the amount of the principal due, without the payment of the bonds and without any interest.

General DEAKYNE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And there is no interest submitted in the provision made here, or provision for the payment of bonds, or anything of that sort?

General DEAKYNE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Senate put on an item of $6,000,000 for the payment of bonds and for rights of way. The item comes back to us as it went away from us last spring, without any additions.

Major ROBINS. I understand that the Treasury Department will submit an estimate to cover the cost of bonds and interest.

The CHAIRMAN. We will not pay any interest. There is no need to worry about this, because the transaction is not complete. We can not pay the money until the title is complete and there can not be any interest paid. This contract is only complete when the appropriation is made. That is the law. They tried to put on $1,500,000 interest last spring. They provided for that in the rivers and harbors bill, but we made them strike it out, and if anybody tries to do it now, we will not be very friendly to it. Does anybody here know whether the title has been examined?

Mr. WOOD. I know it has not been. There are 140 pieces of real estate involved in it.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, as I have previously stated, under the terms of the rivers and harbors bill, adopted at the last session of Congress, it was provided that a contract for the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal and the payment of $11,500,000 therefor should be executed by the Secretary of War. Of course, upon the completion of that contract $11,500,000 becomes due. However, as stated, the canal company has outstanding $6,000,000 of bonds, bearing 5 per cent interest, that do not fall due until 1960. Subtracting the $6,000,000 from $11,500,000, there remains a payment due, on account of the equity, of $5,500,000, which is appropriated in this bill. Certainly we would not pay this $5,500,000 until we were afforded a clear title to the canal, subject, of course, to the mortgage, but the instant the equity is deeded and the title passes, then the Government becomes liable for the payment of 5 per cent interest upon the $6,000,000 of bonds until they are paid.

The Government is to-day borrowing money at 3¼ per cent. The difference is 1¾ per cent. In other words, the difference in interest that the Government will have to pay if it borrows the money at 3¼ per cent, or continues to pay 5 per cent upon these bonds, is about $100,000 a year, and for the remaining period of the mortgage would total some $3,200,000.

Under the circumstances, therefore, should we not provide for the payment of these bonds the instant we secure title to the canal and pay that $5,500,000? The contract of sale provides for this, or for the retirement of at least 95 per cent of the bonds at the option of the Government. In other words, that they will deliver $5,700,000 of these bonds for payment upon demand.

Naturally, the owners of the canal, who hold 98 per cent of the bonds, would prefer to keep these 5 per cent securities, which, under the terms of the contract of sale are to become a liability of the United States Government, and therefore would be practically equal and equivalent to United States bonds worth about 125 in the market to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Suppose we passed the bill in the form in which it comes from the committee, appropriating $5,000,000. Would there be any inhibition against the Government next year, or before we adjourn this session, making a further appropriation to take up all of the bonds, and thus save the $100,000 a year in interest which the Senator says we would be compelled to pay if we do not take the bonds up?

Mr. HOWELL. The United States might later appropriate the $6,000,000, but under the provisions of the contract of sale, the Secretary of War must advertise a call for the bonds 10 days at least 6 months prior to date of retirement; that means a loss of $50,000 alone.

What I am fearful of is this, that prompt arrangement will not be made for the payment of this $6,000,000 in bonds, and therefore that the interest will accrue year after year, as these people want to keep these securities in their hands. There is indeed danger of this as they have been able, through their lobby, to compel the United States Government to pay $11,500,000 for a commercial enterprise that did not earn 6 per cent upon $1,800,000 last year.

Therefore I think we ought to dispose of this matter at once and make the $6,000,000 available, so that immediately when this bill becomes a law the Secretary of War can make publication, before the first of the year and end the interest upon at least $5,700,000 of the bonds by the 1st of July next. Is not that business?

I trust therefore, Mr. President, that we may adopt this amendment, a purely business proposition. I also would call attention to the fact that this $11,500,000 was in the appropriation bill that failed last year. Why should we reduce it by $6,000,000 now?

Mr. WARREN. Because we have information now that we did not have before. That is why it is cut out.

Mr. KING. What is the information?

Mr. WARREN. I have already stated it. If it is desired to have me state it again I will do so.

We find, in the first place, that we can not reach all of them, as I said, and we do not know that we can reach as many as the Senator thinks we can. But even in the Senator's enthusiasm he states that we can reach only 95 per cent of them. Then comes, for instance, the statement of the witnesses on the other side which, so far as I have investigated I believe, is true, that there are 300 or 400 matters still not settled relating to real estate abutting upon the canal and the right of way.

Mr. HOWELL. It must be evident that under the terms of the contract of sale, if they fail to furnish the bonds, the interest would stop.

Mr. WARREN. The men who own the bonds are under obligation to clean up the charges, not only the 5 per cent but otherwise, before the Government should be expected to pay and before they should receive payment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is there any infirmity in the title to the land upon which the canal has been constructed?

Mr. HOWELL. I do not know as to the title. It is said there are a number of pieces of property of which the titles must be examined.

Mr. KING. If there is any infirmity of title we ought not to pay the $5,500,000. If the infirmity of title referred to by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is merely the possibility of not getting all of the 100 per cent of outstanding bonds quickly, that is not an infirmity of title at all, because we could make the tender to the company for all of the bonds, and those holding bonds who fail to produce them and to take their money would at once cease to draw any interest.

Therefore the point made by the Senator, it seems to me, vanishes if the title merely relates to the fact that we could not get the 100 per cent bonds in at once. The position which they take is not tenable at all. We could make the tender and stop the interest; but, of course, if the real-estate title to the canal itself is defective or invalid, then I would not be in favor of appropriating a single dollar until the title has been made good, unless the contract would stop the interest and compel them to make a good title. Then we could make the tender of the whole $11,500,000 and stop the interest, and say, "When you perfect the title, then the entire amount of money will be paid over."

Mr. HOWELL. It must be evident that unless the Government conducts its business in a manner that would not be approved by any business man, the $5,500,000 will not be paid until we have a clear title, subject to the outstanding bonds; and when it is paid ought we not to be ready immediately to retire the $6,000,000 of the bonds and stop the 5 per cent interest? There is no question respecting the business features of this transaction and how we should proceed. Of course, the canal company may have to go into the market and buy some of these bonds at a premium in order to make delivery as agreed. This they do not want to do, and hence are here trying to stave off surrendering the bonds. There is no question as to what we should do. We should place this credit at the disposal of the Secretary of War so that he can stop this interest as soon as possible. I trust the amendment will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is in order provided the amendment is for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of existing law. The Chair is a little in doubt as to what are the provisions of the law, and must know in order to determine whether the amendment is proper.

Mr. WARREN. That amounts to nothing, because surely I would not ask it if that were the fact. I would like to have a vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment on page 41, an item for an Indian reservation in North Dakota, which was in the second deficiency bill reported to the Senate on March 2 last and was left out of the pending bill. It is an item for money that is needed there by the Indian Bureau to pay the Indians. There is no appropriation to take care of them at the present time, and they are being taken care of by the county, which can not well afford to do it. I wish to ask unanimous consent, although this may be subject to a point of order, that the amendment may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 41, after line 16, insert the following:

> Relief of distress among certain Indians: For the relief among the needy Indians of Turtle Mountain Band of North Dakota, fiscal years 1927 and 1928, $15,000.

Mr. WARREN. I should make the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota, and will make it unless there is unanimous consent. If the Senator can receive unanimous consent I will not make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the meaning of the language on page 80, line 13:

> Toward the construction of an extensible building, $1,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. It is in the bill and authorized.

Mr. COPELAND. But what is the meaning of it? Is it a building already begun?

Mr. WARREN. I understand that so far as this building is concerned this sum will not finish it. I do not believe it is anywhere near provided for in the money that is to be expended for the items under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, to the Senator from Wyoming a million dollars is not very much, but it struck me that a million dollars is a lot of money. I presumed this was a deficiency bill, but this appears to be a provision for a new building.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It comes under the title at the beginning of the paragraph, "Public building projects in the District of Columbia under section 5, public buildings act, approved May 25, 1926, as amended." These items are to carry out the provisions of that act.

Mr. COPELAND. I understand that, but a little while ago when the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] wanted to introduce an amendment providing for a new project it was stated that this bill is wholly to make up deficiencies. Is this item correctly placed here as a deficiency item?

Mr. WARREN. It is to complete a building already started that is very much needed in the service of the department.

Mr. COPELAND. Do not let the Senator misunderstand me. I have no objection to the completion of a building already started, but I had not been told until now that this is a building already started.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator has visited the Department of Agriculture, as I presume he has, he knows that the plan is to connect the two magnificent portions of the building which have already been constructed, and also to have some additions which will run as to length in the other direction. They have already commenced upon one section of their final construction which we hope some time during our lifetimes may be finished—that is to say, the Department of Agriculture headquarters.

Mr. COPELAND. May I say to the Senator that I am in fullest accord with him. I want to see it finished; but that is what we provide for in line 10:

Toward the construction of the central part of the administration building, $750,000.

Now, what is the "extensible building" provided for in line 13? Perhaps the building is lost. It may be the House that Jack Built, or something of that sort. Where is the building?

First may I ask the Senator a further question? I hold in my hand a report on the public buildings bill and find an estimate for new buildings in New York for $15,000,000. Where are those buildings?

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator knows and perhaps he does not know that there was an item for an appropriation of $19,000,000 which was before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate after having passed the House. It came up in the Senate during the celebrated filibuster which ended the consideration of the appropriation bill and in which I believe the Senator indulged.

Mr. COPELAND. I was present.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I think the Senator was present.

Mr. COPELAND. But not responsible, may I say? It was a Republican filibuster.

Mr. WARREN. That $19,000,000 was for buildings which were partly constructed, which were under way and were very much needed. I polled the committee, which is something I very much dislike to do and never do unless it is impossible to do otherwise. I did that while I occupied the floor in the Senate. I had the names of all the members of the committee, I think every one, and proposed, if we could do so, to have the amendment adopted. It was almost in the nature of a third deficiency bill. Many of those buildings, such as are quite far along in the matter of construction, were taken out from that bill and are included in the bill now before us in a sum amounting to something like $6,000,000. The balance of them must take the regular course. These are purely deficiencies, because here the buildings are partly done, and I know from experience that that is true, because a couple of them happen to be out in the West, with which I am personally acquainted. But the whole field of New York, Wyoming, and every other State is still open for the wish expressed through their representatives for more buildings and they will come in due time, possibly, but not in a deficiency bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will permit me, I was on the Public Buildings Committee last year, when the bill making appropriation for new construction and commencing new buildings was defeated on account of the filibuster.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator means a Republican filibuster.

Mr. SWANSON. The Republican filibuster, of course, conducted by two Senators rather than by the entire Republican side.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator alludes to the bill covering $160,000,000?

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the pending bill is limited to appropriations for deficiencies for buildings that have heretofore been authorized. For instance, a building costing $5,000,000 may have been authorized, and this year we appropriate $1,000,000, next year a million and a half, and so on. Items of that character are included in this deficiency bill. This bill, I hope, will be followed soon by a bill to be passed by the House and to come over here making appropriations to start new construction.

Mr. WARREN. I think such a bill will follow.

Mr. SWANSON. Such a bill will follow, which will include buildings in New York, and I hope will also include buildings for some cities in the State of Virginia that very much need buildings along with cities in New York, but such appropriations have never been included in a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia the meaning of the item on page 80, line 13, which reads:

Toward the construction of an extensible building, $1,000,000.

I have not as yet found out its meaning. Is that a new building?

Mr. SWANSON. I am not on the Appropriations Committee, but the committee of which I am a member, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, never did use any such expression in authorizing the construction of buildings. That committee is generally a little more definite than that.

Mr. COPELAND. If I can be assured by the chairman of the committee that the item is actually a deficiency item, I shall not have anything more to say; but I do want to ask him if we may hope that pretty soon there may be made an appropriation for these much-needed buildings in New York.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will allow me to ask the clerk to read from the page of the document which I send to the desk he will find that it relates to this very matter.

However, let me say to the Senator, first that I propose to do all I can not only for the $19,000,000 appropriation proposed last year, but for another bill carrying something like $160,000,000 that passed the other House but did not pass the Senate. I now send to the desk the statement made by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee on the House side. I think we have a right to know his position in regard to the matter. The statement is in a public document and sets forth how the chairman of that committee stands in reference to the subject.

Mr. COPELAND. I shall be glad to hear it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS APPROPRIATIONS

The failure of the public buildings appropriation bill has postponed for practically a year the entrance upon the program designed to relieve the congestion and inadequacy which exist in facilities of the Government for the transaction of the public business throughout the country. The bill contained approximately $20,000,000 for carrying on work under this program. In the bill herewith presented there is included $8,131,583.56 for public buildings. This sum includes $5,306,583.56 for the continuance of work on buildings authorized in 1913 (now under contract or ready to be placed under contract), $725,000 for four projects authorized prior to the enactment of the act of May 25, 1926, and $2,100,000 for work on buildings in the District of Columbia now under contract or ready to be placed under contract. The amount of $12,600,000, contained in the bill which failed, for new buildings under section 5 of the act of May 25, 1926, the $100,000,000 authorization, has been transferred in the same or slightly modified form to the 1929 Budget and will receive consideration in connection with the Treasury Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1929. This transfer, means little, if any, delay as between this bill and that.

Public buildings appropriations are immediately available under the general law, and as the annual Treasury bill will be brought up for early consideration the difference in time between the two bills should be only a matter of several months. The transfer of these projects from the deficiency bill to the regular annual bill will not cause further material delay in their ultimate consummation. The public buildings program has already been delayed nearly a year by the failure of these appropriations last spring and other new projects which would in the normal course of events be taking their turn now are also further postponed by that occurrence. This interruption in the program can not be remedied by an increase in annual appropriations. Under the general law not more than $25,000,000 can be expended in any one year no matter what the appropriations may be. The only remedy, therefore, for expedition in the program would be a change in the basic law to provide an increase in the annual rate of expenditure. It can not under any circumstances be remedied by increasing appropriations over and above those recommended in this bill and those to be carried in the annual Treasury Department bill.

On page 728 of the hearings will be found a tabular statement giving a comparison of the estimates submitted for the public buildings appropriation bill, which failed, with the estimates submitted for public buildings for this bill and those submitted for the regular 1929 bill and also a brief indication of any suggested changes in each set of estimates as compared with the items in the failed bill.

Mr. WARREN. I think that covers what I desire to have read.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, bear in mind that the material which was read into the RECORD was read at the request of the Senator from Wyoming. Now, I wish to say, in all solemnity, that it is a very strange thing that a committee brings forward an appropriation for a million dollars and nobody knows what it is all about. If a Democratic committee or a group of Democrats had brought in an item so ill considered as this, every Senator on the other side of the Chamber would find fault with the Democratic Party.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PHIPPS. I wish to say to the Senator that it would be impossible for him or any group of Senators to read carefully every one of the details of the estimates which must come through the regular channel of the various departments of the Government, which are passed upon by the Bureau of the Budget, and considered by the House committee after voluminous hearings, a copy of which the Senator has before him, and be familiar with every particular item that goes into the bill.

We must proceed on the assurance that these public buildings have been put into three separate classes. We first consider those for which money from earlier appropriations still remains available. We eke these out, thus enabling the department to go ahead and contract so that the buildings may be gotten under way immediately. We put into the preferred class a very few others that are urgently needed.

Mr. COPELAND. In this bill?

Mr. PHIPPS. In this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. For new buildings that are urgently needed?

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; the sum of $150,000, as I recall, is for buildings for the Government in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COPELAND. New buildings?

Mr. PHIPPS. Yes; new buildings.

Mr. COPELAND. Is that a deficiency?

Mr. PHIPPS. That is not entirely a deficiency, but it is stated clearly in the title of the bill that it is also to provide for supplemental estimates.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a deficiency, because we passed a law providing for these very buildings.

Mr. PHIPPS. They were authorized months ago.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I say I think this is the first time that I ever knew the clerk of the committee not to know on the suggestion being made what was meant by a particular item. He has looked up the matter, and says it is intended for a building for the Agricultural Department with which they are ready to proceed and the word "extensible" here means that it is a building that may be hereafter extended if it is desired to extend it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope I will at some time become so rich that a matter of the expenditure of a million dollars will be so unimportant to me that I will not care to know what is going to be done with it, but I am assured now that this item is to provide for the extension of the Agricultural Department buildings and therefore may be properly considered. I wish, however, to serve notice now on my friends in the Senate that we in New York City are entitled to have some new buildings, and very soon. I took occasion to emphasize the fact by pointing out that construction is authorized which is just as much new construction as would be the building of a post office in New York City. I think the Senate should bear in mind the needs not alone of the Agricultural Department—and I am for adequate buildings for that department; I have no doubt that the Agricultural Department can use a million-dollar building and use it for the good of the country, but we need buildings in New York also, and I trust that at the earliest possible moment there may be brought to the attention of the Senate a bill which will provide buildings for the city of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to a matter which has only just now been brought to my attention or brought to the attention of the commitee. On pages 69 and 70 of the bill, beginning in line 12, on page 69, there is a proviso regarding the refunding of taxes paid by manufacturers which makes it impossible for a manufacturer in the State of Connecticut—who makes bolts, nuts, and similar hardware and sells them to automobile manufacturers, who then put them into their automobiles and pass them on to the ultimate consumer—to distribute any refund which he may receive from the Treasury Department under decisions that his taxes have been paid improperly. Even if he has the benefit of a court decision he must return the refund to the Government unless he does what is practically an impossible thing to do.

My impression is that this provision was stricken out once before on the floor of the Senate, and I move that that portion of the bill beginning in line 12, on page 69, and going through to the end of the paragraph, on page 70, be stricken out.

Mr. SWANSON. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the provision.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be available to refund any amount paid by or collected from any manufacturer, producer, or importer in respect of the tax imposed by subdivision (3) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1924, or subdivision (3) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1921 or of the revenue act of 1918, unless the Commissioner of Internal Revenue certifies to the proper disbursing officer that such manufacturer, producer, or importer has filed with the commissioner, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, a bond in such sum and with such sureties as the commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the immediate repayment to the United States of such portion of the amount refunded as is not distributed by such manufacturer, producer, or importer, within six months after the date of the payment of the refund, to the persons who purchased for purposes of consumption (whether from such manufacturer, producer, importer, or from any other person) the articles in respect of which the refund is made, as evidenced by the affidavits (in such form and containing such statements as the commissioner may prescribe) of such purchasers, and that such bond, in the case of a claim allowed after the passage of this act, was filed before the allowance of the claim by the commissioner.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion of the Senator is to strike out that language.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; that is what I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. I submit that that ought not to be done.

We will take a manufacturer, for instance, who has already collected the tax from the consumer and paid that tax over to the Government. The manufacturer is out nothing; and for the Government then to repay that tax to the manufacturer would be manifestly nothing more than making a gift to the manufacturer.

Why should that tax be repaid to the manufacturer? I am just using the manufacturer as an illustration. It ought to be paid to the person who actually paid the tax if it is going to be refunded at all. It would be manifestly nothing in the world but a gift to the manufacturer unless this language is retained, and of course this language should be retained.

We had a fight about this matter here some time ago, when the provision was first adopted; and it was then decided by the Senate that this language should go in. In other words, this language merely provides that the tax, if refunded, must be refunded to the person who actually paid the tax. I take it that no Senator, after he has gone into the matter and considered it, would be willing to refund the tax to a person who had not paid it; so I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down, will he answer a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator explain to me, in order that I may explain to my constituents, how a manufacturer may return the tax to the persons who purchased for purposes of consumption, when he does not know the ultimate consumers when he makes that kind of hardware, and it is used in machinery, and he does not know the names of the ultimate consumers?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is perfectly certain that the manufacturer in the Senator's State that he speaks of has already included this tax in the cost price of the article sold to the consumer. The manufacturer did not pay the tax. It has been passed on to the consumer, and therefore the manufacturer is not out the tax. If he is out the tax, he can make that bond and collect the money; but if he has not paid the tax, manifestly it ought not to be returned to a man who has not paid it.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the Senator has not answered the question. He has not told me how we can find out who the ultimate consumer is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then the tax ought not to be returned if the person who paid it can not be ascertained.

Mr. BINGHAM. Even if it had been illegally collected?

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not been illegally collected. That is not the question in this case at all.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. Would the Secretary of the Treasury pay the amount of the tax to a manufacturer who had never paid it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator who has the floor permit a word of explanation from me?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. In the first part of the paragraph it is made clear that this appropriation is payable only to persons from whom taxes were illegally collected. The whole appropriation is controlled by that.

Just to supplement what was said by the Senator from Connecticut, a good illustration occurs in my State.

We have there a manufacturer of storage batteries, which were thought subject to this tax, and from whom the tax was admittedly illegally collected. That company never raised its price one penny. It absorbed the entire tax itself; and the only changes in its prices during the operation of these acts were two reductions in price, which it made as it found its costs decreasing. It can not find out the people who bought those batteries, because they are sold, just like crackers in a grocery store, to anybody who comes along, no record being made of the purchase, except where it is on a charge account, and it is in the hands of the dealer that the charge account appears; but this company actually absorbed that whole tax itself. Then it brought suit in the Federal court for the recovery of these taxes, and it got a judgment against the collector for that tax, and no appeal has been taken by the collector or by the Government; but, on the contrary, a certificate of probable cause was filed, which makes it a judgment against the United States.

The wording of this proviso is such that the United States would not be permitted to pay that unappealed-from judgment for taxes illegally collected unless the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut were adopted; but I beg Senators to notice that the only persons who can get any benefit from the appropriation made in this proviso are those from whom taxes have been illegally collected.

Mr. McKELLAR. The case stated by the Senator may be an exceptional case, and if we had that case before us there would be a reason for acting upon it; but just to open the door here to any and every manufacturer or producer or importer who has paid out taxes illegally, though those taxes may have been paid by his customers, seems to me to be a proposition that the Senate ought not to stand for; and I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is very evident to me that we are not going to be able to finish this measure to-night. It is nearly 6 o'clock. Some of us have been here all day. A great many of the Senators have gone home. I know that some of them did not think we were going to vote on the measure to-night and have gone to their residences. I understand that there are at least two matters upon which a record vote is desired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I think probably this is the last matter except one, and that, I hope, will be voted upon without any remarks from anybody. I am certain there will be none from me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wanted to suggest that a desire has been expressed by a great many Senators that we should get through with this bill to-night and then that the Senate should adjourn over until Thursday and give us all day to-morrow for other matters.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have heard that, too; and I should not object to having another day in which I could do some work in my office. Some of us have been here all day, however, and we are going to adjourn early for Christmas anyhow; and it strikes me, rather than keep some of us here for an hour or so longer and have a quorum brought here to vote on some of these matters, that it would be just as well to adjourn now until to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator may have in his mind to bring up; but I wish to say that I do not propose to do anything regarding the amendment that has been offered except to let it go to conference, so far as I am concerned, for the committee, and to have a vote on the amendment that we adopted, offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. I think in his interest we ought to have a vote of the Senate. I am not saying that it will necessarily be a roll call. I do not know that I shall make a request for a roll call. I hope I shall not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Do I understand the Senator to say that he is willing to have this amendment go in, so that the matter may go to conference? If the Senator takes that position, that is contrary to what the committee has already passed on; and if he takes that position we must have a quorum here to do it, because I am going to insist upon a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. WARREN. Wait a minute, please.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator ought to agree to that.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed I will.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator very often, in the committee room and here, has expressed the view that anything tending to decrease the amount of an appropriation was in order. In fact, rulings to that effect have been made in his favor by the Presiding Officer to-day. On what ground shall I urge that it is not in order to do something that lessens appropriations rather than increases them? There is no matter of money before us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but the committee has passed on this amendment and reported it favorably; and I hope the Senator will not think the Appropriations Committee takes the same view as the chairman, that it is willing for this matter to go to conference. It ought not to go to conference. This is a matter that ought to be voted on, and this amendment ought to be voted down by the Senate; and I shall have to insist that a quorum be present when the matter is voted on unless the amendment is voted down.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as I understand, the bill has been disposed of so far as all committee amendments are concerned, and most of the other amendments that have been offered by Senators, and there are three or four now pending. It is not yet 6 o'clock. I do not think anybody is worked to death by working from 12 to 6. We have an 8 hour law in the country, and I hope Senators will get inured to working from 6 to 8 hours. It does seem to me that if we can stay here and dispose of this bill it will take only a short while, and to-morrow we will all have a day of vacation, so that we can get up our mail and read it.

As I understand, the Senator from Tennessee insists that there must be a vote on this proposition. I think we can dispose of it and vote on it; and then, if it is carried and the proviso goes out, we can determine whether or not we will have a roll call. If we do, we might just as well adjourn.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. I should like some information about this proposal. My understanding is that the language in the bill as now before us is the language sent over by the House——

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. MOSES. And that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut was not considered in committee. Therefore, the committee has no record upon it; and the course proposed by the chairman of the committee is the usual course under such circumstances—to accept the amendment for the purpose of sending it to conference. If there is as much merit in the original language of the bill as the Senator from Tennessee apparently thinks there is, we may be sure that the House conferees will stand upon their rights in the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is the law as it is now. It was passed last year. This is just a repetition of the present law. It is already the law; and if we strike this out, in accordance with the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, we will be changing the law as it is now, and not only changing the law as it is now but changing the bill as sent over to us by the House, and changing the bill as the committee has reported it out. It is just as much a part of the committee's report as any part of this bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator from Tennessee is correct in his recital, he can make a point of order that this amendment changes existing law.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is subject to a point of order, I make the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut changes existing law, and is not in order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator point out the existing law which is changed?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall have to send for the law. It is the law.

Mr. BINGHAM. If it is the law, why does it need to go into the present act?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I am at a loss to understand why it should be done, except that the particular appropriation is affected by it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to take me off the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. I beg the pardon of the Senator; I did not know he had the floor. I will ask to have a copy of the law brought to me.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. My position is simply this: If Senators want to go ahead and pass this bill to-night, I have no objection; but here is what I have in mind:

We will probably go along here for an hour or so yet, and then some one will make the point of no quorum, and we will have to adjourn until to-morrow and have a session then, after keeping us here until a late hour in the hope that we can pass the bill. If we can have an understanding that we are going to get through with the bill in a little while, I have no objection to staying here and passing it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask to have the law brought to me. I am quite sure this provision is in the law. I think everybody will agree that it is.

Mr. SWANSON. While we are waiting for it, I think possibly there is a limitation on the appropriation of last year, which does not make it a general statute.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us see whether that is the case or not.

Mr. SWANSON. A limitation on an appropriation act is not a limitation on a general law. It simply limits it to that appropriation. If it is on a revenue act it does change existing law.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was in the revenue act of 1924.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that a motion to strike out part of the bill would be in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. It changes existing law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That makes no difference, if it is part of the bill and simply operates to strike out part of the text, that is certainly in order as to any bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I recall quite distinctly that this ground was gone over thoroughly about this time of the day a few months ago. The Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Connecticut led the debate on opposite sides, and this identical language was adopted through an amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee in the last revenue act.

It is a part of existing law because it controls the method through which the appropriation authorized by existing law should be made. It is a limitation and governs the procedure in making the payment under the act authorizing the appropriation.

A provision in an appropriation bill to strike out that limitation and change the procedure of carrying out the existing law would change law in an appropriation act, and would do the very thing that is forbidden under the rules of the Senate. In other words, existing law authorizes an appropriation to be made in a certain way. The appropriation bill, under the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, would authorize it to be made in another way. Under existing law it is authorized to be made with certain restrictions. Under the bill itself it is authorized to be made without restriction. Consequently the result would be to change existing law.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, the existing law does a great injustice in that it prevents a man who has secured a decision from the courts which declared that he has paid a tax illegally from ever getting any justice.

Mr. BRATTON. That same argument was advanced before; but I am not discussing the merits of it. I am discussing the rule which forbids any change in existing law through an appropriation bill, and the merits of the controversy are aside from the question now pending. If existing law authorizes an appropriation to be made in a certain way and under certain conditions and an appropriation bill undertakes to change that, the necessary result is inevitably to change existing law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does the Senator know that existing law contains this limitation?

Mr. BRATTON. Oh, yes. It was debated. The Senator from Pennsylvania was not in the Chamber a moment ago, but I reminded the Senate that this exact language was put into the revenue act authorizing this appropriation two months ago, but that the Senator from Tennessee proposed the amendment and the Senator from Connecticut led the opposition to it, and it was adopted and is existing law. This appropriation is made under existing law, carrying out that specific provision.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If that is the case, then this proviso is unnecessary and ineffective, because the removal of it here would not change the law there.

Mr. BRATTON. That may be true.

Mr. McKELLAR. But it would affect this particular appropriation. It would permit the paying out of money provided in this particular appropriation contrary to general law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. On the contrary, this merely authorizes the appropriation to be made in accordance with the existing law. If that limitation is in the existing revenue law—and I am glad to accept the Senator's word that it is—then we do not need to put in the proviso a second time.

Mr. BRATTON. What would be the object of striking it out except to evidence a contrary view of the Senate? If language follows existing law verbatim, then to strike it out would indicate that the Congress desired a different method followed in making the payments under the appropriation act.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am told that when this appropriation bill was in the House of Representatives, Mr. MERRITT, of Connecticut, moved to strike out this proviso, and he was met by the statement from Mr. GARNER that he did not need to do that, because the revenue bill pending in the present Congress took care of the case. Therefore Mr. MERRITT withdrew his amendment. After the bill had passed the House it was discovered that Mr. GARNER had been in error, because the new revenue bill, as it stands in the House, does not take care of these cases. I think the thing ought to be done, and ought to go to conference, and if the Senator's view is right, undoubtedly the House conferees will insist, and the matter can then come to a vote in the full Senate.

Mr. BRATTON. It was debated at some length before.

Mr. McKELLAR. We find it in the appropriation act of last year, the exact wording. I will send it to the Vice President.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Is that in the revenue law or appropriation act?

Mr. McKELLAR. The appropriation act of last year.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. This merely repeats a proviso in the appropriation act, then?

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is the law, we would be changing that law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Putting a proviso in this appropriation just because there was a proviso on some other appropriation would not change that law in the least.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it would not change the law, then it would just leave it as it is.

Mr. BRATTON. Is it in the appropriation bill or in the revenue act?

Mr. McKELLAR. It was in the appropriation act.

Mr. BRATTON. Then I was in error in saying it was in the revenue act.

Mr. SWANSON. I was satisfied it was in the appropriation act.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have just been advised that it was in the deficiency appropriation bill of February 28, 1927. Nothing that is proposed to be done here would in any way change the statute of that date. The proviso in that bill related to that appropriation. We do not propose to change that in the slightest. This proviso relates to this appropriation and of course can be stricken out on amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. I quite agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the point of order is not well taken. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

On a division the amendment was rejected.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will read.

but this proviso shall not apply nor extend to, or prevent the payment out of the moneys hereby appropriated of judgments duly entered in any of the courts of the United States against collectors of internal revenue in suits for the recovery of taxes illegally collected and imposed by the said subdivision (3) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1924, or subdivision (3) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1921, or of the revenue act of 1918, and in which suits certificates of probable cause have been duly entered by such courts.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I can explain the amendment in a brief statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will explain it, and the extent of these judgments.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I ought to say, before we proceed further, that I shall make a point of order against the amendment, because it is entirely in the line of new legislation, and it does not refer directly to anything that is contained in the bill, so far as what we have heard from the proponents is concerned.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wyoming has not caught the drift of the amendment I proposed. It would merely have the effect of taking out of this proviso which we have been discussing those cases in which suit has been brought, judgment has been rendered, and no appeal has been taken, but where a certificate of probable cause has been filed, to relieve the collector and fix the judgment against the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Under the present law, is not that taken care of?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. There is no present law on the subject.

Mr. SWANSON. It is a doubtful question whether under existing law it is necessary to certify any judgment of the courts to the joint committee. I had occasion to look into that, where a judgment had been recovered for a refund. The custom of the Treasury Department is to certify the judgments to the joint committee before they will pay anything. That generally results in a delay of about 60 days.

I was talking to the senior Senator from Utah about the matter, and he thinks there is no necessity for certifying these judgments. This language does not cover judgments, but claims of the Internal Revenue Department. It seems to me that all that is necessary is to say that there shall be no necessity for certifying up to the joint committee the information in connection with the final judgments.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am afraid I have not made myself plain. All that this does is to permit the payment of final, unappealed-from judgments already rendered, which would otherwise be paid out of this appropriation act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. McKELLAR. When those judgments are rendered, are they not sent up to the Committee on Appropriations, and does not the Committee on Appropriations always pay those judgments of the courts?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why intermingle it with this general fund? As I understand it, wherever a judgment of a court is rendered, that judgment is filed with the Appropriations Committee at once, and it is always included.

Mr. WARREN. It is always included, and it does seem to me that the amendment of the Senator is unnecessary.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, these are different judgments. A judgment of the Court of Claims is certified here and paid outside of these refunds.

Mr. McKELLAR. A judgment of any court is certified.

Mr. SWANSON. If a man wants to get a refund of taxes, as I understand the existing law, he goes to court and gets a final decree, and if no appeal is taken, the final decree of the court, to pay a man $10,000, we will say, for improperly collected taxes, is entered. The Treasury Department has said that this language requires that those judgments be certified to the joint committee of the House and the Senate for them to pass on them before they will pay them. I do not think the language requires that, but the Treasury Department by doing that has delayed the payment of the judgments. We do not wait to appropriate the money; it is already appropriated, but they wait until this joint committee has had the judgment certified to them. I think the present language is sufficient to cover the matter, and I think that if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who is chairman of the Senate side of the joint committee, and Chairman GREEN, would write the Treasury Department that Congress never contemplated that there should be such certification, the matter could be taken care of.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It does not directly relate to that. We do not object to waiting while the joint committee acts. This is the only item in the bill out of which such judgments as that can be paid. They are not certified here. They are judgments of the Federal district courts, affirmed by the circuit court of appeals, but brought in the district court in the first instance, anyway, final judgments, from which no appeal is taken. Everybody admits their soundness and justness, and the only way to pay them is out of this appropriation. All I ask is that this proviso shall not extend so far as to prevent the payment of an admittedly just judgment which otherwise would be paid as a matter of course out of this item.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, as I understand it, then, the proposition is this: The Senator would change the entire law in reference to the payment of judgments obtained in courts. Under the existing law they are sent up here and certified to the Appropriations Committee, and the appropriations are made for them. This is a fund, as I understand, for the refund of taxes. It is a fund intended to provide for the payment of refunds of taxes, to pay the judgments rendered by all the courts.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. These are judgments on claims for refund of taxes. These are claims for refunds which have gone on and ripened into judgments and which, in the ordinary course of things, would be paid out of this appropriation as a matter of course. But the proviso is so sweeping that it is retroactive and impairs the judgments which have heretofore been rendered. I am not asking to have it applied to future judgments at all. These are established judgments.

No State could do this, because it would be impairing the judgment and therefore the contract. There is no question of the Federal power to do it. All I base my appeal on is the justice of the thing. Here are judgments of the court on claims for the refund of taxes which were illegally collected, which would otherwise be payable as a matter of course out of this appropriation.

The proviso as it stands in the printed bill is so sweeping that it would go back and prevent the payment of these admittedly just judgments. I think clearly the proposition is one which should appeal to any lawyer. The judgments were obtained under existing law, with full knowledge of everything in the law up to this minute, and were entirely sound and legal.

I feel sure that if the Senator will let it go to conference he will find that the House will acquiesce in the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, as I understand the amendment it will work a radical change in the existing law and policy in that it will authorize the department to proceed to settle these claims, where there is judgment, without their being brought to the attention of Congress or to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Not at all.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It certainly will authorize them to do it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No; it does not change existing law by a syllable. Under existing law a judgment for a refund is paid out of this lump-sum appropriation and is not certified to Congress. There are thousands of them in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is brought to the attention of the Appropriations Committee, is it not, as a part of the estimate in making up the item of refunds?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Absolutely.

Mr. SMOOT. That is paid out of a lump sum.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That again emphasizes that the committee does not always know what appropriations are made for. It was emphasized this afternoon when it was disclosed that there was a $1,000,000 item in the bill which no one could explain or tell us what it was for except that it was for some kind of a building. Now it seems that the committee recommends a lump-sum appropriation to meet certain refunds, and they have no details as to what may constitute those refunds.

I suggest, as a matter of check on the department in the expenditure of this fund, that I would not like to see a change in the policy. I would not say it changes the law, but it does change the policy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. All of these refunds of any amount are certified to the joint committee. We have a perfectly good way of keeping a check on the action of the bureau because they are certified every day in great number.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Under the present policy do they pay them and then certify them, or do they certify them and then pay them?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. They certify them and give the joint committee time to take exception to them, and they are carefully scrutinized by the experts of the joint committee. The amendment does not change that procedure at all.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am glad to hear that. I do not want to stand for any change in the law which would bring about any laxity on the part of the department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I have been serving on the Appropriations Committee for some time. I ask the chairman of the committee to bear me out in what I am about to say. He has been serving on the same committee for 30 years or more. I do not recall a single final judgment from any Federal court that has ever been filed with the Committee on Appropriations which was not promptly paid. Is not that true?

Mr. WARREN. All of them have been paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. The chairman says that is true. Under these circumstances why change the law? If final judgments have been obtained it is within the knowledge of the Senator that they have all been paid after approval by the committee. The Government does not intend, as I understand it, to turn down any judgment of a Federal court. I do not know why the change is proposed to be made, but it ought not to be made. We ought to vote it down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WAR-REN] on the ground that the amendment is in the nature of a change of existing law.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 97, line 5, after the word "judgments," insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid in payment of judgment No. 34097 in favor of Sara E. Thompson and Marcella Thompson Berkley, administratrices of the estate of John W. Thompson, deceased.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I ask the chairman of the committee to accept the amendment and let the matter go to conference.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think I heard the amendment. What is its purpose?

Mr. MAYFIELD. It is proposed to amend the bill by adding after the word "judgments" on page 97, line 5, of the bill the following language:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid in payment of judgment No. 34097 in favor of Sara E. Thompson and Marcella Thompson Berkley, administratrices of the estate of John W. Thompson, deceased.

I ask that the amendment be adopted in order that the matter may go to conference. I have a constituent who is interested in the judgment who did not know the matter was in the bill and simply desires to present a statement to the conference committee.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask whether it was a final judgment rendered?

Mr. MAYFIELD. It was, as I understand it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then what could the Senator's constituent expect to gain by delay?

Mr. MAYFIELD. I do not know the extent to which he is interested.

Mr. SMOOT. No matter if he were interested in it, what good would it do to have the payment withheld? It is a final judgment.

Mr. SWANSON. The money is payable to the administratrices, and I presume the contest would be that if they got hold of it and distributed it, the claimant, whoever he may be, would not get his share of the fund.

Mr. SMOOT. He had his chance in court to do it.

Mr. MAYFIELD. There is something like that involved in the matter.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's amendment proposes to prevent the actual payment until something further is done about it?

Mr. MAYFIELD. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I wish to reserve the right for a separate vote on the committee amendment to be found on page 41, beginning with line 17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the committee amendment on page 40, lines 11 to 16, and the committee amendment on page 41, lines 17 to 25.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I wish to make a point of order against the committee amendment on page 41, lines 17 to 25. I make the point of order upon the ground that it is a claim. I call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the paragraph which the Senator from Nebraska proposes to strike out because it is a private claim is one which I do not propose to contest, but I will say that it is one of those peculiar cases which we sometimes meet. It provides a payment to one of the trusted clerks in the Indian Bureau. This clerk had been for some years in charge of certain premises and conditions. Charges were preferred against him of a criminal nature. He was suspended for the time being. He believed he was honest and of course awaited the trial, when he was found not guilty. This item is for payment for the time during which he was under suspension. He believed it was necessary to remain on duty and to offer whatever information he could, and to clear his name.

I know the Senator does not want to impede anything that is in the line of sustaining the honor of an honest man. Of course, the Senator, who is to be chairman of the Committee on Claims, will have trouble enough without my making him any more. If the Senator insists upon his point of order, the item will have to go out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska press the point of order?

Mr. HOWELL. The reason why I press the point of order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator presses it, the point of order is sustained and there need not be any debate upon it, though the Chair does not want to cut the Senator off.

Mr. HOWELL. I insist upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] reserved a separate vote on the amendment on page 40, beginning with line 11 and extending to line 16.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask a vote on the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the matter was misstated. The committee amendment was pending before the Senate, and I offered a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PAN AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF CHILD WELFARE (H. DOC. NO. 98)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I renew to the Seventieth Congress the recommendation I made to the Sixty-ninth Congress that legislation be enacted authorizing an appropriation of $2,000, to enable acceptance by the United States of membership in a Pan American Institute of Child Welfare to be established at Montevideo, Uruguay, in accordance with a resolution adopted at the Pan American Child Welfare Congress held at Santiago, Chile, in October, 1924.

The attention of Congress is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State, and its inclosed copy of Senate Documbent No. 184, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, containing my message of January 5, 1927, and related papers, on the subject.

It will be observed from the report of the Secretary of State that, in response to my recommendation, a joint resolution was introduced in the Sixty-ninth Congress, authorizing the United States to become a member of the institute, and an appropriation of $2,000 per annum for the contribution by the United States toward the support of the institute; that the joint resolution passed the House of Representatives and was reported without amendment by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, but, owing to the congestion toward the end of the session of Congress, the Senate was unable to act upon the resolution, and that the institute has received the adherence of the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay, and Venezuela, and is now established and functioning at Montevideo.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1927.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR COLE L. BLEASE

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague at the county fair at Bishopville, S. C., November 24, 1927. I may not agree with all that he has to say in that address, but I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

The address by Senator BLEASE is as follows:

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen, to say that I appreciate the invitations from the president of your association as well as its secretary, several of the county officials and some of my personal friends to be with you on this occasion would be mildly expressing my feelings. I was in the city of Washington attending to my official duties and had little idea of returning to the State that we all love so well until at least the Christmas holidays. I am proud to be here in the county of Lee.

I propose this morning to give you some plain English talk, not in beautiful word painting, but in such language that all men can understand, for, after all, it makes but little difference in the use of the words or how we place them, but it is in putting the views that we hold, and the thoughts that we have, so that they can be understood. I expect severe criticism. I expect some to say that it would have been better had I not said some things, but after an experience of nearly three years as your public servant in the Senate of the United States I have reached the mature opinion that the truth is what the people of this country should know, and that they have not known, for it has often been concealed from them by men in high places whose duty it was, in my opinion, not to deceive but to act fairly and honorably with their people, let the consequences be what they may to them individually. And I wish it distinctly understood this morning that I am not making this speech to help my chances for being reelected or elected to any political office. Neither am I taking into consideration the fact that it may injure my political standing in the State or the Nation. I am disregarding absolutely all personal, present, or future considerations. I want this Nation of ours to quit being imitators.

It was once said that "God Almighty hates a quitter," but He loves an originator and one who imitates no man but stands alone in the advocation of those things which are original with himself. We imitate France; we imitate England; we imitate even Spain and Mexico and other nations of the world; in fact, we imitate every place but our own and heaven—hell not excepted. Women want to imitate France, the styles of Paris, in the cutting of the hair and the wearing of their dresses. Our men want to imitate England, and our public officials the acts of public officials of other countries. I want this stopped. Let America be for Americans, and let her be the original as leader of the world and thus set the pace and thus say to the world, "Here we are; follow us," and quit being a race that stands in waiting to see what some other country is going to do before we begin to move and get into action for that which is best for uplifting and upbuilding this great Nation of ours.

Now, as to some things on the political issues, I have, in speeches made in this State and in the past summer, which are reported in some of the papers, advocated making the enforcement of the prohibition law an issue in the national compaign, and said in those speeches that we should enforce the law or we should repeal the law because its nonenforcement is producing a race of people who not only disregard this law but uphold the nonenforcement of other laws. I said in those speeches that neither Smith nor McAdoo would ever be President of the United States of America, and I say to you, my fellow citizens, today, that if either of them is nominated the Democratic Party is sure of defeat. There is a most wonderful and most powerful influence being exerted in certain organizations of this country which inscribe upon their banners that they do not interfere with the religion or politics of any man, but they adopt principles which, if a member of them believes, they will prevent him from casting his vote for either of these men, and these great organizations are a great power in politics unknown to the men on the outside, and sometimes they are called secret societies, but they are not; they are fraternal societies working for the uplifting and the betterment of all mankind.

This influence will be felt as it has never been felt before in the elections of 1928. We have men in high political positions calling themselves Democrats who are the representatives of the large corporations, either by being paid in certain capacities or they themselves are large stockholders, and therefore they can not serve both God and mammon; they can not serve the corporate interests which they represent or in which they hold large interests and at the same time represent the people—the common people of this great Nation of ours; and the Democratic Party can not hold the respect nor the confidence of the people of this country so long as such men continue to be the leaders; and we will never write "Victory" upon our banners until we can prove to the people that the Democratic Party is not subservient to the corporate interests but to the great majority of this Nation.

We hear a great deal about the McNary-Haugen bill. I have not the time to discuss this bill or its principles, but every man knows that the equalization fee put in it was to force all business men, especially the farmers, into the cooperative organizations. Many voted for this bill who admitted it. Whom, then, are they serving? The money power and the cooperative organizations or the people? We hear a great deal about flood control. I am for all things that will relieve human suffering and distress and am for the protection of lives, but can we control rivers? Is it possible for human brain to compete with the hand of God? I remember when the Pacolet River went on a rampage just a few years back and washed away millions and millions of dollars' worth of property, livestock, and took the lives of many human beings; and Reedy River went an a rampage, changed her course, sometimes destroying power plants and thousands of dollars of property. I remember an animal called a boll weevil who has done a great deal of injury to us in the South. What could Congress do or what has she done to relieve us of our flood conditions or to relieve the South of her disastrous boll weevil? Ah, gentlemen, the God of the people of the Mississippi and of the Pacolet and the Reedy is the same God of the Connecticut, and not until he put his hands upon the people of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts were the eyes of a great many people opened to the fact that there were others who had likewise suffered. I only mention this in order to show you what it takes to call attention to giving relief to the suffering South.

We must remove the office of the chairman of the Democratic National Committee in Washington from next door to the office of Thomas F. Ryan. We must let our national Democratic chairman know that we are not subservient to the dictation of Ryan and his crowd. We must let the world know that when Ryan sends his agents to the West to investigate political conditions and to see if his candidate can be elected that he, Ryan, is not the dictator of the Democratic Party. We must let our leaders know that going duck hunting, and eating the food of galvanized and climatized Yankees, and being entertained in the homes in New York of the agents and employees of Wall Street, drinking their wine and liquor, is not sufficient guaranty to southerners that we will be treated right. These clandestine agents, calling themselves Democrats and leaders of Democracy, who are serving the money power, to wit: The Morgan-Rockefeller and like interests, the Steel Trust, the Oil Trust, the Powder Trust, the Gun Trust, the Armor-plate Trust (the very implements of war), the railroads, the hydroelectric power companies, and all other money power and corporate interests; yet say, that they belong to a party that is for peace and that stands for the relief of the farmer, the cotton-mill men, the railroad employees, the clerks, the merchants, and the other people of this country who make their living by the sweat of their face, should be told in no uncertain terms that southerners are no longer to be lead by such leaders and are no longer willing to submit to dictation through them from the great interests which they represent, and that we do not propose to sacrifice the Constitution of this country, the enforcement of the laws of this country, and the control of the people of this country to any such men or methods, and that the real Democratic Party does not indorse their methods.

In this connection, I want to warn you people of my own State to watch and be on guard as to the Water Power Trusts and the Hydroelectric Power Trusts that are to-day being insidiously formed in your own State for the purpose of controlling its politics; its hand can be easily seen, yet it is attempting to be disguised, and the same power here is attempting to control our people that is attempting to run the United States Government.

I was sworn in as a Member of the Senate on the 4th day of March, 1925. I was invited to a meeting of the Democratic Senators, which meeting took some little informal action in reference to certain routine matters.

I was not invited to any other conferences or to any consultation, in reference to any matters—political or otherwise. I was not consulted as to what committees I would like to be a member of, or as to what rooms I would like to have in the Senate Office Building; nor was I offered or given any advice in reference to my duties, or what was expected of me, or what I was entitled to from any department of the Government—the folding room, financial clerk's office, Sergeant at Arms' office, Secretary of the Senate's office, or any other place.

I asked no questions and made no complaints.

My predecessor, Senator Dial, was very kind to me and went out of his way to assist me in certain routine matters, and introduced me to several Senators on both sides of the Chamber.

I was perfectly satisfied with the committee assignments which I received; was satisfied with the rooms assigned me in the office building, and had no complaint to make as to any matter, or matters, or any treatment which I received—politically or personally.

I went back to the session of December, 1925, and remained during the entire long session, which lasted until July 3, 1926, during which time I was never invited to any political caucus, never consulted as to any matters coming before the Senate for discussion or to be voted upon. I was absolutely ignored by the so-called leaders of the Democratic side of the Senate, and went along independently without making any complaint, speaking when I saw fit, saying what I wished regardless of what anybody else thought about it, and voting as I pleased on all questions and for what I thought was for the best interests of the majority of the people of the United States and for the best interests of the people of my State, South Carolina.

In December, 1926, I went back again and saw newspaper statements as to what "Democrats" had agreed upon, what "leaders" had met and done. I was not invited nor consulted as to these conferences. On January 4, 1927, at 10 o'clock I was invited to attend a meeting at 11 o'clock that day. I can see no reason for me to attend the meeting of the Democratic Senators simply for the purpose of letting a majority tie my hands on matters which they have already met and decided upon in secret conclave.

If I were in the open caucus and there was a discussion of matters and, on a fair and square ballot, I was in the minority, I would cheerfully yield to the majority and go in and work and vote with them. But when the majority has a meeting without any notification to the minority and without their presence and decides upon the plan of action, then invites the minority in, and simply carries out the program which they have already agreed upon, the only purpose of inviting the minority is to bind them to the majority rule without giving them the opportunity to have anything to say in a general caucus.

For instance, seven men are on a committee. The committee is to meet December 3, 1927. Four of the members have a secret meeting the night of December 2, agreeing on what they are going to do the next day. Then the next morning, when one of them makes a motion, the other three vote to carry through the program as agreed upon December 2, and the three who were not in attendance at the meeting December 2 are simply bound by having been present at the meeting of the full committee on the 3d.

That is an old political trick and might be played on amateurs but is a little weak and hardly sufficient to entice a man who for 40 years has been playing upon the political chessboard.

I said on the floor of the Senate March 18, 1925, page 387, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

"STATEMENT ON VOTES AT SPECIAL SESSION

"Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, in the organization of the United States Senate it is provided how the officers of the Senate shall be chosen and in what manner the committees of the Senate shall be appointed.

"Rule 24 of the Standing Rules of the Senate provides:

"'In the appointment of the standing committees, the Senate, unless otherwise ordered, shall proceed by ballot to appoint severally the chairman of each committee, and then by one ballot, the other members necessary to complete the same. A majority of the whole number of votes given shall be necessary to the choice of a chairman of a standing committee, but a plurality of votes shall elect the other members thereof. All other committees shall be appointed by ballot, unless otherwise ordered, and a plurality of votes shall appoint.'

"After carefully reading the rules, I conceived it to be my duty to vote upon the resolution offered by Senator WATSON, of Indiana, and the substitute offered by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, as I did vote on March 9, as will be shown by reference to pages 68 and 72 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. To have answered 'present' on the question to adopt or not adopt would not have been, in my opinion, a compliance with my duty as Senator; and I, therefore, voted for Senator JONES of New Mexico, in view of the fact that Senator PITTMAN, the ranking Democratic member of the committee, had requested that no Member of the Senate cast his ballot for him. On the adoption of the resolution of Senator WATSON, of Indiana, in my opinion an answer of 'present' would have been an acquiescence and a consent on my part to the selection of the chairman and members of the committees as chosen by the Republican caucus. I felt then and feel now, that the Democratic Party should have put up candidates for the chairmanship of each committee, and placed itself upon record, just as it did in the selection of a President pro tempore and Secretary of the Senate, and I voted 'no' because I do not believe that the committee chairman as selected, nor the committees, as selected, are subservient to the best interests of the American people.

"I made no declaration at the time on the floor of the Senate of my position in regard to this matter, because I knew that it was useless, and that being a new Member it might be construed in a manner foreign to the purposes which I had then and now have in view.

"I am, first of all, an American, and then a South Carolinian, and was elected to the Senate by the Democratic Party from a State which is rock-ribbed, the strongest of any in the American Union, and, in my opinion, it will continue to be so until the end of time.

"I do not agree with the doctrine that the Democrats should sit idly by and concur in the selection of committees simply because the Republicans have a majority of the Members of the Senate. I hold the interests of the American people above the interests of either party, and I am convinced that both parties, no matter which might be in the minority, should go on record as favoring those things which they conceive to be for the best interests of all the States and of every individual citizen of the Union. That was my guide when I voted, and when it comes time to cast my ballot on any occasion that shall continue to be my course in the future. I can not concur with the idea which has been advanced that a minority party should sit idly by and allow the majority to rule in a legislative body without a protest. I believe that the minority party should make its fight, and if there be any Members of the majority who see the issue as the minority see it they not only be permitted but requested to join with the minority in doing what they conceive to be for the best interests of all the people of our country; and, so far as I am concerned, as a Senator from South Carolina, I shall not sit quietly without a vote at least of protest and see the interests of this Government surrendered to what have come to be commonly known as the 'corporate interests.'

"The fight so ably managed and presented in such a way as to convince any but the most bitter partisan, and the vote on the confirmation of Mr. Warren assure me that my position in this matter of committees was and is correct. If I was right in voting against Mr. Warren and accepting the help of what is known as the insurgent group, composed of Members of this Senate, I was right when I voted with them as to committee assignments.

"In the vote on the Isle of Pines treaty I voted as I did because if the Isle of Pines did not belong to the United States it was not necessary to make a treaty. If the Isle of Pines did belong to the United States, then, in my opinion, the treaty-making power has absolutely no right to give over this piece of property or any other property of the United States without an act of Congress duly and legally passed by both Houses and signed by the President of the United States, or passed over his veto—in case there should be a veto—by two-thirds of the votes of each House. I voted against the treaty, further, because I believed then, and believe more strongly now, that the ratification of the treaty would mean that the island would be made a dumping ground for contraband liquors to be smuggled into the United States by rum runners and bootleggers, and that instead of adding to the happiness of the people of the island we would put a curse on them and their children and add another farce in the so-called enforcement of the so-called prohibition laws.

"It is said by some that the fight on Mr. Warren was a political fight or a slap at the President. Personally, I can say that that statement is absolutely false and unwise. I intended to vote for the confirmation of Mr. Warren, and so stated to both Republicans and Democrats, because I felt that the President should be allowed to name his own Cabinet; but after hearing the arguments of Senator WALSH and REED and the evidence presented by them I do not consider Mr. Warren fit for any public position, nor would I vote for him for one.

"I have repeatedly stated that I would not vote for any measure simply because it was introduced by a Democrat, nor would I vote against any measure simply because it was introduced by a Republican. I intend to vote as a Senator of the United States both for men and measures that I believe to be for the best interests of all the people of the American Nation, and I disclaim any intention on my part to embarrass Mr. Coolidge. I have not been led by any of my Democratic associates in the matter, nor did I caucus with them on this subject.

"My record in South Carolina in the past shows that I have always voted and acted as I, at the time, conceived to be for the best interests of the people of my State, and they, after 35 years of service by me, have given me the highest office within their gift, which I take as an indorsement of my record, and I shall pursue the same course in this body that I have pursued in my home State!"

I have no resentment toward anyone that I was not consulted as to certain matters, or that I was not invited to those conferences. I expected that, and it pleased me exactly and was along the lines of my independence of thought and action. I shall do as I have been doing; allow others to act just as they please and shall vote on all questions as I believe to be for the best interests of my people.

My friends thoroughly understand the situation and it would be useless for me to go into details. My opponents are equally informed, and my friends will approve my actions. My opponents will certainly not be surprised, for all of them know that I have always talked as I pleased, voted as I pleased, and at all times talked and voted for the best interests of the people of the State of South Carolina.

I am a Democrat. My democracy is based upon the rights of each State to control its own affairs without interference from the United States Government, and for each individual to do as he or she pleases, so long as they do not trample upon the rights of others, and of every person worshipping God in his own way.

Recently I said in a speech that this country was going to have a war with Mexico. I said that if some of the people of this country knew who the real General Polius is or was, and who his soldiers were, that that alone would almost cause a revolution in the United States. I was laughed at; some of the newspapers made fun of me; but just a few days ago the scheme of some of the leaders (even the President of Mexico) has been exposed, and it seems that my information was just a little further advanced than that of some of those who claim to be more familiar with the foreign affairs in this country.

There are other political questions which I would like to discuss, but it will take too much of your time, and you are here to mingle with each other and be jolly, and I would not attempt to detract one moment from your pleasures, but I must go just a little further, and here is where criticism will be brought upon myself.

The South is the Democratic Party.

It is seen and known by all men that those who to-day are endeavoring to control the Democratic Party have no genuine love for the South, and no good can come to the South from those sources which are endeavoring to obtain for themselves or their candidate the office of the Presidency of the United States by their present campaign of slander and abuse of that section of this Nation which has made it possible for it to be what it is. And what ill will of God's or man's could induce men to speak so contemptuously, as they do, of that section of our common country that waged the Revolutionary War and built here a Government which has raised the standards of human living and safety to heights hitherto unknown? That the South built the Republic and that men who built the Republic then organized the Democratic Party as an "association of patriots" to preserve the Republic the most illiterate among our people must see and appreciate.

Let only a recital of some of the events and outmarks in our history serve here to remind you of these facts, although to review all of the achievements of the southern patriots and statesmen would require more time than one could rehearse and might become tedious to those who are not in sympathy with them.

First of all, it was the feeble Colonies of South Carolina and Georgia that first wrote to the strong Virginia Colony Legislature, or House of Burgesses, suggesting the calling of the first Continental Congress to band the Colonies together for their mutual protection against the encroachment of the power of the tyrannical foreign monarchy that then held them subject to his crown; it was Patrick Henry, the burning torch of human liberty, a Virginian, who lighted the flames of the Revolutionary War, and he was the first commander of the American Army which he organized and mobilized on the James River near Williamsburg, until George Washington was placed in command in his stead by the combined Colonies; and what need is there in relating with what glory and valor the South participated in that frightful war and what portion of the victories they achieved. It will be interesting to relate that one event of that awful conflict might be sufficient rehearsal here to fix the greatness of her sons in your minds; I refer to the Battle of King's Mountain, of which Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, said in his one hundredth anniversary oration at the base of the monument in 1880: "It is indeed a mountain which kings may well remember." In that period of our struggle for independence Florida and Georgia had gone down under the merciless onslaughts of the conqueror; General Washington, his men exhausted from campaign and battle, and his southern troops laid beneath the sod from death due to affliction and the rigors of that awful winter at Valley Forge, were on the verge of general collapse and the British knew of his condition.

On December 26, 1779, Sir Henry Clinton, the British commander in chief, set out from London with 8,500 new troops for the strengthening of the forces already on this continent; on May 12 General Lincoln, who had been second to General Gates at Saratoga and new in command at Charleston, was beleaguered, and, after desperate resistance, surrendered the fort with 5,000 men, shipping, stores, artillery, and arms, and then it seemed that the heel of the conqueror had fastened a death grind on the necks of the colonists, for there was nowhere now for succor to come from, so it seemed. But they had failed to take note of the fact that the Presbyterians who had fled from the British Isles in search of religious liberty had taken up their homes in the valleys of southwestern Virginia and upper east Tennessee and northwestern North Carolina. To these liberty-yearning people the word went out from the British commander, Ferguson, who had taken up his quarters on Kings Mountain, from which he boasted that "All the rebels this side of hell can not dislodge me." Those patriots from beyond the mountains quickly met and marched through the mountains, living on parched corn, to North Carolina, where they were joined by the little company of 70 North Carolina troops who were standing guard of their homes, and under forced march arrived at Cowpens, S. C., where the remaining 200 South Carolina troops from the heroic Colony, already bled white from fighting, joined them on October 6, and on the morning of October 7 they set out, and in four columns advanced up the four sides of that mountain with the results that only the runner tale-bearer of the British escaped to warn his fellow soldiers farther to the north, while these southern heroes rolled the tide of the Revolution back to Yorktown. Of the result of this battle Senator Daniel, in his above-mentioned oration said:

"As the victory of Moultrie at the Palmetto fort was the early morning star, so Yorktown was the glorious and undimmed sunrise of American independence; and so King's Mountain came like a vivid flash from the storm clouds of expiring night, dazzling darkened eyes with lambent light that played around this hoary crest, the patriots' eyes caught in prophetic vision an inspiring glimpse of Morgan and his men emerging through the smoke of Cowpens upon the heels of the flying Tarleton; beheld Cornwallis retreating before Green after the dreadful carnage of Guilford, while at the close of the vista rose up in luminous splendor that grand historic picture which marks the dawn of a new era in the history of mankind, the sword of the conquered conqueror presented humbly to the Father of His Country, while the standard of France and the flag of the great Republic floated in mingled glory over the ramparts of Yorktown."

Who was it but the Southern Colonies that in the Constitutional Convention defeated the effort to make the new Government a limited monarchy, or a republican form of government in which the chief executive and the Senate would be elected for life; who but the Southern delegates led by Patrick Henry saved to the people that glorious heritage "State rights," and had incorporated into the Constitution the Virginia Bill of Rights which saved to the people the right of trial by jury among their own people, the writ of habeas corpus, the freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience? It was also Patrick Henry, as first Governor of Virginia, who organized the counties of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio in the northwest territory of Virginia, and on the 3d day of May, 1784, the Virginia General Assembly ceded these three counties to the Federal Union with the stipulation that they should become three independent States.

These negotiations were handled between the State and the Federal Government by James Monroe, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, and Arthur Lee; this same Virginia gave also its right to the Territory of Tennessee and Kentucky and West Virginia to the Federal Government that this Territory might become separate States in the Union; it was the South and southern statesmen that were with their means and brawn building the great seat of government at Washington when the British invaded our country in 1812, and, although we had a treaty of peace with the British, they destroyed our little Army and Navy at Baltimore and Bladensburg Road, drove President Madison and his wife from the seat of government, applied the torch first to the Library of Congress, then in the Capitol, then to the White House, after gorging themselves with what they found in it; sacked and burned the Treasury and the plant of the only newspaper of importance; sailed down the Potomac, bombarding Alexandria, and then into the open sea, which they had cleared of our ships, and on to New Orleans, where they encountered Andrew Jackson, born on the soil of South Carolina, and his southern troops; and the historian, Parton, tells the story that of the British dead on the field 80 per cent were shot between the eyes; and their commander, Pakenham, taken dead from the field, was pickled in rum and shipped to his brother-in-law the Duke of Wellington, who received it on the eve of the Battle of Waterloo. And soon after this battle and as a sequel to it Florida came into the possession of the United States as a part of our national domain through the campaign of Jackson and the diplomacy of John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, the two outstanding figures in history of their day; and Jackson organized the first Territorial government over it and prepared it to be converted into a State. Of its acquisition and the part he played in it, John C. Calhoun, upon retiring from the portfolio of Secretary of War in the Cabinet of President Monroe, in an address to the people of South Carolina replying to the attacks of Benton on him for the part he had had in this bit of statecraft, said:

"Although the youngest of Monroe's six Cabinet members, I have been attributed by Benton of being the author of the Florida treaty, the acquisition of which Territory he sees as a disaster to the Republic. I have said it is a good treaty, not without due reflection. We acquired much by it; it gave us Florida, an acquisition not only important in itself but also in reference to the whole southwestern frontier. There was at that time four powerful tribes of Indians, two of whom, the Creeks and Chocktaws, were contiguous to Florida and the two others, the Chickasaws and Cherokees, were adjoining. They were the most numerous and powerful tribes in the United States, and from their position were exposed to be acted on and excited against us from Florida. It was important that this state of things should terminate, which could only be done by the obtaining of Florida. But there were other and powerful considerations for the acquisition. We had a short time before extinguished the Indian title to large tracts of country in Alabama, Mississippi, and Georgia lying upon streams and rivers which passed through Florida to the Gulf—lands in a great measure valueless without the right to navigate those streams to their mouths. The acquisition of Florida gave us this right and enabled us to bring into successful cultivation a great extent of fertile lands which have added much to the increased production of the great staple, cotton. It also terminates a very troublesome dispute with Spain growing out of the capture of St. Marks and Pensacola by General Jackson in the Seminole War, and, finally, it perfected our title to Oregon by ceding to us whatever right Spain had to that Territory."

It was John C. Calhoun, as chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives in Washington in 1812, who forced on Congress the resolution declaring war on Great Britain because they were raiding and destroying our ships on the high seas and carrying our seamen away as prisoners into foreign dungeons or putting them to death when captured in their avocation beyond the protection of their own country, and Calhoun, also, wrote his philosophy of government into books which form bright jewels in our libraries and schools of political economy.

Was it not Thomas Jefferson, a southern man, and the original organizer of the Democratic Party, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase and added to our domain that vast stretch of the finest valley and prairie land in the world now formed into mighty States with cities teeming with a mighty and independent population? Was it not James K. Polk, a southern man, born on the soil of North Carolina, who added all that vast domain of the Southwest and Pacific coast and the Rocky Mountains, and Oregon, Washington, and Idaho to our public domain to become great and immensely wealthy States of the Republic? Of this Territory the great Democratic orator from Indiana, Daniel Voorhees, once said in a speech in the Senate, "It embraces more gold and silver than is contained in all the world besides." Polk's enemies charged that he was turning the Republic into an empire by this act, and that the people would thereby lose their liberties; but the same flag floats over them to-day that floats from the Capitol at Washington, and their people enjoy the same liberty and protection of government as do the people of New York or Pennsylvania. And it was Sam Houston, the boy house carpenter from Virginia, whose journeys into the Southwest placed him in command of the army of patriots battling against marauders and alien enemies who were seeking to make our Government a failure and to turn us back to the tyrants of Europe, and after that glorious victory in war and the more glorious achievements in setting up and governing the Republic of Texas, brought it into our dominion to add the States of Texas, part of New Mexico, part of Oklahoma, and part of Colorado and Wyoming to our Republic. And Houston, after he had twice served as President of that short-lived but glorious Republic, and was in the United States Senate from Texas, refused to allow interests he thought not best for the future safety of the Republic of the United States to put his name forward for the Democratic nomination for President when he might have had the nomination by consenting to accept it. And after this vast domain was added to our Republic, extending its borders to the shores of the farthest ocean and lifting its greatness to the heights of glory never before known among men, and conducted without the breath of scandal ever being breathed against it, it was a Democrat in Congress, Andrew Johnson, born in North Carolina, and without a home of his own, who was the father of our homestead laws which gave all that vast domain acquired by southern statesmen as homes for the people, an administration of equal justice in government that was only attempted once before in history—that being in Rome during the administration of Julius Cæsar and Mark Antony and his brother, Lucius Antony, and for which the conspiracy against their lives was hatched.

With this glorious record of southern Democracy in building and conducting this Republic to such exalted heights, why should we allow it now to be dragged into the dirt to satisfy the vain desires of some candidate for office who has no sympathy for the people who made it, or for the party whose political faith he professes only to gain his ends and gratify the gall of his backers?

If you turn to the sentimental aspect which our gallant and glorious Southland has added to this Republic, you have only to stand at attention when a band plays our national anthem, The Star Spangled Banner, written by a southern man, on a greasy paper which had been wrapped around the coarse food that was brought him to eat, while he was imprisoned in the hold of a British warship that was bombarding Fort McHenry, in Chesapeake Bay.

When evil days came upon the Republic, and with them graft and scandal and outrages of justice and lowering of the standards of greatness and duties of government, was it not our Southland which gave to the world the martial air, Dixie, and the gallantry and bravery of the Confederate soldier? The escutcheon of the Southern Confederacy is adorned with more illustrious names in proportion to the duration of its existence than ever graced the pages of history of any government that ever existed. Of the Confederate Nation, Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, in an oration before the annual reunion of Confederate veterans at New Orleans in 1892, said:

"There was no Confederate before 1861, and there were none after 1865. The Confederacy marked its boundaries with the bayonet; it flashed into the family of nations like a sword from its scabbard; it vanished from the family of nations like a sword into its scabbard. Its birth was registered and its epitaph written in the blood of the brave. It was born, it lived, it died amid the roll of drum and the blast of the bugle, the rattle of musketry, and the thunder of cannon. Its constitution was dissolved in the flames of war; its flag fell to rise no more; its institutions perished."

The sons and grandsons of the Revolutionary War and the Mexican War, the Confederate soldiers, fought for the greatest principles ever advocated by man, the right of the States to govern themselves as they best saw fit. They whose forefathers had made America possible; and upon the foundation which they laid the present great United States of America is built. When they returned to their homes from what is called the Civil War (God only knows how anybody could call a war civil, yet it seems that that has been adopted and I have used it, not that I indorse it, but to express certain ideas) they were without money; their property gone; their servants all set free; no mules; no horses; no cows; no hogs; even the sheep and goats gone; their barren land, which had laid in waste for four long years; many of the loved ones which they had left at home sleeping in the silent graveyards. Any other race of people would have been heartbroken, discouraged, possibly have gone as emigrants to another country more prosperous to look for something to eat and for happiness; but no; they spurned it, and like the men they were, they went into their own homes, some of them pulled a plow while the good wife held it, to plant the seed for sustenance for the body; and in the late hours of the night the good housewife would sit and sew that she and he might have cloth in such shape as to hide their nakedness; they went to work; they went to their churches on Sunday and worshiped their God and asked for His assistance. I say to you my fellow citizens that they were the builders of this Nation and they should demand the right to say what this Nation stands for and what its principles should be. They met the deadliest foes ever known to man; the carpetbagger, the scalawag, the thief, the robber; yea, more than that, the black faces that had been their servants, which God had not made their equal and who will never be their equal or their associates. They proved that they could not be treated thus for they threw off that yoke of thraldom and oppression.

I repeat that no other people on earth would have done that or could have done it, and I repeat that we are the backbone of the American Nation; and if you take the South out of the American Nation to-day she would perish like Rome and Carthage and the other countries that are known now only in the dim pencilings of history. Then why should we not demand our rights? Why should we not stand in the Democratic Convention and say that "This is what we want, and by the eternal God we shall have it"?

And in the Spanish-American War the South sent her troops and stood ready with every man, woman, and child within her borders to defend the United States, and her people and did gallant service when called upon.

If you look to our aid to humanity you will notice that it is the cotton of Dixie that clothes the naked and furnishes beds for the tired workman to rest upon from his toil; it furnishes the swadling cloth which wraps the babe when it is born into the world, and it furnishes the winding sheet for old age when it quits the walks of life; it furnishes the sails for the ships which sail the seven seas and rope to hang traitors in all parts of the world; it makes life more comfortable for the rich and the poor, and it shelters the soldiers on the field and in the camp when war devastates the land; it is made into belts to drive your machinery in your factories. In fact, there is no other one article of production on which our civilization so much depends as it does on cotton.

And if you look still for bravery on the field of battle, I will remind you that it was the Thirtieth Division, composed of troops from South Carolina, North Carolina, and Tennessee, which broke the Hindenburg line and sent William II into his present retreat at Doorn, where he afterwards furnished some enlightening interviews, in one of which he expressed his view that Dixie was the greatest martial air that was ever written—and on that opinion I think he was qualified then to speak as an authority.

And yet there are Democrats to-day, so called, who are cursing the South. Adherents of some of the candidates for the Presidency have been condemning the South for doing things they do not approve of. Let me tell you that the South made this country and handled it for 40 years without a blot on its escutcheon. No charges of graft or corruption. I repeat, let the personal consequences be what they may, I favor the southern delegates to the next Democratic National Convention standing up in the convention and demanding to be represented and demanding that what they favor be written in the platform of the party, and if the two-thirds rule be abolished and their demands are not agreed to, that they withdraw from that convention and hold a Simon-pure Democratic convention and invite all of the citizens of the United States of America to join them in the election of their nominees and not allow mugwumps and camouflaged so-called Democrats to control the Democratic convention; men who do not want the Democrats to succeed but want both Democratic and Republican candidates from their own crowd, so it matters not which gets in, they win and the people lose. As I suggest, if anyone is to bolt, let it be them and not us. Why let delegates from States that never have and never will give the Democrats an electoral vote, name whom we shall vote for and what issues we shall advocate?

If I were writing the Democratic platform of 1928, I would put in it the Constitution of the United States and the bill of rights. Obedience to the Constitution and laws of the United States. Strict enforcement of all the laws to all men alike. Equal rights to all and special privileges to none; this to apply both to the individual and the corporations. Standing upon this platform, the two men as President and Vice President (such as I would nominate had I the power) would bring to the country peace, prosperity, and happiness. I would rather be defeated standing upon these principles and a supporter of the men who would be placed at the head of the ticket than to be elected, realizing that I was sacrificing all that was sacred to the people who made this country and bowing to the whip of the money power. I would rather be defeated than win if winning means the sacrifice of the principles of freedom, justice, and truth.

SIX-YEAR TERM FOR PRESIDENT

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD statements and arguments by notable characters of our country on the subject of six-year term for President. I insert this data as I have been able to collect it without expressing any opinion myself on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The articles are as follows:

Senator Benjamin F. Wade, February 20, 1866, speaking in support of a resolution to limit to one term said:

"The offering of this resolution is no new impulse of mine, for I have been an advocate of the principle contained in it for many years, and I have derived the strong impressions which I entertain on the subject from a very careful observation of the workings of our Government during the period that I have been an observer of them. I believe it has been very rare that we have been able to elect a President of the United States who has not been tempted to use the vast powers intrusted to him according to his own opinions to advance his reelection. And when I say this of the Presidents who have preceded us I say it with no desire to depreciate their merits, but because the Constitution places before them temptations which we can hardly expect human nature to resist, and in the long run it never will resist them. Early in the history of our Government Washington himself, who was exceedingly sagacious respecting its workings, informed the people that in his opinion here was a weakness that ought to be remedied. He saw it early. He saw that a man intrusted with these more than regal powers during the period that he was President might be tempted to use them for his own advancement afterwards. Almost all the Presidents who have come after him have in some way felt, and honestly felt, that some such check was needed upon the ambition of man. It is an injunction of more than human wisdom to pray to be relieved from temptation. If I had time I might trace it through all the preceding administrations and show that this consideration had weighed like gravitation upon the mind of almost every President we have had." (See p. 932, 39th vol., Congressional Globe.)

The case for the six year term amendment is well summed up by the New York Tribune (Republican) in these paragraphs:

"The campaign of 1912 certainly gave all the point needed to the argument that a President can serve the country more satisfactorily if custom does not require him to be a candidate for renomination.

"The lengthening of a President's term to six years would give him a better opportunity to develop his policies and would protect him from the importunities of those who now offer their aid toward renominating him. * * * He could be President in all that the term implies from the day he entered the White House to the day he left it.

"The second-term theory has been responsible for an undue narrowing of the field of choice in electing Presidents. It is not necessary to turn again and again to a few candidates and to ask men to run for President two, three, or four times. * * * There should be no 'trust' in presidential nominees."

On the other hand, Senator Lodge pointed out from the floor of the Senate that a President's ineligibility would not prevent him from using his influence to bring about the election of his own choice as successor. This, several newspaper writers go on to say, might bring about a state of affairs in which the President would be simply a figurehead and some ex-President the power behind the throne. "But the most serious objection to barring a President from reelection," declares the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle (Republican), "lies in the fact that the amendment might deprive the country of his services at a critical time and when it needed them most."

"The framers of the Constitution wisely left the question of deciding how long a President should serve to the discretion of the people, without any restrictions. The adoption of the proposed amendment, instead of being an indication of progress, would be a step backward."

There are plenty of good arguments in the abstract both for and against the plan, remarks the New York Evening Post, "but it is obvious that concrete and even personal motives entered into the Senate's discussion and final action." Senators "had their eyes fixed upon political motives" and "were thinking of individuals."

"No one can doubt this who followed the speeches or noted the alignment on the final roll call. All the Democratic Senators, save one, voted for the amendment. All the Progressive Republican Senators were for the amendment; only 8 or 10 opposed it. Such a division on party or personal grounds is plainly of great significance."—(Literary Digest, Feb. 15, 1913, p. 228.)

Aside from the political reasons thus involved, Senator Lodge saw other reasons for opposing the amendment. He, as well as Senator Bristow and others, referred to the fact that the party to which the President belongs frequently loses control of Congress in the middle of the presidential term. Grant, Hayes, Harrison, Cleveland, Taft, all had this experience. The result is, in such a case, a sort of deadlock for two years. To increase the presidential term to six years makes it probable that we shall frequently have a deadlock of that kind that will last for four years instead of two. Said Senator Lodge of such a situation:

"It is a false position and an unnatural situation, one which is not consonant with our system of Government. It arrests the work of carrying out the will of the people as expressed at the polls. Under the six-year term, I think that that defect of the system, if you choose to call it such—and it is a defect, as it seems to me—would be enhanced and not diminished."

Senator Root, on the other hand, favored the amendment because it makes, in his judgment, for efficiency of government. He put the case thus:

"I think the possibility of renomination and reelection of a President who is in office seriously interferes with the working of our governmental machinery during the last two years of his term; and just about the time he gets to the point of highest efficiency, people in the Senate and in the House begin to figure to try to beat him. You can not separate the attempt to beat an individual from the the attempt to make ineffective the operation of government which that individual is carrying on in accordance with his duty. Legislation in this Congress has been largely dominated for two years past by considerations of that sort; and I should like to see those considerations exiled from these halls." (Current Opinion, March, 1913, pp. 179–180.)

Both the great critics of our Government, De Tocqueville and Bryce, voiced the unfavorable opinion of our present presidential term that is held by a very large number of thoughtful Americans.

De Tocqueville, writing in 1834, with Jackson's reelection of 1832 before him, puts the situation very bluntly:

"When a simple candidate seeks to rise by intrigue, his maneuvers must be limited to a very narrow sphere; but when the Chief Magistrate enters the lists, he borrows the strength of the Government for his own purposes. In the former case, the feeble resources of an individual are in action; in the latter, the state itself, with its immense influence, is busied in the work of corruption and cabal. The private citizen who employs culpable practices to acquire power can act in a manner only indirectly prejudicial to the public prosperity. But if the representative of the executive descends into the combat, the cares of government dwindle for him into second-rate importance, and the success of his election is his first concern. All public negotiations, as well as all laws, are to him nothing more than electioneering schemes; places become the reward of services rendered not to the Nation, but to its chief; and the influence of the Government, if not injurious to the country, is at least no longer beneficial to the community for which it was created.

"It is impossible to consider the ordinary course of affairs in the United States without perceiving that the desire of being reelected is the chief aim of the President; that the whole policy of his Administration, and even his most indifferent measures, tend to this object, and that, especially as the crisis approaches, his personal interest takes the place of his interest in the public good."

Mr. James Bryce, writing 50 years later, puts the same idea in somewhat softer words:

"The fact that he is reeligible once, but (practically) only once, operates unfavorably on the President. He is tempted to play for a renomination by so pandering to active sections of his own party, or so using his patronage to conciliate influential politicians, as to make them put him forward at the next election."

And again:

"The founders of the Southern Confederacy of 1861–1865 were so much impressed by the objections to the present system that they provided that their President should hold office for six years, but not to be reeligible."

"To make him ineligible for reelection would remove the temptation from a President to work for his own ends, and would leave him free to attend to the Presidency during the campaign for nomination. The six-year term would give the country a longer period undisturbed by national campaigns and would give each administration a better opportunity to do the tasks which it has pledged itself to perform.

"But on the other hand there are distinct disadvantages to the proposed amendment. Half way through Mr. Taft's administration he had ceased to represent the will of the electorate. To have continued his administration in office for four years after such a landslide as gave the House of Representatives to the Democratic Party would have been a travesty on popular government. Six years is too long for a President who is out of sympathy with the people who elected him. But for a man who is doing his great task well, six years is too short a term. Our history shows that we as a people believe this, for we have reelected nine Presidents and refused to reelect the same number." (World's Work, March, 1913, pp. 499–500.)

Senator A. B. Cummins, of Iowa, declared for the one term for President principle, in Chicago, August 6, 1923, as follows:

"I always have believed that one term is enough. The great responsibilities and the tremendous strain of the office are more than any man can stand. The President of the United States is required to exert himself almost beyond the bounds of human limitations. His cares and worries break him down. Human frailties are too great to stand the strain which the Presidency places on a man. We should limit the President to one term. It might be made a six-year term, but I am not so sure about that even.

"Our theory of government that the President should be the Chief Executive of the Nation has been extended to make him the political leader of his party. President Harding gave his life to his country and party. His death only proves the magnitude of the position. He was so conscientious and yet so human that it hurt him to hear criticism of his efforts and false presumption of his motives and the things he had in mind." (Journal of Commerce, Aug. 8, 1923, p. 14.)

Senator S. D. FESS, of Ohio, on August 24, 1923, declared for a single six-year term as follows:

"Steps must be taken to lessen the burdens of detail now carried on by the President. This can be partially remedied by the President himself without further legislation.

"The situation is greatly aggravated by the eligibility to reelection. Not infrequently much of the energy of the head of the administration during the first term is expended in getting ready for reelection. It is not his choice, but the case is made out for him by the exigencies of the office and party responsibility.

"Ineligibility for reelection would remove the grounds which to-day makes the President too much the head of the party rather than the head of the Government, no matter how much he might detest the discrimination. The six or seven years is long enough to develop a real policy, and would enable the administration to accomplish better results than two terms of four years each, because of the over emphasis of party success rather than of the general good."—Washington Post, August 25, 1923.

THE SINGLE SIX-YEAR TERM FOR PRESIDENT

Resolved, That the President be elected for one, and only one, term of six years.

[This series of briefs is intended to serve two purposes—to provide debaters of colleges and lyceums with an outline of the best arguments and reading references on topics suitable for public discussion, and, second, to place before legislators and voters a compact synopsis of the chief points in favor and against a question likely to be brought before them for action. The first of the series on the question of the exemption of coastwise shipping from Panama tolls appeared May 29 last. The following has been prepared for us by Miss Edith M. Phelps, compiler of the Debater's Handbook Series.—Editor.]

When the Federal Constitution was adopted one of the last and most difficult problems to be solved was the length of time the President should hold office, and whether or not he should be permitted to stand for reelection. The present four-year term with eligibility for a second term, finally adopted, has been pronounced one of the most important compromises of the Constitution. Since its adoption at least 50 amendments have been proposed extending the length of term to six years, and many of them have stipulated that there should not be a second term. Until recently none of these amendments received serious consideration, although supported by the Whigs and Peoples' Parties, but in 1912 the Democratic Party made the single term a plank in its platform at the Baltimore convention, and in February, 1913, the Senate adopted a resolution providing for a single six-year term. This resolution was killed in the Judiciary Committee of the House, and as President Wilson has recently declared himself opposed to the single-term idea it is practically certain that there will be no further legislation on the subject during his administration.

ARGUMENT FOR THE AFFIRMATIVE

I. There is need for a change in our present system of a four-year term for President with eligibility for reelection.

The four-year term is too short for a President to carry out his policies.

Eligibility for reelection is a prolific source of political corruption. (a) Privilege-seeking corporations support the public officer who will grant them privileges or protect them from deserved prosecution. Large campaign funds have often been supplied by corporations amenable to punishment under the antitrust law. (b) Owing to the immense power of the President, these funds are practically compulsory. The suits of the Government against the Central and Southern Pacific Railroad Companies were dismissed following Harriman's contribution of $250,000.

It has resulted in a use of patronage that has brought the President's office into contempt. (a) The President is regarded as head of his party and not of the Nation. (b) Members of his Cabinet become his political advisers. (c) His appointees must serve him rather than the people and work for his reelection whether or not he or they desire it.

It has forced the President onto the stump to work for reelection. (a) At least one year out of every four is spent in this way. (b) It has resulted in such spectacles as the Roosevelt-Taft contest of 1912.

II. These evils would be corrected by a single term of six years.

"Four years is rather a short time in which to work out great governmental policies. Six years is better."—William H. Taft.

The temptation to secure reelection by the use of patronage or by exerting undue pressure on large corporations would be removed.

It would aid the efficiency of the Executive and center his energy and attention * * * upon what is a purely disinterested public service if he were made ineligible after serving one term.

III. The proposed change would be beneficial both to the people and to the President.

It would preserve the dignity and prestige of the presidential office.

The President would serve the interests of the whole people rather than those of his party.

The people would suffer less frequently from the business instability that surrounds every presidential election.

Greater administrative efficiency would result from the less frequent changes in Cabinet officers and appointive department heads.

IV. The argument that this change would limit the right of the people to choose their Executive has no weight.

It will remove conditions that now permit the bosses and corrupt interests to thwart the wishes of the electorate.

V. The objection that the country would be deprived of the experience and superior fitness of the President often at a time when he is most needed is unsupported.

It is doubtful if a single case exists where a second term has proved superior to the first.

There has never been a time when a reliable and competent man could not be found to succeed the incumbent of a first term.

VI. Reelection as a reward of merit is unworthy.

A man weak enough to work for the sake of public approval is unfit to be President.

A reelection secured under the present methods costs too much in money and self-respect and is not a proof of public approval.

ARGUMENT FOR THE NEGATIVE

I. A single six-year term for President would be futile as a preventive of the evils of patronage.

A retiring President could and probably would use as much power to secure the nomination of his successor or to insure the carrying out of his policies as he would exercise in securing his own nomination. Roosevelt worked to secure Taft's nomination.

The evils of patronage can be nullified by means of an efficient civil service and the presidential primary.

II. Extension to a term of six years, with no opportunity for reelection, would be harmful.

It is taking from the people the right to elect to the Presidency anyone they see fit.

It will remove from the President the incentive to be responsive to the will of the people. He will be more obedient to those to whom he owes his election.

It might operate to deprive the Nation of the services of an Executive just when experience has made him most valuable.

"I can see no propriety in precluding ourselves from the services of any man who on some great emergency shall be deemed universally most capable of serving the public."—George Washington.

The continuity of policies would be destroyed by a change of Presidents every six years.

It would lengthen from two to four years the deadlock often resulting when the President is of one party and one or both Houses of Congress of another.

III. Six years would be too long for a President who does not represent the electorate after election, and too short for a good Executive.

IV. No harm results to the country from presidential elections every four years.

It is an advantage to have the people stirred up to an active consideration of public affairs.

V. There is no more reason why the President should be limited to a single term of six years than Members of Congress. They are as fully exposed to the evils of patronage.

LONGER PRESIDENTIAL TERM CURB TO BURDEN—INDECISION IN EARLY DAYS OF UNITED STATES TO MAKE TENURE SEVEN YEARS WITH INELIGIBILITY TO REELECTION IS RECALLED

By Will P. Kennedy

The sudden passing of President Harding as a martyr to public service has called popular attention again to the burdens of that office, and leaders in Congress are studying measures to afford necessary relief. Senators Cummins, of Iowa, HARRIS, of Georgia, and others already have issued statements on this subject. The Institute for Government Research, which has been making a scientific study of the problems of public administration, also has advocated progressive improvement.

Now comes Senator SIMEON D. FESS, of Ohio, recognized as an authority on government, who says that the most natural proposal is to change the tenure of office to six or seven years and forbid immediate reelection, a change which would require an amendment to the Constitution. "Doubtless early action will be taken by Congress and the States will readily ratify the proposal when once made," Senator FESS says.

An additional proposal is to delegate much of the detail work to others, which could be done by legislation.

The first report in the Constitutional Convention on the tenure of the President was seven years and ineligibility for reelection, Senator FESS recalls. After discussion this was changed to four years with eligibility for reelection. The prevailing argument that led to the change was that the shorter term was protection against an avaricious, ambitious, and dangerous Executive. The discussion ranged from election for one year to life. Much was heard about the despotism of George III and the dangerous power of the King. Hamilton showed the proposed Executive had not a semblance of the power of the British King and was less than the Governor of New York or New Jersey.

ARGUMENT AGAINST REELECTION

Against ineligibility to reelection the argument set forth the following reasons: (1) A diminution of inducement to good behavior in office; (2) it would remove the temptation to sordid views to peculation and to usurpation; (3) the deprivation of the public of the valuable experience acquired in office; (4) the banishment from power of a leader at the time of an emergency that might unexpectedly arise when his leadership would be imperative; and (5) it would operate as a constitutional interdiction of stability on administration.

At the time this line of reasoning was decisive and the tenure was reduced to four years with the privilege of reelection so often as the electors chose. In the 136 years of national growth since that decision many changes have occurred. The relative powers of the Executive show the American President possessed of greater power than any ruler in any other constitutional government, Senator FESS emphasizes. This power has constantly increased until he is the most powerful officeholder of the world, while that of the British King has constantly decreased until he is merely a figurehead. Every year Congress adds by legislation to the President's duties in the enactment of laws authorizing the President thus and so.

Since the war numerous commissions, many permanent in character, have been created. Each looks for appointments and organization to the President, to whom it reports. While much of the detail is handled by heads of departments, bureau chiefs, etc., it all comes back to the President for final decision.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT CITED

As a good example Senator FESS cites the Post Office Department. Here is a Government agency, doing over a half billion dollars of business each year, employing more than 332,000 persons, touching the public at every point. The President has been unable to detach himself from final direction of this great service. As an example of added burdens by legislation witness the President's responsibility for the Federal Budget. The very genius of this legislation was to make the spending department, which is the executive, responsible for expenditures, to be audited by an independent auditor not subject to the Executive, but to Congress, which alone can remove him by impeachment. The operation of this law is most wearing upon the President. Since it went into operation President Harding felt it necessary to call into conference more than once the various bureau chiefs to instruct it not to issue orders. Executive orders have been issued directing many items of detail. Only recently one was issued which required the return of unexpended balances back into the Treasury, instead of, as heretofore, permitting these heads to issue orders that no balance was to be unexpended.

It has been suggested that this burden should be shifted from the President to Cabinet heads. This can not be done safely, Senator FESS and other students of political economy protest, because each Cabinet head is too apt to fall in with the unnecessary demands of departments, especially such as the Army and Navy. As a pertinent example we now have the Navy Department demanding $350,000,000 for next year, which the Budget Director announces must be reduced to at least $90,000,000.

OBJECTIONS ARE OFFERED

A recent suggestion is to have this function given over to the Vice President. To this substantial objections are offered, not the least of which is that under our system at the present time we have no Vice President. Just now the Presiding Office of the Senate, until March 4, 1925, will not be Vice President, but a Senator, who as such votes on all questions, but does not have a deciding vote in case of a tie, as has the Vice President. A better plan, Senator FESS feels, would be to make the Budget Director the head of a bureau, of which the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee would be members, to administer this system.

Steps must be taken to lessen the burdens of detail now carried by the President. This can be partially remedied by the President himself without further legislation. It has not been done in the past because an Executive responsible for his office wishes to exercise the power that goes with the responsibility. He is reluctant to delegate to others even the details in which official influence resides. It serves as the connecting link between leaders of the party in power and the President. The situation is greatly aggravated by the eligibility to reelection.

Not infrequently much of the energy of the head of the administration during the first term is expended in getting ready for reelection. This is not necessarily the wish or judgment of the President. It is not his choice, but the case is made out for him by the exigencies of the office and party responsibility. In the case of our lamented Harding, who never was enamored with the Presidency, who had many times expressed his preference to remain in the Senate, where he was happy and satisfied, and who was so indifferent personally to reelection that a portion of the press persisted that he would not stand for renomination—much of his time had to be given over to leaders and issues, National and State, looking to party success. This involved the President, whether he willed it or not. His own wishes were not and could not be considered. To deny him a renomination or for him to decline it in either case would be tantamount in the public mind to a confession of failure and would render valueless the party nomination to anyone else.

PREVENTS SOUND JUDGMENT

This situation has the tendency, Senator FESS argues, to prevent the exercise of sound and independent judgment in the face of great clamor and enthusiastic advocacy of measures. In the case of Harding's bonus veto tremendous pressure was centered upon him to take that stand. It was placed by leaders on party necessity. A less courageous man would not have taken his position. It was urged that he should not act as a man of independent judgment, but rather as a leader acting in party interest. Herein lies the weakness and liability of reelection, Senator FESS feels.

Ineligibility would remove the grounds which to-day make the President too much the head of the party rather than the head of the Government, no matter how much he might detest the discrimination. The six or seven years' term is long enough to develop a real policy, advocates of this reform contend, and would enable an administration to accomplish better results than two terms of four years each, because of the overemphasis of party success rather than of the general good. This applies to too much legislation fully as much as to the character of legislation.

The objection to ineligibility previously enumerated will not hold. No man who reaches the high office of President needs the spur of reelection to insure good behavior or to guard against usurpation and sordid views. Neither would a longer term deprive the country of experience, but rather insure it.

It has been demonstrated that no man has been so indispensable that when he left office the country did not continue and without much of a jar to its machinery. Our strength is in our system of government, our institutions, our popular loyalty, rather than in the type of leadership. When a change in the latter takes place, the Government goes on.

THE SINGLE SIX-YEAR PRESIDENTIAL TERM

The personal and unpleasant phases of the Roosevelt-Taft rivalry have had one important effect. They have revived and greatly stimulated the demand for a constitutional amendment expressly limiting the President to a single term, while lengthening the term to six years. Several Presidents and other political leaders, as well as historians and teachers of political science, have from time to time advocated such an amendment, but the great public never before paid any attention to this question, treating it as academic and theoretical. The spectacle of the President and the former President touring many States, attacking each other, bandying epithets and insults, has served to arouse many to the practical importance of the change mentioned. Republicans, Democrats, and Independents alike, radicals and conservatives, have been urging it, and resolutions were offered in Congress proposing the amendment. Presidential advisory primaries are "coming" in every section, and they mean, among other things, campaigns of Presidents and ex-Presidents for second, third, or even fourth terms. For, with all its advantages, the direct primary brings the new element of intraparty and interfaction "stump" struggles for nominations. It means two long campaigns instead of one, and one of the campaigns must be fought out within the party fold. This often develops bitterness and passion, and forces governors and even the President to "take off their coats" and talk, plead, shout, and work for nominations.

Under these circumstances the dignity and prestige of the presidential office would seem to require legislation removing either the necessity or the occasion for unseemly wrangling and personal campaigning. An amendment limiting any man to one term of six years in the White House would have that effect. Perhaps similar amendments are desirable to cover the case of State executives.

But the argument for the reform in question is not based merely on considerations relating to dignity, prestige, propriety in high office. There are deeper and better reasons for making the change. Andrew Jackson thought that a single term without reelection for a President under any circumstances would add another safeguard to our liberties. Second terms are not now feared as threats to our liberties; whether third or fourth terms are a menace and danger is a matter upon which opinion differs. But what is undeniable and clear is that second and third terms are incompatible with efficient and single-minded public service. The best of men can not be exposed to constant temptation. The temptation of incumbents to use patronage, to build or strengthen machines, to "mend fences," to make sure of delegates, to control conventions, is too strong to be resisted in most cases.

Nor is this all. Men in office who are candidates for second or third terms may, and generally do, consider bills and policies from the political or personal point of view. Some do it unconsciously, but all do it more or less. The incumbent who is not and can not be a candidate again for the same office is free to deal with public matters on their merits, to use his independent and sincere judgment, to make the public good his sole test or concern. This would be an enormous gain to good government and to "the rule of the people."

The more the question is studied the more vital and progressive the single-term idea is seen to be. There is not the least danger that the supply of presidential "timber" will ever be so restricted that second or third terms will be necessary. No man or set of men is really indispensable to an age or generation or nation. Any vigorous, sound body politic contains many men and women who are fit to do the work of the day. To dip into the great mass of citizens and select administrators and servants with an eye to results, without overestimating any individual or underestimating the virtue and intelligence of his equals, is not always an easy task. But stable and prosperous democracies must endeavor to do this very thing. The single six-year presidential term idea is consonant with the warnings of history and with common sense.

By Joseph P. Tumulty

(Copyright, 1923, by the Washington Star. Reproduction prohibited)

The untimely death of President Harding has brought on a discussion of the duties and burdens of the presidential office. Distinguished public men are now engaged in debating legislation with a view of relieving the President.

The most definite proposal of relief thus far advanced is that an official be designated to act as assistant to the President, upon whom will devolve the ministerial duties in contradistinction to the administrative duties which are inseparable from the office of the Chief Executive.

From my own experience in the White House, covering a period of eight years, three of which encompassed the momentous events of the World War, my opinion is that if the plan of naming an assistant is carried out it will be a mere expedient—a quack remedy—and would not go to the heart of the thing we seek to correct. We can not really lift the burdens which beset the President at every turn until we find a way to free him from those things which worry and harass, those things which take is thoughts away from a proper consideration of the real questions of importance affecting the country's welfare and which daily press upon him for solution.

The trials of the presidency about which we complain are inherent in the tenure of the office itself.

It is only an unfortunate happening like the death of a President that brings us face to face with a stern fact, and that fact is that within a decade the duties of the presidential office have increased in alarming fashion. More and more our people have demanded presidential leadership of an individual and special nature so that with the tremendous growth of the country the varied needs of 48 prosperous and growing States, the administration of the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, and our widely separated insular possessions, the trials and cares of the President have broadened until, with uncomplaining patience and fortitude, the pilot of this great ship of state must be at the helm both day and night, guiding the destinies of 110,000,000 people through dangerous waters. The war itself and its aftermath, which brought new and additional burdens in the way of grave world problems, have drawn greatly upon the energy—physical and mental—of the President. Only a robust and vigorous man can hope to withstand the resultant strain, worry, and anxiety.

SAW HEAVY BURDENS

While in the White House I was fortunately in a position to witness from the "inside" the constant demands upon a war President's time, patience, stamina, and energy. Time and again I saw a sorely burdened President, with the weight of perplexing cares and responsibilities upon him, indulgently listening to the partisan claims of "special pleaders" from Capitol Hill, even at a time when solemn decisions affecting the destiny of the Nation and the world had to be made.

In the face of all these hardships and cares it was a fine, noble, commendable thing, an act characteristic of the geniality and goodness of President Harding, to announce an "open-door policy" at the White House shortly after his inauguration, but I am expressing the opinion now that I then expressed to his friends and advisers that this benevolent, democratic policy could not be satisfactorily carried out without a severe charge upon the energy and time of the President. Such a policy can only result in physical and nervous exhaustion.

MUST BE ACCESSIBLE

Do we realize that while the President is thought to live in lonely isolation at the White House, he is compelled daily to be accessible to 435 Representatives and 96 Senators, not to mention the multitude of diplomats, bankers, business men of affairs, and delegates from all over the country? And added to these burdens the President must be ever ready to confer with the political chieftains of his party, who report to him the condition of his party in all States of the Union.

It is my opinion that if the President of the United States were permitted to handle the purely administrative side of his office, free from the blighting entanglements of politics, his energy and resources could be utilized in the handling of the greater problems, both international and domestic, which confront him. But the fact is—and when I say this it is without disparagement of the distinguished occupants of that high office—too much of the President's time is given to a consideration of problems that, in their last analysis, are purely political and have to do with that side of his administration which should be subordinated to that of weightier measures. In other words, the President is no sooner comfortably seated in the White House than the "urge" of friends is thick upon him to "sell himself and his administration to the country."

He is, of course, always averse to propagandizing and resorting to "swings around the circle." But his intimate friends and advisers impress upon him the wisdom of appealing to the people, explaining that the success of his administration depends upon his going before the country, and so the strategy of "campaigning" is urged upon him.

WOULD LIMIT TERM

The only solution of the problem is to make the term of a President one of four to six years' duration, with the proviso that he shall be ineligible for reelection. Were the President's terms limited in this way, how different from the present atmosphere, surcharged as it is with clamorous demands of oversolicitous friends, would be that in which he would work and labor for the big, exalted ideals of his country. Far removed from the exigencies of politics and the needs of constituencies, of Representatives and Senators, the President would be free to consider calmly and dispassionately the needs of the whole country. His selections to high office would be made regardless of the effect they might have upon the political future of statesmen and politicians.

I recall a story of President Lincoln. It appears that in the early days of the Civil War, when the northern armies were sorely pressed and bad news was reaching the White House, that the President, when seen by an intimate friend visiting him, was walking up and down his study, careworn and greatly disturbed. The friend said, "I wish I could relieve you of your burdens, Mr. President. The news we are getting from the northern armies is discouraging." The President turned and answered, "I am not now thinking of the northern armies. I am wondering whom I will appoint as postmaster at Shelbyville, Ky."

In this story there is illustrated the demands made upon a President of the United States at a time when personalities and the success of this or that individual in the political field should be subservient to the welfare of all.

During my term in the White House a striking incident occurred at one of the most critical stages of the World War, when a bitter controversy arose over the question of who should be appointed postmaster of a small city in northern Ohio. It was at a time when David Lloyd-George was crying out that the World War was a struggle between Von Hindenburg and Wilson. Various factions of the Democratic Party were interested in the selection of a particular man for the northern Ohio post. Many conferences were held. The Postmaster General had refused to recommend for the place the man chosen by the Representative from that district. The Senators from the State were at odds, and thus the controversy, in its finality, with all the soreness and bitterness that had been engendered, had to be passed on to the President for a decision. Feelings must not be hurt in this matter. And thus we found the President at a time when critical war matters pressed upon him compelled to give his time and energy and his vitality to this matter of secondary importance.

It is reported in the daily press that efforts will be made to relieve the Presidency through congressional action by making it unnecessary for him to sign various commissions, grants of public lands, etc. In my opinion, this attempt to relieve the President would be performing but a minor operation where a major one is necessary.

My plea, therefore, is to amend the Constitution so as to provide for a single term of either four or six years. This would leave the President free to carry out his responsibilities to the Nation as a whole and would relieve him of all worries and anxieties incident to a campaign for a second term.

Ex-President Taft, in his book The Presidency, page 4, said:

"I am strongly inclined to the view that it would have been a wiser provision, as it was at one time voted in the convention, to make the term of the President seven years and render him ineligible thereafter. Such a change would give to the Executive greater courage and independence in the discharge of his duties."

JUDGE STORY'S POSITION ON THE SO-CALLED GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] I present an article entitled "Judge Story's position on the so-called general welfare clause," which I ask may be printed as a document and also inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed as a document and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the American Bar Association Journal, July, 1927, p. 363]

PROPOSITIONS SUGGESTED IN CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION ON SUBJECT OF POWERS OF CONGRESS—JUDGE STORY'S VIEW AS SET FORTH IN HIS COMMENTARIES—PRINCIPLES OF INTERPRETATION EMPLOYED AND ONE-SIDED APPLICATION—CONCLUSION THAT THE WORDS "COMMON DEFENSE AND GENERAL WELFARE," ARE MERELY A LIMITATION UPON THE TAXING POWER RESULTS IN ANOMALOUS CONDITION [1]

By HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER, President American Bar Association, 1904–5; Member of Congress; Member of Virginia Bar

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Georgia Bar Association, I make no apology for presenting to you to-day as the subject of my address a technical and abstruse question, because it involves the foundation stone of our form of Government.

The subject to which I invite your attention may be put in this form, "Judge Story's position on the so-called general welfare clause of the Constitution of the United States."

The words "the general welfare" are to be found in two places in the Constitution—in the preamble thereto and in Article I, section 8, clause 1. All reputable writers concur in the statement that the words of the preamble to the Constitution constitute no grants of power, and, therefore, our investigation is confined to the words as found in Article I, section 8, clause 1, which reads,

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

[1] Address delivered before annual meeting of Georgia Bar Association held at Tybee Island on June 2, 1927.

It will be observed by reading the whole section carefully that the above clause is the first of 18 clauses, placed consecutively one after another, separated by a semicolon from each other, each beginning with the word "To" with a capital "T," and all 18 clauses constituting one sentence, the last clause of which is not a separate grant of power like the others, but is intended to perfect and enlarge the previous 17 grants of power to Congress. It is known as the coefficient clause, and reads:

The Congress shall have power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

To a proper understanding of the question it is proper to examine the propositions suggested in the Constitutional Convention on the subject of the powers of Congress.

Mr. Hamilton's plan on the powers of Congress provided that the Legislature of the United States should have "powers to pass all laws whatsoever, subject to the negative hereafter mentioned," which negative was the power of the Executive to have a negative on all laws about to be passed.

Mr. Randolph's plan proposed Congress should have all powers which it possessed under the Confederation, "and, moreover, to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation," etc.

Mr. Patterson's plan provided that Congress should have all powers which it possessed under the Confederation and power "to pass acts for raising a revenue, by levying a duty or duties on all goods, etc., imported into any part of the United States, etc., and by postage on all letters * * * to be applied to such Federal purposes as they shall deem proper and expedient, to pass acts for the regulation of trade and commerce, as well as with foreign nations as with each other," etc.

Mr. Pinckney's plan, offered on the 29th of May, 1787, three days after the convention met, provided: "The Legislature of the United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;

"To regulate commerce," etc.;

"To borrow money," etc.;

"To establish post offices"; containing in all 21 specific grants of power, the last of which reads, "and to make all laws for carrying the foregoing powers into execution."

Pinckney's plan, as introduced, on this subject came out of the convention on the 15th of September in form and substance pretty much as it was introduced on the 29th of May, with this change, that on the 4th of September there was added to clause 1, after the word "excises," the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

Hamilton's fight in the Convention was to give to Congress unlimited power. Pinckney's plan prescribed definite powers to Congress. This was the struggle of the Convention, and while Hamilton's plan, on this clause, was practically voted down six times in the Convention, either directly or by voting up a distinct opposing proposition, his followers have struggled to show that the words "the general welfare" put into clause 1, section 8, Article I, really mean what was specifically rejected by the Convention six times. (See speech of HENRY ST. GEORGE TUCKER—Maternity bill—delivered in House of Representatives March 3, 1926, p. 15 et seq.)

I

Judge Story's position on this subject can best be seen from quoting his own words on the subject, beginning at Sec. 906 of his Commentaries, page 628, volume 1:

"SEC. 906. The first clause of the eighth section is in the following words: 'The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense, and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises, shall be uniform throughout the United States.'

"SEC. 907. Before proceeding to consider the nature and extent of the power conferred by this clause, and the reasons, on which it is founded, it seems necessary to settle the grammatical construction of the clause, and to ascertain its true meaning. Do the words, 'to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises,' constitute a distinct, substantial power, and the words, 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States,' constitute another distinct and substantial power? Or are the latter words connected with the former, so as to constitute a qualification upon them? This has been a topic of political controversy and has furnished abundant materials for popular declamation and alarm. If the former be the true interpretation, then it is obvious, that under the color of the generality of the words to 'provide for the common defense and general welfare,' the Government of the United States is, in reality, a government of general and unlimited powers, notwithstanding the subsequent enumeration of specific powers; if the latter be the true construction, then the power of taxation only is given by the clause, and it is limited to objects of a national character, 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare.' But see e Contra, section 923.

"SEC. 908. The former opinion has been maintained by some of great ingenuity and liberality of views. The latter has been the generally received sense of the Nation, and seems supported by reasoning at once solid and impregnable. The reading, therefore, which will be maintained in these commentaries, is that which makes the latter words a qualification of the former; and this will be best illustrated by supplying the words which are necessarily to be understood in this interpretation. They will then stand thus: 'The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, in order to pay the debts and to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States'; that is, for the purpose of paying the public debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. In this sense Congress has not an unlimited power of taxation; but it is limited to specific objects—the payment of the public debts and providing for the common defense and general welfare. A tax, therefore, laid by Congress for neither of these objects would be unconstitutional, as an excess of its legislative authority. In what manner this is to be ascertained, or decided, will be considered hereafter. At present the interpretation of the words only is before us; and the reasoning, by which that already suggested has been vindicated, will now be reviewed.

"SEC. 909. The Constitution was, from its very origin, contemplated to be a frame of a national government of special and enumerated powers, and not general and unlimited powers. This is apparent, as will be presently seen, from the history of the proceedings of the convention which framed it; and it has formed the admitted basis of all legislative and judicial reasoning upon it ever since it was put into operation by all who have been its open friends and advocates, as well as by all who have been its enemies and opponents. If the clause, 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States,' is construed to be an independent and substantive grant of power, it not only renders wholly unimportant and unnecessary the subsequent enumeration of specific powers, but it plainly extends far beyond them and creates a general authority in Congress to pass all laws which they may deem for the common defense or general welfare. Under such circumstances the Constitution would practically create an unlimited national government. The enumerated powers would tend to embarrassment and confusion, since they would only give rise to doubts as to the true extent of the general power or of the enumerated powers.

"SEC. 910. One of the most common maxims of interpretation is (as has been already stated), that, as an exception strengthens the force of a law in cases not excepted, so enumeration weakens it in cases not enumerated. But how could it be applied with success to the interpretation of the Constitution of the United States if the enumerated powers were neither exceptions from nor additions to the general power to provide for the common defense and general welfare? To give the enumeration of the specific powers any sensible place or operation in the Constitution, it is indispensable to construe them as not wholly and necessarily embraced in the general power. The common principles of interpretation would seem to instruct us that the different parts of the same instrument ought to be so expounded as to give meaning to every part which will bear it. Shall one part of the same sentence be excluded altogether from a share in the meaning; and shall the more doubtful and indefinite terms be retained in their full extent, and the clear and precise expressions be denied any signification? For what purpose could the enumeration of particular powers be inserted, if these and all others were meant to be included in the preceding general power? Nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars. But the idea of an enumeration of particulars which neither explain nor qualify the general meaning, and can have no other effect than to confound and mislead, is an absurdity, which no one ought to charge on the enlightened authors of the Constitution. It would be to charge them either with premeditated folly or premeditated fraud.

"SEC. 911. On the other hand, construing this clause in connection with, and as a part of the preceding clause, giving the power to lay taxes, it becomes sensible and operative. It becomes a qualification of that clause, and limits the taxing powers to objects for the common defense or general welfare. It then contains no grant of any power whatsoever; but it is a mere expression of the ends and purposes to be effected by the preceding power of taxation."

II

The argument of Judge Story (contained in sections 909 and 910), which demolishes the theory of the Hamiltonians, shows conclusively that the words "the common defense and general welfare," as found in this section, constitute no substantive grant of power; and he further denies that these words contain any power whatsoever. His argument is irresistible in its conclusion to any unbiased mind, but it furnishes an equally powerful argument against his claim that the words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare" are merely words of limitation on the taxing power, for his argument for the latter claim is based upon the relationship of those words solely to the first clause of section 8, and excludes their relationship to the other 17 distinct clauses in that sentence. He would thus exclude these words "common defense and general welfare" from any participation in the construction of the whole sentence. How can that consist with his language in sections 909 and 910?

"SEC. 910. * * * The common principles of interpretation would seem to instruct us, that the different parts of the same instrument ought to be so expounded, as to give meaning to every part, which will bear it. Shall one part of the same sentence be excluded altogether from a share in the meaning; and shall the more doubtful and indefinite terms be retained in their full extent, and the clear and precise expressions be denied any significance?"

And yet, to maintain his argument, the doubtful and indefinite terms "common defense and general welfare" are allowed to stand unconnected, unchallenged, and unaffected by the clear and precise expressions which follow. Or how can his argument be maintained against the declaration in section 910?

"Nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase, and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars."

If this expression controlled Judge Story in demolishing the Hamiltonian claim of a substantive power in the words "common defense and general welfare," why should not this same expression of his, on like principle, apply in the attempt to make them merely words of limitation on the taxing power? For this last quotation from Judge Story, section 910, shows that there is an indissoluble bond of dependence, that can not be broken, between the general expression "common defense and general welfare" and the subsequent explicit grants of power contained in the same sentence in section 8. The subsequent enumerated powers were sufficient to convince the learned judge that these general and indefinite terms could not be regarded as absorbing or nullifying the specifically enumerated grants. But by taking the two together, and giving to each that meaning which a just and reasonable construction justifies, he destroys the Hamiltonian argument; but alas, it is fatal to his argument holding these words to be merely words of limitation, for in it he rejects the basic foundation of his former argument. His argument showing that the Hamiltonian claim, that these words "common defense and general welfare" constituted a substantive grant of power, was based chiefly on the grammatical construction of the whole sentence, and he invoked two principles that must be admitted by all as sound, which have been quoted in sections 909 and 910; the first that the different parts of the same sentence ought to be so expounded as to give meaning to every part which will bear it, and, with striking emphasis, he asks a question which can be answered only in one way,

"Shall one part of the same sentence be excluded altogether from a share in the meaning; and shall the more doubtful and indefinite terms be retained in their full extent, and the clear and precise expressions be denied any signification?"

and, second, a principle recognized by all authors and writers.

"That nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase, and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars."

These are two principles general in their application to all sentences and a fortiori when applied to one sentence, must be followed in the different construction of the same sentence; but this, Judge Story does not do, but rejects the principle that all parts of the same sentence must be considered for its proper construction, which he invoked so triumphantly in overthrowing the Hamiltonian claim of a substantive power in these words, and holds that these words "common defense and general welfare" have no relation to any part of the sentence, except the first clause of section 8. Is it consistent or logical that a principle adopted in solving the one construction of a sentence should be rejected in the other? And if a general expression, as he holds, may be qualified and explained by subsequent specific grants or qualifications in the subsequent parts of the same sentence, why should 17 specific and independent grants to Congress be denied any place in aiding in another construction of the same sentence. In his argument against the Hamiltonian theory, Judge Story has forged a weapon that must, in the minds of all intelligent people, prove fatal to that theory. It is beyond question sound, reasonable, conclusive, and irresistible; but that same weapon forged by his own hand, conceived and worked out in his own brain, will, to the same minds, prove fatal to his claim that the words "common defense and general welfare" are only limitations upon the taxing power, for in reaching this conclusion he has been forced to repudiate the basic principle that made his former argument irresistible. Byron has well interpreted Judge Story's position in the lines:

"So the struck eagle streached upon the plain,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
Viewed his own feather on the fatal dart,
That helped to wing the shaft that quivered in his heart."

III

The argument from section 913, et seq., to sustain the position that these words constitute only a limitation on the taxing power, is labored and unsatisfactory; it is a repudiation, distinct and complete, of the whole fabric of his former argument in which he unhorses the Hamiltonians who hold that these words constitute a substantive grant of power. In sections 909, 910, 911, he builds up what seems to be an impregnable wall of logic, and in sections 912 and 913, et seq., he seeks to batter down the wall he has builded. The two arguments must be read carefully together to see their inconsistency. In the second, he refuses to recognize the principles of his first argument and ruthlessly "bastardizes his own issue." See his language in section 913:

"It is no sufficient answer to say that the clause ought to be regarded, merely as containing 'general terms explained and limited by the subjoined specifications and therefore requiring no critical attention, or studied precaution' (President Madison's letter to Mr. Stevenson, November 27, 1830); because it is assuming the very point in controversy, to assert that the clause in connected with any subsequent specifications."

Here he asserts that there is no connection between the clause "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" and the subsequent grants of power in the same sentence. Turn to section 910 and read what he says:

"Shall one part of the same sentence be excluded altogther from a share in the meaning; and shall the more doubtful and indefinite terms be retained in their full extent, and the clear and precise expressions be denied any signification? For what purpose could the enumeration of particular powers be inserted, if these and all others were meant to be included in the preceding general power?"

Here he frankly states that every part of a sentence must be construed with other parts to secure a reasonable meaning, and that the words, "common defense and general welfare" are connected with every part of this sentence, with every specific grant of power; while in section 913 he claims that they are connected only with the first clause.

Again, he says in section 913:

"It is not said to 'provide for the common defense and general welfare in manner following, viz,' which would be the natural expression to indicate such an intention. But it stands entirely disconnected from every subsequent clause, both in sense and punctuation, and is no more a part of them than they are of the power to lay taxes."

In this he is asserting, again, that there is no connection between these specific grants of power in this whole sentence, involving the whole of section 8, though he has based his argument against the Hamiltonian claim upon the fact that the words "the common defense and general welfare" must be considered in relation to every part of the sentence for its proper construction. Section 8 of Article I constitutes one sentence. The 18 grants of power are distinct and separate, and the words in the first clause, "the common defense and general welfare," he says in his first argument, must be construed with reference to the whole sentence. The clauses are "distinct as the billows," but the sentence is "one as the sea." It is seen in this last quotation, also, that the learned judge claims that the omission of the words "in the manner following, viz," following these words in clause 1, is fatal to our pretenses. In section 910 he uses this language:

"Nothing is more natural or common than first to use a general phrase and then to qualify it by a recital of particulars."

He does not say here that it is usual to follow it by a videlicet, as follows, or in manner following, to wit.

A simple example will serve to clarify this question. Here is a contract which reads:

"This contract between William Johnston and Warren Grice, of the city of Macon, Ga., witnesseth:

"That said Johnston agrees to build for the said Grice a large, commodious, and convenient residence on a specific lot in said city of the best material in all respects; the house to contain 10 rooms, of which 6 are to be bedrooms, a dining room, parlor, kitchen, and pantry, and 4 bathrooms, three upstairs and one downstairs; the dining room to be 20 by 30 feet in dimensions, of oak floor; the parlor to be 25 by 35 feet, of maple floor; and on his part said Grice agrees to pay said Johnston, on the completion of the building, the sum of $25,000."

Under this contract Johnston has agreed to build for Grice "a large, commodious, and convenient house of the best material in all respects" in the first clause of the contract; but this clause has been modified by subsequent enumerations which explain what is meant by "a large, commodious, and convenient house." Can Johnston meet the demands of this contract by building Grice a house with a dining room 15 by 20 feet, a parlor 20 by 20 feet, with 8 instead of 6 bedrooms, and with 2 instead of 4 bathrooms, with dining-room floor of North Carolina pine and the parlor floor of oak? Is it not perfectly clear, under the proper construction of the contract, that the unlimited discretion conveyed in the words "a large, commodious, and convenient house, of the best materials in all respects," is explained and modified by the subsequent words giving the number and size of rooms, character of floors, and so forth? The real meaning of this contract is that Johnston has agreed to build Grice a house with a certain number of rooms; certain number of bathrooms, with the floors of the rooms specified of certain material, the size of each clearly indicated, and that when this is done the house will be regarded by Grice as "a large, commodious, and convenient house." In other words, the specific enumerations constitute the real contract, and the words in the first clause are merely words of general import. And so "the common defense and general welfare "are explained in their meaning by the enumerated clauses that follow in the same sentence.

IV

In discussing the argument made by his opponents that these words were merely general terms, that were explained by the subsequent specific enumerations of grants of power, each involving and being a part of the common defense or general welfare of the United States, Judge Story says in section 912:

"But there is a fundamental objection to the interpretation thus attempted to be maintained, which is, that it robs the clause of all efficacy and meaning. No person has a right to assume that any part of the Constitution is useless, or is without a meaning; and a fortiori no person has a right to rob any part of a meaning, natural and appropriate to the language in the connection in which it stands."

Now, it may be admitted that these words would have a natural and appropriate meaning as a qualification or limitation on the taxing power if this first clause was a complete sentence, but it is only one clause of a sentence of 18 clauses, and his argument heretofore, as I have shown, is that these words have a relation to every part of this sentence and must be considered in the construction of each clause of the sentence, and hence the error of his assumption.

But Judge Story also assumes that there must be a limitation on the taxing power in the Constitution in order to reach his conclusion; but why should there be? His assumption of such necessity is to "force the answer," as the children used to say at school when they lacked a link to make the solution of their problem complete. Suppose the words "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" had been omitted from this clause—and they were not put in the clause until September 4—would there have been no limitation on the taxing power? It is recognized by all authorities that the taxing power of a government, without special limitation or specification, extends only to the execution of the functions or powers of that government. Judge Miller, in Loan Association v. Topeka (20 Wall. 655), has laid down this principle as to our own Government, declaring that all taxation must be for public purposes—i. e., to carry out the powers granted to the Government—and the syllabus of the case (5) says:

"Among these is the limitation of the right of taxation, that it can only be used in aid of a public object, an object which is within the purpose for which governments are established."

Judge Cooley (Cooley on Taxation, 2d edition, p. 110) says on this subject:

"GENERAL EXPENSES OF GOVERNMENT

"Every government must provide for its general expenses by taxation, and in these are to be included the cost of making provision for those public needs or conveniences for which by express law or general usage it devolves upon the particular government to supply. As regards the Federal Government, a general outline of these is to be found in the Federal Constitution. That Government is charged with the common defense of the Union, and for that defense it may raise and support armies, create and maintain a navy, build forts and arsenals, construct military roads, etc. It has a like power over the general subject of post offices, post roads, and over other subjects enumerated in the Federal Constitution and subjected to its authority. It may contract debts and must provide for their payment. For all national purposes it may levy taxes, and its power in so doing to select the subjects of taxation and to determine the rate and the methods is as full and complete as can exist in any sovereignty whatsoever, with the exceptions which are provided by the Constitution itself."

So that if these words had never been put into Article I, section 8, clause 1, the taxing power would have been limited to carrying out the powers granted by the Constitution to the Federal Government and no other. But the framers of the Constitution left this matter in no doubt, for the eighteenth clause of this section 8, after enumerating one by one 17 grants of power, reads:

"The Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

This coefficient clause therefore constitutes the constitutional limitation on the taxing power of Congress; but any law passed by Congress to carry out an express grant must be necessary and bona fide appropriate to the end. So Congress, desiring to carry out some regulation of commerce that requires an appropriation, may by law appropriate money for it under this coefficient clause, for the end is legitimate and the appropriation is bona fide appropriate to the end.

So as to every other grant of power to Congress that may require money.

And so we find that Judge Story's interpretation that these words constitute a natural and appropriate limitation on the power to lay taxes is useless and unnecessary, as the true interpretation is supplied by the Constitution itself in the coefficient clause, which gives to Congress in the disposition of money raised by taxation the right to dispose of it wherever necessary and wherever bona fide appropriate to carry out a power granted by the Constitution to the Congress. Why, then, should Judge Story supply an interpretation which the Constitution itself clearly supplies? Why provide a limitation upon the taxing power when the Constitution itself has clearly provided it in this eighteenth clause, known as the coefficient clause?

V

But it is clear that these words do not constitute a limitation upon the taxing power of Congress as contended by Judge Story but an expansion of its taxing power, as will be shown. If these words had been omitted, the limitation upon the taxing power supplied to Congress in the coefficient clause limits Congress in its appropriations to "the foregoing powers," that is, the enumerated national powers; whereas, under Judge Story's construction, that slight limitation is brushed aside; and wherever sympathy, or emotion, or the political bias of Congress may conclude that an appropriation will be for the general welfare, whether it be to carry out a national power, a local power, or a power exclusively in the States, Congress may do it; a power as broad as the boundless seas and as infinite as the firmament, embracing the whole field of human desires and human cupidity, with no guide but its own will; with no restraint but its own discretions; with no Constitution but its own fiat, and no law but its own power.

The proposition of Mr. Hamilton would have given Congress unlimited power to create receptacles and then fill them up with appropriations from the Treasury. Judge Story stoutly denies such power as intended to be given in the Constitution, but claims the power in Congress to appropriate money to any persons, associations, or corporations if in their opinion it would conduce to the general welfare of the people. Under this view the courts are without power to obstruct any such measure, as it is to be left to Congress alone to determine and not the courts. Judge Story denies that the Hamiltonian claim could be sound because it would make of the Government one of unlimited powers, which he says, as we have seen, was never intended by the convention; but if Congress is without restraint in selecting objects of appropriation, and the tax power is likewise unlimited, is it not apparent that the union of these two unlimited powers in Congress creates a government of unlimited power? The roads may be different that lead to the same end, but if the end, a government of unlimited power, which Judge Story well says was never intended be the same, his construction must be rejected, as it leads inevitably to the same result, if not to a worse result.

But Judge Story's construction of these words as a limitation of the taxing power of Congress is subject to a fatal objection for another reason. The general welfare of the United States is made up of the welfare of the people in the several States, in relation to some particular object. Now, while this object may permeate the whole country in the welfare of the people it may be a subject which, under the Constitution, must be regulated by the States and therefore denied to the Federal Government, for it is well known that Congress can legislate only under the powers granted to it, while all else, under the tenth amendment, is left to the several States for their determination. So that the general welfare may be, and often is, claimed in a subject which is confessedly within the power of the States alone to control. If the special general welfare sought to be obtained is included in the power to regulate commerce, or establish post offices or post roads, or any of the granted powers, Congress clearly has the power to appropriate for it under the coefficient clause but not under the general welfare clause; but if the object should be education, or maternity, or vocational rehabilitation, or any other subject under the exclusive control of the States it must be denied, as Congress has no power to control those subjects.

If, therefore, the object selected by the Congress for legislation under the general welfare is under the Constitution subject to the control of the States, Congress has no power to legislate or to appropriate money for such object, for if the Constitution gives the power over this subject to the States, of course the act of Congress is void. Take, for instance, the proposed educational bill, the subject of which under the Constitution is reserved to the States for their determination; in a case of this character it may well be that the general welfare of the United States would be promoted by the education of every child in every State in the Union, but since the States alone have the power to control education, Congress, of course, can not assume that duty. The tenth amendment settles this question. Judge Marshall's statement in Gibbon v. Ogden can not be repeated too often. It stands as the irrefutable argument against the doctrine of appropriating money for the general welfare of the United States. In Gibbon v. Ogden, in discussing the powers of taxation, the power belonging to the States and the Federal Government alike, he uses this language:

"Congress is authorized to lay and collect taxes, to pay debts, etc. This does not interfere with the power of the States to tax for the support of their own governments, nor is the exercise of that power by the States the exercise of any portion that is granted to the United States.

"In imposing taxes for State purposes they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do.

"Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive power of the States."

And what purposes or objects are within the exclusive power of the States? Everything except those granted to Congress in the Constitution. This simple statement of the great Chief Justice, who did more to expound the Constitution than any man who ever sat upon the Supreme bench, is the complete and final answer to the absurd claim of the existence of a general-welfare clause, under which, it is claimed, Congress can appropriate money for any cause that they may deem for the general welfare of the people of the United States.

This clear, succinct statement of the great Chief Justice was followed by Mr. Justice Wayne in delivering the unanimous opinion of the court (1842) in the case of Dobbins v. The Commissioners of Erie County (16 Peters, pp. 448, 449) where he says:

"The revenue of the United States is intended by the Constitution to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; to be expended, in particular, in carrying into effect the laws made to execute all the express powers, 'and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States.'"

It is interesting to note that Judge Story was one of the judges who concurred in this unanimous opinion of the court rendered in 1842 by Justice Wayne, and it may properly be construed as the mature judgment of that great jurist, to which he had come in the later years of his life and which is in such contrast with the views expressed by him in his Commentaries, which were published to the country some nine years before, where he upholds the power of Congress to appropriate for any purpose which they themselves may deem for the good of the people of the country.

Chief Justice Chase delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall., 541, U. S. Rept.; 75 U. S. Rept. 541), after discussing the full and ample power of taxation given to Congress by the Constitution, follows Chief Justice Marshall by declaring:

"There are, indeed, certain virtual limitations arising from the principles of the Constitution itself. It would undoubtedly be an abuse of the power if so exercised as to impair the separate existence and independent self-government of the States, or if exercised for ends inconsistent with the limited grants of power in the Constitution."

Could language be clearer or stronger?

As applicable in a general way to this question the vigorous discussion of Chief Justice Taft of the power and objects of taxation by the Federal Government, as set forth in his opinion in the child-labor tax case (359 U. S., p. 38–39), may be consulted with interest.

The above cases show that Chief Justice Marshall's statement was indorsed by Chief Justice Taney and Chief Justice Chase. Three Chief Justices of the Supreme Court who, if not the greatest who ever sat on that bench, at least may rest secure in the fact that no greater can successfully be mentioned; three judges than whom no greater ever deserved the wreath of immortality; and to these must be added the names of those who concurred with Justice Wayne in the case of Dobbins v. The Commissioners of Erie County, supra. They were, in addition to Chief Justice Taney, Justices Story, Thompson, McLean, Baldwin, Catron, McKinley, and Peter V. Daniel, and those also who concurred with Chief Justice Chase in Veazie v. Fenno, supra, namely, Swayne, Miller, Field, Grier, and Clifford; a marvelous array of the brightest luminaries in the whole scope of our judicial history. Judge Story's concurrence in Chief Justice Chase's statement that "the revenue of the United States is intended by the Constitution * * * to be expended, in particulars, in carrying into effect the laws made to execute all the express powers" of the Government deserves a passing notice, for it reflects the high judicial character of that great judge who has enjoyed the reputation with the bar of the United States of being one of the most learned men who ever sat upon that bench. His commentaries on the Constitution, in course of preparation for years, were finally given to the public in 1833. His views on this subject I have given in this address and have sought to controvert his conclusions.

The Madison papers, the most complete compendium of the Constitution, were not printed until 1840. They were, therefore, not available to Story, the commentator, in 1833, but were open to Story, the judge, in 1842, when this opinion was delivered, and with a judicial instinct worthy of Chief Justice Chase, who, as statesman, created the legal-tender notes in order to save his country, but as judge was compelled to deny their validity to compel a creditor to take from his debtor less than he had received, Judge Story, with equal courage, was not afraid or ashamed to renounce his former opinions when he found them based on error.

Judge Story's conclusion that these words, "common defense and general welfare," are simply a limitation upon the taxing power of the Government while denying to them any constructive power, results in this anomalous condition, that the Federal Government, under these words, can construct or create no instrumentality unless the power be granted in the Constitution, but may yet appropriate the money raised by taxation to such organization constructed by the States or other power; that is, that while the Congress could not create a university in every State, it would have the power, if in its opinion it was for the "general welfare," to appropriate money to run them after being established by the States.

But an analysis of these words will show that this can not be admitted, for look again at these words critically—"to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Note the words in this phrase, "of the United States." Why were they inserted? Suppose this clause read:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, etc., * * * to pay the debts * * * of the United States."

What is the meaning of the words "United States" in that clause? Would it mean to pay the debts of the people of the United States or pay the debts of the Government of the United States? The words "the people" are omitted, and in this form clearly it would mean the debts of the United States Government. The words "United States" would therefore mean the Government of the United States, under the Constitution. Now, supply the omitted words in the above paragraph, "and provide for the common defense and general welfare"; must not the words "United States" mean the same as to both the payment of debts and common defense and general welfare? They are connected by the conjunction "and." So that this careful examination of the sentence shows beyond question that the common defense and general welfare contemplated was not that of the people of the United States but of the Government of the United States, and therefore, when under this construction, an appropriation of $100,000,000 is asked for out of the Treasury, to be applied to education in the States, there is no authority for it even under this supposed general-welfare clause, because it specifically declares that the debts to be paid and the welfare to be secured are not those of the people of the United States but of the Government of the United States. We find this view powerfully confirmed in an address of Mr. George Ticknor Curtis, a scholarly student of the Constitution, delivered before the Georgetown University Law School in February, 1886.

II

IS CONGRESS OR THE CONSTITUTION THE INTERPRETER OF THE WORDS "THE COMMON DEFENSE AND GENERAL WELFARE OF THE UNITED STATES"?—DANGEROUS UNION OF POWERS IN CONGRESS RESULTS FROM JUDGE STORY'S VIEW—EMINENT AUTHORITIES OPPOSED TO HIS POSITION—THE PROPER CONSTRUCTION—WHY THE WORDS WERE INCORPORATED

VI

If Judge Story's interpretation of this clause be admitted, namely, that these words are merely limitations on the taxing power of Congress, the real difficulty is still left unsolved, for he assumes, once it is granted that they are merely words of limitation on the taxing power, that Congress is clothed with the power of determining what is the common defense and general welfare. But this is mere assumption. If no definition or description of these words is found in the Constitution, and if the Constitution failed to give their meaning, there might be some reason to adopt his suggestion; but if there be a reasonable construction of the Constitution defining these words, why should that reasonable construction be set aside to give to Congress an unlimited control over the whole Government, which Judge Story has so eloquently decried? What is the common defense? What is the general welfare of the United States? Who is to determine this common defense and general welfare? What authority, under the Constitution, has the power to say what objects come within these two terms? If taxation can be had legitimately to meet the demands of these two extensive terms where shall taxation end? What are its limits? If the objects to which taxation can be applied are unlimited, then the union of the power of taxation with the power of determining the objects to which it may be applied constitute the most tremendous engine of oppression of a free people ever conceived of by the ingenuity of man. Yet, Judge Story assumes that Congress has the power to determine what is the common defense and what is the general welfare of the United States, and that when Congress has determined that a certain object is for the common defense or the general welfare, it may appropriate the tax money which it is authorized to levy, for that purpose. This unites in Congress two great powers, dangerous because unlimited, the one to select the objects of its favor, and the other the power to appropriate money from the Treasury for such objects.

The unlimited power to tax and the unlimited power to determine their benefactions, are, by Judge Story, united in the Congress, and yet Judge Story (sec. 909) affirms that this Government was intended to be a Government of limited powers only. The relief from this illogical impasse, into which the learned judge would drive us, is found in the simple examination of Article I, section 8, clause 1, and the 17 succeeding clauses, constituting the whole sentence. The manner in which this article was considered and adopted in the convention, the care with which each grant was discussed and adopted, constituting the limitations on the powers of Congress, show conclusively that no one power, which could submerge all other powers, was ever intended by the framers of the Constitution.

A close examination of this first clause and the relation of the words "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" to the whole sentence will result in clarifying the situation. Clearness often follows confusion in construing a sentence by changing the location of its paragraphs, not the words, and will often bring out the real meaning of a sentence which seemed cloudy and uncertain. Judge Story says in order properly to understand this clause, the words "in order to" should be inserted before the words "to pay the debts" (sec. 969); and as we are considering merely the phrase "the common defense and general welfare," we will omit the words "to pay the debts" in the changes suggested below of clause 1 of this section. By a change of the collocation of the paragraphs, without the change of words or punctuation, clause 1 of section 8 above would read:

"The Congress (in order to) provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Under this arrangement, the first, second, third, fourth, and so on down through the 18 clauses would read as follows:

"The Congress * * * (in order to) provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States shall have power to borrow money on the credit of the United States."

The third clause:

"The Congress * * * (in order to) provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, etc."

The fourth clause:

"The Congress * * * (in order to) provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States shall have power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, etc."

And so on through all of the 18 clauses. This form of the sentence, which involves no change in the paragraphs or words or punctuation of these clauses as adopted by the convention on the 4th of September, and which is now in the Constitution of the United States, shows conclusively that the object of the framers of this clause was to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States by giving Congress the powers granted in the 18 enumerated powers.

Four men of great eminence have shown that the 18 specific grants of power in this sentence constitutes the whole of section 8 constituted the general welfare which the Federal convention had determined to be necessary for the Government of the United States, and no more.

Judge Cooley in his Constitutional Limitations, page 11, says:

"The general purpose of the Constitution of the United States is declared by its founders (in the preamble of the Constitution) to be 'to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity.' To accomplish these purposes, the Congress is empowered by the 8th section of Article I:

"(1) To lay and collect taxes," etc.

"(2) To borrow money," etc.

"(3) To regulate commerce," etc., etc.

enumerating the 17 specific grants of power in this section. (See also the same author, Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, pp. 11 and 106.) Here Judge Cooley first quotes the preamble of the Constitution, which declares that one of the objects for the formation of the Government is to provide for the common defense and general welfare, and adds the significant words that the Constitution has provided a means for accomplishing that by the Federal Government, and that is by laying taxes, borrowing money, regulating commerce, and adopting the 17 specific grants as that "common defense" and that "general welfare" which the convention concluded was sufficient for the purpose.

James Wilson, a member of the Federal Convention, afterwards on the Supreme Court of the United States, has indorsed this view most strongly (Wilson's Works, Andrews, Vol. II, pp. 56–59):

"Once more, at this time: The National Government was intended to 'promote the general welfare.' For this reason Congress has power to regulate commerce with the Indians and with foreign nations and to promote the progress of science and of useful arts by securing for a time to authors and inventors an exclusive right to their compositions and discoveries.

"An exclusive property in places fit for forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings, and an exclusive legislation over these places, and also for a convenient distance, over such district as may become the seats of the National Government—such exclusive property and such exclusive legislation will be of great public utility, perhaps of evident public necessity. They are therefore vested in Congress by the Constitution of the United States.

"For the exercise of the foregoing powers and for the accomplishment of the foregoing purpose, a revenue is unquestionably indispensable. That Congress may be enabled to exercise and accomplish them, it has power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises.

"The powers of Congress are, indeed, enumerated; but it was intended that those powers thus enumerated should be effectual and not nugatory. In conformity to this consistent mode of thinking and acting Congress has power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution every power vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any of its officers or departments."

The learned judge gives no hint in this statement that the "general welfare" was anything more than a description of those powers which were subsequently enumerated in the Constitution. There is not an intimation in his statement that Congress has any other power than those which are enumerated, and that the words "to provide for the general welfare" are merely a general description of that welfare, which is to be accomplished by carrying out certain enumerated powers.

Hon. Benjamin J. Sage, of New Orleans, some years ago published a remarkable book entitled "The Republic of Republics." It is a wonderful repository of most interesting criticism and commentaries on the Constitution. In discussing this question he affirms what has already been stated, that oftentimes the meaning of a sentence may be clarified by changing the collocation of the clause without the change of the words or punctuation, and adopting this method he arrives at the same result which Judge Cooley and Judge Wilson have arrived at, and he says that this section with those changes would read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The Congress (in order to) pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, shall have power—

"To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;

"To borrow money;

"To regulate commerce"; etc.,

and so on, continuing through the 17 grants of power.

Mr. Otis, of Massachusetts, in the Fifth Congress (see Annals of Congress, 1797–1799, vol. 8, p. 1986) indorses the same view in the following language:

"Mr. O. agreed that the construction was just which the gentleman put upon the first article of the eighth section of the Constitution, and that to provide for the common defense and general welfare was the end of the powers recited in the first part of that section, and that the powers were merely the means. But this is equally the end of all the other powers given to Congress by all the articles of this section, so that these words might with propriety be understood as if they were added to every clause in it, and thus from the whole section it appears clear that Congress has a right to make war for the common defense and general welfare, and, of course, to do everything which is necessary to prepare for such a state."

IN CONCLUSION

The interested investigator into the meaning of this phrase, injected between the first specific grant of power to Congress and a limitation upon that grant (which of itself is conclusive against any grant of a substantive power, as claimed by the Hamiltonians), can not fail to inquire why these words were incorporated into this first clause on the 4th of September, 1787, only 11 days before the Constitution was adopted, after the convention on the 6th of August had adopted the Pinckney plan on this subject without these words. And especially is this inquiry most pertinent in reference to the words "to pay the debts," for without these words we have shown that the power of Congress to pay the future debts of the Government of the United States was already secured in the coefficient clause, and the old debts of the Government were secured in a subsequent clause of the Constitution. The answer is to be found in a fact which was thoroughly demonstrated in the discussions in the convention, showing an intense and determined feeling on the part of its members that there should be no doubt as to the integrity of the new Government, in its obligations to its creditors. Repudiation was rampant throughout the country; States were passing laws to repudiate their debts to foreign creditors, and this feeling and spirit pervaded the whole country; and a number of propositions had been offered and passed during the proceedings of the convention emphasizing the duty of the payment of the debts of the United States; and the founders of this great Republic were determined that the integrity of the new Government should never be questioned and that this should be made clear in the organic act. In response to this feeling these words "to pay the debts" were determined upon, and they were inserted, naturally and suitably, after the power "to lay and collect taxes." But when that was done, see the effect of it. The clause then would read:

"The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

Such a provision might have been construed as giving Congress the power to lay and collect taxes to pay the debts, and only for that purpose; what was to become of the other 17 grants of power that needed money to carry them out? What about commerce, post offices, post roads, if the expression "to pay the debts" had been left alone in the clause? Expressio unius exclusio est alterius. Such a form, to say the least, might have endangered the right of Congress to appropriate to the other specific grants of power. So some words had to be added to those "to pay the debts" that would make clear the power of Congress to appropriate for all Federal purposes, as set forth in the subsequent enumerated grants. What should those words be? Three times in two days, on the 22d and 23d of August, the convention indorsed a resolution of this nature: That the Congress should "fulfill the engagements and discharge the debts of the United States." What engagements had the United States? They are chiefly specified in the 18 specific grants in the Pinckney plan finally adopted August 16. Do not the words "fulfill the engagements" interpret the meaning of "common defense and general welfare"? Are not those the only engagements of the Government of the United States? Undoubtedly, having determined for the honor of their country that there should be an express provision to pay the debts some other words would have to be supplied to save to the Congress the right to carry out the grants of power to Congress thereinafter enumerated, and to show that its power to appropriate money was not confined alone to the payment of the debts. What should these additional words be? They selected these words: "To provide for the common defense and general welfare" as they embraced all the subsequent grants of power which the convention had already determined should constitute that amount of common defense and of general welfare which the Federal Government ought to control; and being merely words of general import and without power in the Articles of Confederation from which they came, brought with them to the Constitution of the United States the same innocuous character.

Now follow the steps in their adoption.

On the 31st of August, on motion of Mr. Sherman, a committee of 11 was appointed, 1 from each State, to whom was referred "such parts of the Constitution as have been postponed and such parts of reports as have been acted on." This committee consisted of Gilman of New Hampshire, Rufus King of Massachusetts, Roger Sherman of Connecticut, Brearly of New Jersey, Gouverneur Morris of Pennsylvania, Dickinson of Delaware, Carroll of Maryland, Madison of Virginia, Williamson of North Carolina, Pierce Butler of South Carolina, and Abraham Baldwin of Georgia. All except Morris and Brearly had served in the Continental Congress, and were familiar, therefore, with the Articles of Confederation, and the lack of power of the words in these articles.

On the 4th of September they reported that clause 1 of section 1, Article VII, of the Pinckney plan should read:

"The Legislature shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

And the claim is made by the followers of Mr. Hamilton that these words constitute a substantive grant of power to Congress to pass all and any laws affecting the general welfare of the people of the United States; and while Judge Story, in a luminous argument shows such a claim to be preposterous, he claims that, under these words, Congress may make appropriations for any object which in their judgment they may believe to be for the common defense or general welfare of the people of the United States, i. e., that Congress can appropriate money to an institution that it is denied the power to create. The question, therefore, is brought sharply to this issue: Did the men constituting this committee intend, by the insertion of these words, to destroy the Pinckney plan containing only specific grants of power to Congress, which had been passed unanimously by the convention without a single negative vote on the 6th of August previously? An examination of this committee will show that the majority of them could never have agreed to any such proposition. The known sentiments of at least seven of them, and probably nine, show conclusively that their insertion of these words was never considered by them as authorizing the construction put upon them by the Hamiltonians, or by the learned Judge Story. Among this number, Mr. Madison stands out preeminently as having shown and demonstrated beyond question that these words did not have, and could not have, such meaning. The evidence of their positions may be gathered from several sources.

Mr. Abraham Baldwin, a member of this committee, on June 17, 1798, as a Member of Congress, uses this language:

"That part of the first article of the eighth section, which declares 'Congress shall have power to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States' had never been considered as a source of legislative power, as it is only a member introduced to limit the other parts of the sentence, and not of itself a substantive power, as will be seen by recurring to the words of the first sentence of the eighth section."

On the 16th of July, in the convention, Mr. Pierce Butler, also a member of this committee, and Mr. Gorham, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, were participants in a debate in the convention which showed Mr. Butler was favorable to specific grants of power to Congress, and was objecting to general and indefinite grants that were suggested. But there was one gentleman on the committee, Mr. Gouverneur Morris, of Pennsylvania, who knew that these words as reported by the committee were the death knell to the proposition of Mr. Hamilton, as may be seen from the following incident.

Albert Gallatin, of Pennsylvania, was one of the most distinguished men of his day. On the 16th of June, 1798, as a Member of Congress, he made a speech on this clause, in which he said:

"He (Gallatin) was well informed that these words had originally been inserted in the Constitution as a limitation to the power of laying taxes. After the limitation had been agreed to, and the Constitution was completed, a member of the convention (he was one of the members who represented the State of Pennsylvania), being one of a committee of revisal and arrangement, attempted to throw these words into a distinct paragraph, so as to create not a limitation, but a distinct power. The trick, however, was discovered by a member from Connecticut, now deceased, and the words restored as they now stand. So that Mr. Gallatin said, whether he referred to the Constitution itself, to the most able defenders of it, or to the State conventions, the only rational construction which could be given to that clause was that it was a limitation and not an extension of powers." (U. S. Annals of Congress, 5th Cong., 1797–99, vol. 8, p. 1796.)

For confirmation of the above see the Framing of the Constitution, Max Farrand, page 182.

It is of interest to note that Abraham Baldwin, a member of this committee, was a member of the Federal Convention and a Member of the same Congress (the Fifth) that Gallatin was and engaged with him in this debate, and he doubtlessly heard Gallatin's statement, and there was no denial of it from him.

Who was the member from Pennsylvania in the convention who attempted this "trick"? It is easy to ascertain who he was. In being designated as one of a committee of revisal and arrangement in the convention we find that the member from Pennsylvania on that committee was Gouverneur Morris. And who was the member from Connecticut that discovered the "trick"? By the process of elimination this is easily discovered because Mr. Gallatin said "he is now dead." The Gallatin words were spoken in 1798. Johnson, Ellsworth, and Roger Sherman were the members of the convention from Connecticut. Johnson and Sherman died after 1800 and Roger Sherman died in 1793; and Roger Sherman, who detected this "trick," was a member of this committee of 11 that brought in this report, and, having prevented Morris from making the change by throwing these words into a distinct paragraph, it showed first that Sherman was opposed to the unlimited power attempted to be given to these words by Morris's "trick," and, second, that Morris was trying to make the change to carry out Hamilton's idea, because the clause as adopted September 4 was fatal to Hamilton's desire for unlimited powers.

This "trick," described by Mr. Gallatin as attempted by Gouverneur Morris, arose out of the fact that on the 8th of September the convention appointed a committee "of five to revise the style and arrange the articles agreed to by the House." The committee was composed of Samuel Johnson, Hamilton, Gouverneur Morris, Madison, and King, and on the 12th of September that committee made its report, and article 1, section 8, appears as follows:

"SEC. 8. The Congress may, by joint ballot, appoint a treasurer. They shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;

"To pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;

"To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

"To regulate commerce with foreign nations, among the several States, and with the Indian tribes," etc. (Journal of Federal Convention, Boston, 1819.)

Had the Constitution been ratified in that form there would be considerable ground for asserting that it contained the Hamiltonian idea of unlimited power, for here these words are taken from a dependent position in the first clause of section 8 as a part of it, and have no relation to the power of taxation as set forth in that clause, and are entirely divorced from this clause, and by their location are made an independent, separate clause, and becomes one of the substantive grants of power to Congress, just as the other 17 grants in this sentence.

This report, made by the committee on style, was made to the convention on September 12. The Constitution was voted on and adopted by the convention on the 15th of September, but between those two dates the Journal makes no further mention of it, and there is no other reference to it in the Journal; but when the Constitution appeared as finally signed by the members this clause was unchanged and was in the exact form adopted by the convention on the 4th of September. The attempt to change it had failed. This committee on style, in the dying hours of the convention that proposed this Hamiltonian power for Congress, which had been rejected five times before this by the convention, has an unknown genesis—unless it may be found in Roger Sherman's discovery—and its paternity is also unknown, for its proponent in the convention (September 8) is not given in the Journal, but only the featureless words "It was moved and seconded." Who was the mover of the resolution? And what was the necessity for the committee? Three of its members (Morris, Madison, and King) were all members of the committee of 11, 1 from each State, appointed August 31, that had large and complete powers to deal not only with what already had been acted upon but what might yet be considered by the convention. This much, at least, is known: That a majority of the five were Hamiltonians, and the failure of their report, presented on the 12th of September, on this section was the expiring gasp of centralized power at its failure to incorporate imperial power in the Constitution of the United States.

Another evidence of the views of this committee is to be gathered by the statement made by Luther Martin, one of the greatest figures in the convention, who, on his return home, addressed the Maryland Legislature, giving an account of the convention. In it he said there were three parties in the convention; first, the Hamiltonians, who desired to annihilate the States and establish a government of a monarchial nature; secondly, those who were opposed to the abolition of the States and the adoption of a monarchial government, but who wished for greater powers for the great States in the Union; and third, "was what I consider truly Federal and Republican; this party was nearly equal in number with the other two and was composed of the delegations from Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, and in part from Maryland; also of some individuals from other representations."

On this committee of 11 were Mr. Sherman from Connecticut, Mr. Brearly from New Jersey, Mr. Dickinson from Delaware, and Mr. Carroll from Maryland.

Professor Beard, in his book Economic Origins of Jeffersonian Democracy, page 35, says of Abraham Baldwin:

"Baldwin was in the opposition from the beginning and remained a consistent Republican until his death."

Mr. Jefferson said of John Dickinson, of Delaware, that he was "an orthodox advocate of the true principles of our new Government. (Jefferson's Works (Washington ed.), Vol. V, p. 249.)

In the Framing of the Constitution, by Max Farrand, page 81, he mentions a number of the members of the convention who advocated a strong National Government and those who were opposed to such, among the latter, he names Sherman, Brearly, Dickinson, and Butler.

The position of Hugh Williamson, of North Carolina, a member of the committee of 11 might well be determined alone by the position of North Carolina in refusing to ratify the Constitution for two years because of the need of amendments. As a member of the second North Carolina convention called to ratify the Constitution his position is more clearly seen by a motion made by him to ratify the Constitution as concluded at Philadelphia September 17, 1787. As the Constitution contained when passed the exact form of this section and clause recommended by the committee of 11 on the 4th of September, the conclusion is final that he favored that form. (See North Carolina State Records, vol. 22, p. 41, Raleigh, 1907.)

Thus we find in our conclusion that there is no general welfare clause in the Constitution; that the power of Congress to legislate for every object which, in their opinion, might be for the benefit of the people, pressed by Mr. Hamilton in the convention, was six times, directly or indirectly, rejected by that body; and in spite of that his followers have sought to construe these words as meaning what the authors of the Constitution had six times successively rejected; while Judge Story's construction lands us in the same morass, a government of unlimited power, though he reaches it by a different road.

These facts show that a large majority of the committee of 11 that reported these words to be incorporated into the first clause of section 8, Article I, were strongly opposed to the views of Mr. Hamilton and those of Judge Story that lead to the same end, though by different routes, a government of unlimited powers!

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, December 13, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou infinitely Holy Spirit, Thou alone canst make our lives worthy. Bless us with that sweet, strange melody—namely, the whisper of Thy voice. Give us the morning face, the morning courage, the morning vision, and the blessing of the evening calm. Build up our hopes, our lives, and even our divine audacities. All these are the wings that carry us on amidst the push and the appeal of human interests. Forgive our sins, blessed Father, and help us to withstand the conflicts of life's old problem. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

Mr. ROY O. WOODRUFF, of Michigan, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WARREN and Mr. OVERMAN members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the General Accounting Office.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. MOSES and Mr. MCKELLAR members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post Office Department.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. SMOOT and Mr. SIMMONS members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the United States Veterans' Bureau.

THE COAST GUARD

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have asked for this time to call the attention of the House to the gallant rescue of human life which has been effected not only on the Carolina coast but, as referred to yesterday by my friend, Mr. WARREN, also on the Great Lakes by the Coast Guard within the last week. In addition to saving 48 lives on the Carolina coast the Coast Guard station at Marquette, Mich., on December 10 rescued 24 men and 1 woman from the stranded steamer J. W. Oglesby, which went ashore 12 miles east of that station. This rescue was effected under the most dangerous conditions.

The Eagle Harbor Coast Guard Station, in Michigan, after a two days' endeavor to break through the ice succeeded on Saturday, December 10 in rescuing 21 persons from the Canadian steamer Altadoc, ashore at Keweenaw Point, Mich. The rescued men were put aboard the Coast Guard cutter Crawford and landed.

I wish to say a word about this Coast Guard cutter Crawford. This boat left Two Harbors, Minn., in the teeth of a 50-mile an hour gale with the thermometer hovering around 30° below zero, crossed Lake Superior, the largest body of fresh water in the world, and appeared on the scene in time to assist in this rescue. I call attention to this fact because it has added greater laurels and glory to the Coast Guard.

These remarks refer to the activities of only four or five units of the Coast Guard that have reported up to date. Not until the full story of the great storm is told will we be able to properly appraise the service of the Coast Guard, but the saving of 96 lives in one week surely is a very creditable record.

Ah, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, while we are appropriating millions for our Army and Navy, let us not fail to provide adequate funds for this arm of the service—these men who are battling the storms day and night in the greatest of all causes, the cause of humanity. [Applause.]

HOLIDAY RECESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 8

Resolved by the House of Representations (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 21, 1927, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian Wednesday, January 4, 1928.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1927.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,

Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I hereby resign from the Committee on Territories.

Very respectfully,

EVERETT KENT,

Thirtieth District, Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means whether that committee, prior to adjournment for the holidays, will meet to extend the time for those who have not done so to apply for the bonus. The adjusted compensation law expires on January 1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer the gentleman on that, because that matter has not been taken up before the committee.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am asking if the committee has given any consideration to that at all or is going to?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It has not been suggested by any member of the committee. These men were given a long enough time in which to file their claims for adjusted compensation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I know; but a great many men did not know about it, and a great many more have been in such a fix that they did not apply for it. There is no reason why 400,000 men, approximately, should not get this adjusted compensation, and that is what I want to call to your attention to find out whether you are going to do it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand that some of these men do not want the adjusted compensation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. They need not take it in that event.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1, to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, under the order of the House the committee was permitted to return to page 79 for the purpose of considering the amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ, and I believe he has the floor.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the Clerk report the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment, as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARENTZ: On page 79, after line 24, add the following words: "This paragraph shall not apply to metal mines discovered after approval of this act," and add a new paragraph, as follows:

"In the case of metal mines the allowance for depletion shall be 15 per cent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph."

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is introduced in the interest of simplification of the income tax.

One of the most technical and involved sections of the revenue bill is that one relating to depletion allowances.

No two men working independently of each other would reach, except by mere chance, the same conclusions regarding the rate of depletion to be applied to a particular ore or mineral deposit.

This is true in most cases where a technical physical examination is made of a natural resource developed but partially by underground workings or drill holes, irregular in shape, variable in mineral content, which in itself varies in price, to mention but a few of the factors entering into the determination of depletion allowance.

In the case of the United States against Ludey, Justice Brandeis had the following to say, as noted in Official Reports of the Supreme Court, under date of May 16, 1927:

The depletion charge permitted as a deduction from the gross income in determining the taxable income of mines for any year represents the reduction in the mineral contents of the reserves from which the product is taken. The reserves are recognized as wasting assets. The depletion effected by operation is likened to the using up of raw material in making the product of a manufacturing establishment. As the cost of the raw material must be deducted from the gross income before the net income can be determined, so the estimated cost of the part of the reserve used up is allowed. The fact that the reserve is hidden from sight presents difficulties in making an estimate of the amount of the deposits. The actual quantity can rarely be measured.

It must be approximated. And because the quantity originally in the reserve is not actually known, the percentage of the whole withdrawn in any year, and hence the appropriate depletion charge is necessarily a rough estimate. But Congress concluded, in the light of experience, that it was better to act upon a rough estimate than to ignore the fact of depletion.

The corporation tax law of 1909 had failed to provide for any deduction on account of the depletion of mineral reserves. The resulting hardship to operators of mines induced Congress to make provision in the revenue law of 1913 and all later acts for some deduction on account of depletion in determining the amount of taxable income from mines.

In section 23 of the present bill, under the heading of "Deductions from gross incomes," we find the following:

Depletion: In the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits, and timber a reasonable allowance for depletion of improvements, according to the peculiar conditions in each case; such reasonable allowance in all cases to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(m) The basis upon which depletion, exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence are to be allowed in respect of any property shall be as provided in section 114.

Turning to page 79 of the bill we have the following:

(2) Discovery value in case of mines: In the case of mines discovered by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, the basis for depletion shall be the fair market value of the property at the date of discovery or within 30 days thereafter, if such mines were not acquired as the result of purchase of a proven tract or lease, and if the fair market value of the property is materially disproportionate to the cost. The depletion allowance based on discovery value provided in this paragraph shall not exceed 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property upon which the discovery was made, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance be less than it would be if computed without reference to discovery value. Discoveries shall include minerals in commercial quantities contained within a vein or deposit discovered in an existing mine or mining tract by the taxpayer after February 28, 1913, if the vein or deposit thus discovered was not merely the uninterrupted extension of a continuing commercial vein or deposit already known to exist, and if the discovered minerals are of sufficient value and quantity that they could be separately mined and marketed at a profit.

(3) Percentage depletion for oil and gas wells: In the case of oil and gas wells the allowance for depletion shall be 27½ per cent of the gross income from the property during the taxable year. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 per cent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property, except that in no case shall the depletion allowance be less than it would be if computed without reference to this paragraph.

The amendment I have offered is in the interest of simplification.

It will be observed that the amendment proposed is a simple one which does not directly affect other provisions of the revenue act. Its adoption, therefore, will not make necessary any change in other portions of the act.

The outstanding advantages of the amendment are that without materially affecting the public revenue it provides a simple, equitable, and definite method of computing the depletion allowance that permits of the prompt and final determination of the tax liability. It eliminates for the future the analytical appraisal of metal mines with attendant technical complexities. It means a great saving of expense to the Government as well as the taxpayer.

Although mine operators have for years tried to bring about enactment of law simplifying the item of depletion allowance, the matter was brought most forcibly to the speaker's attention on reading that splendid article entitled "Simplifying the income tax," by our esteemed chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Hon. WILLIAM R. GREEN, in the Saturday Evening Post of November 26, 1927, page 125.

I quote the following from my friend's valuable article:

The tax on oil companies having producing wells has been greatly simplified.

The depletion allowance is now fixed on a per cent of the value of the oil produced, thus turning an uncertain amount concerning which the taxpayer and the Government could seldom agree into a mere arithmetical calculation.

It would seem as if the same plan might be applied to mining companies. Although it would not furnish an exact method for determining the amount of depletion when ore is taken from the mines and would not always work out equally as between different mines, it would greatly simplify an allowance that has been productive of much litigation, notwithstanding the fact that this matter of percentage depletion in the case of mines was initiated in Congress and in the Treasury Department, the proposed percentage basis for depletion of mines has not been provided for in the bill before us to-day.

I have been advised by Mr. GREEN and other members of the Ways and Means Committee that this item was not included, because at the time section 114 was being considered full information was not had from either the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation or the Treasury Department.

Such information, I am now informed, is now available.

During this year, 1927, a questionnaire was sent to metal-mining taxpayers throughout the country by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with a letter stating that the joint committee had requested certain information regarding depletion allowances. In order to expedite the preparation of the information desired by the joint committee, the industry cooperated almost 100 per cent and supplied all the information requested.

I have been informed by the Treasury Department that an investigation of the average depletion percentage allowed was found to be 16½ per cent on all returns allowed during the last four or five years.

Under the proposed amendment both the Government and the taxpayer may readily compute the amount of tax due at the time the return is filed. The taxpayer may proceed with his financial commitments and the further development of his mines without fear of large additional assessments. He would rather pay more tax, as he will in some cases under this system, and know that his obligation is fully and definitely discharged than to pay less tax after long delay.

The preparation and audit returns of income in the metal-mining industry have proven most expensive to both Government and taxpayer.

In the introduction of this amendment it is my desire to prevent this.

For the future discovery may be eliminated upon the adoption of an adequate percentage basis as proposed in this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ARENTZ. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARENTZ. I will.

Mr. COLTON. Is it not intended by the gentleman's amendment to give to the metal mines, as far as possible, a definite per cent for depletion the same as is now extended to oil companies? This would result in being helpful to the Government as well as to the mining industry, would it not?

Mr. ARENTZ. The depletion of oil wells is 27½ per cent. This depletion would give the life of an oil well an indefinite period, but very much shorter under most circumstances than is enjoyed by that of the Tri-State Lead-Zinc Mines. The average life of a zinc mine in the Joplin district is eight years.

Mr. MANLOVE. Notwithstanding this, is it not true that because of the richness of the ore and the extent of the deposits this district produces one-third of the lead and zinc produced in the United States?

Mr. ARENTZ. I believe this is true. The depletion we are asking for is 15 per cent. Fifteen per cent deducted from gross income would give an average base metal mine a life of nearly 20 years. Mine owners generally are dissatisfied with the present method of determining depletion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ARENTZ. May I have five additional minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ARENTZ. I will say to the Chairman of the committee that it is not my intention to press this amendment at this time, but I would like to receive from the chairman of this great committee, the Committee on Ways and Means, a statement as to the extent of his desires to cooperate to the end that this elimination of difficulty of arriving at a return may be had by the introduction of amendments offered to it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman, I think the gentleman has acted very fairly about it. He says he does not intend to press the adoption of the amendment at this time. The circumstances are these, as indicated by the remarks which the gentleman read from an article I wrote for the Saturday Evening Post. I think something ought to be done along this line, and it would undoubtedly, as the gentleman says, greatly simplify a matter that has caused the department a great deal of difficulty and trouble; and unfortunately in our discussions in the committee we took so much time with other matters that we got to this the last thing, and we did not have time properly to consider it. Not only that, but the experts never had time to be sure they knew what kind of an amendment ought to be prepared. Now, in pursuance of what the gentleman says, let the matter go over to the Senate and I am sure the mining interests will be taken care of over there, and by the time we get there we can tell what kind of a provision ought to be inserted; and if the Senate puts it in, as far as I am personally concerned, I will be very sympathetic with it.

Mr. HADLEY. Will the gentleman yield? If the statement the gentleman makes is accurate, his information is that since it was considered in the committee the data to which he refers has been received and is at hand. Is that true?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not prepared to say; but I am prepared to say this, that it was received. We have not had time to examine it. I am inclined to think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. HADLEY. I am satisfied that if it has been at hand and had shown a prima facie case made before the hearings had closed, the matter would have received the very serious consideration at the hands of the committee at the time. But it was not there, and I think it fair to say to the gentleman who has offered this amendment that the absence of that information before the committee precluded the committee from giving the matter more consideration.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The data had not been received yet from the gentleman from Washington when he addressed the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the experts should go over it first to see that it is right before it is adopted.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman believes, does he not, that some amendment of this kind should be adopted? It certainly would simplify the law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. I think something of this kind ought to be put in. Therefore I think if the matter is put in at the other end of the Capitol, it can be worked out; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I will give it very sympathetic consideration.

Mr. ARENTZ. The idea with me is that the committee should not stand against this amendment simply because the experts might stand for something defining gross income, or something of that kind. When you talk of copper mines, for example, the definition is different from that when you talk of gold and silver mines and of lead-zinc mines. I hope you will not hesitate in accepting this very important provision to clarify a subject which has been burdensome to taxpayer and Government alike for years and has resulted in much litigation, misunderstanding, and expense for the reasons I have stated. I thank the chairman for his courtesy and the sympathetic interest he has shown in this amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We simply want time to go into this matter. I think at present the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 7, page 88, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to ask unanimous consent. An amendment is pending and subject to debate. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Florida: Page 88, line 7, after the word "Secretary," insert: "Provided, That if the taxpayer has no income for the years herein provided, then and in that event he shall be granted refund or deductions to which he is entitled out of net incomes to which he may be entitled to in the future."

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, that amendment purports to reach the incomes which have been paid on mortgages which later have been found to be without value, and it will authorize the Treasury to expedite the refund of payments on these incomes. In other words, in some sections of our country millions of dollars' worth of mortgages, particularly on real estate, have been found later on not to possess the face value, and the owners of those mortgages have paid income tax on them. This amendment enables a refund to be made to those taxpayers.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the gentleman's amendment does not on its face show that it relates to these mortgage transactions. It might relate to any situation where a taxpayer might be entitled to refunds and deductions. And in addition, does not the gentleman think that his amendment is altogether too indefinite?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I do not think so.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I will read it. It says:

Provided, That if the taxpayer has no income for the years herein provided, then and in that event he shall be granted refunds or deductions to which he is entitled out of net income to which he may be entitled in the future.

How long in the future? I suggest to the gentleman that this is a subject that the committee spent a great deal of time on. I think it is dangerous to inject it here.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. It ought to be taken care of in this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman's amendment provides that the Government shall give a bonus to these men who have worthless mortgages.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. No; it is to give a just refund to the owner of the mortgage, which is not worth face value.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 118. AFFILIATED CORPORATIONS

(a) Offset of losses: If any corporation which is a member of an affiliated group sustains for the taxable year 1929 or any succeeding taxable year a net loss, as defined in section 117, so much of the net loss as constitutes an ordinary net loss (as defined in subsection (c) of this section) may be allowed as a credit against the net income of one or more members of the affiliated group, if—

(1) In accordance with a written agreement filed with the return and entered into by the corporation sustaining the net loss and the corporation or corporations against the net income of which the credit is to be taken; and

(2) Such corporations are domestic corporations and have the same accounting period; and

(3) Such corporations have been members of the affiliated group during the entire taxable year, or so much thereof as each has been in existence.

(b) Affiliated group: As used in this section an "affiliated group" means one or more chains of corporations connected through stock ownership with a common parent corporation, if—

(1) At least 95 per cent of the stock of each of the corporations (except the common parent corporation) is owned directly by one or more of the other corporations; and

(2) The common parent corporation owns directly at least 95 per cent of the stock of at least one of the other corporations.

As used in this subsection, the term "stock" does not include non-voting stock which is limited and preferred as to dividends.

(c) Ordinary net loss: As used in this section, "ordinary net loss" means the net loss as defined in section 117 less the amount of the capital net loss computed in the same manner as provided in section 101 (relating to capital net gains and losses), except that gain or loss shall be computed without regard to the period for which the capital asset has been held.

(d) Remainder of net loss: Any part of the net loss, as defined in section 117, not so allowed as a credit, shall be allowed to the corporation which sustains the net loss as a deduction in computing net income in succeeding taxable years in the same manner and to the same extent as provided in section 117 (relating to net losses).

(e) China trade act corporation: For the purpose of this section, a corporation organized under the China trade act, 1922, shall be treated as a foreign corporation.

(f) Corporations deriving income from possessions of United States: For the purposes of this section, a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 251, by reason of receiving a large percentage of its income from possessions of the United States, shall be treated as a foreign corporation.

(g) Allocation of income and deductions: For allocation of income and deductions of related trades or businesses, see section 45.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARNER of Texas: Page 90, line 11, strike out all of section 118.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment seeks to do what the law did until the excess-profits tax was enacted. That is to say, it is proposed to treat all corporations alike in the taxation.

Now, remember that section 118 has for its sole and only purpose to give advantage to a large corporation owning more than one single corporation. That is to say, when a group of men own more than one corporation this is intended to give them an advantage in rendering their taxes. It permits them to choose whether they will render their tax as one corporation or as a group of corporations which they own.

I think you will see a great advantage in that. Yesterday you adopted an amendment and complained about it, as I understand, because you lost, according to the estimate, $24,000,000 of revenue to the Treasury on account of the corporation tax. This will let you recoup that money from 961 corporations, as I recall. You gave up yesterday $24,000,000 of revenue. We gave yesterday to 70 per cent of the corporations in the United States an additional relief of $24,000,000 in their duty to pay corporation taxes to the Government. Now, I offer an amendment to equalize corporations in the payment of tax. If you adopt that amendment you will recoup $24,000,000 to the department.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. As I understand section 118 as now written, permissive authority is to be given for one or more corporations to take advantage of the loss sustained by another corporation in the change?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, yes. The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, doing business as a subsidiary company known as the Clarksville Petroleum Co., right across the street from you, in the same neighborhood in Texas, which is in competition with you, is instructed by its officers in New Jersey to "sell below BLACK."

If I sell below BLACK I am going to lose money, but it does not make any difference—lose the money—we will offset it against our profits made in New Jersey. Mr. BLACK can not do that. Mr. BLACK is compelled to go out of business, and after he has gone out of business this competitive corporation, which has some stockholders in New Jersey or Washington, D. C., Chicago, or Seattle, immediately puts up the price.

Now, I want you to ask yourselves about this, and I want some gentleman to say—I do not believe the Chairman is going to say—that it is unsound economically or that it is unfair to ask corporations to render their returns like every other corporation. You can not say it would be unfair to the United States Steel Corporation, having 147 affiliated corporations; you can not say it would be unfair to ask those companies to render separately when another steel corporation in competition with them has to render separately. That would not be unfair, would it? It would not be economically unsound. And remember this, that Mr. TREADWAY has brought about a great deal of simplification in this bill, and the Treasury Department says this would simplify very much the renditions of these nine hundred and some odd corporations that now render under the consolidated provision of the law.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have called your attention several times to what is known as the advisory committee. During the work they did this summer they ran across this and they decided it was unjust—that this consolidated provision was unjust. Knowing the policy of Congress to have a consolidated report they undertook to suggest a method by which you might have an affiliated return on class A corporations and abolish it entirely as to class B corporations, but when you ask them questions there has never been a single man anywhere, in the Treasury Department or elsewhere, who could justify affiliated corporation returns, either from the economical standpoint or from the standpoint of fair play and justice.

Let us assume that these men on the first seats here own a corporation located in New York, one located in Seattle, one located in Galveston, and another located in New Orleans. They are in competition with me in Galveston and I have only one corporation. Conditions are bad in Galveston and my corporation has to sell right down to the ground. I do not make anything but am making a loss. These gentlemen are also in a similar business and they make a loss. I have no way of recouping my loss, but they have by just transferring it to New Jersey or to Seattle. Now, that is all there is to it, and I know I can appeal to the consciences of the men here, because I know you do not want to give an advantage to one corporation having a multiplicity of corporations over another.

I have forgotten the number of corporations making returns, but we select nine hundred and odd corporations and say, "We are going to give you the privilege of returning either as an affiliated group or as individuals." That is wrong in principle. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] called your attention to it the other day. He said it was bad public policy to permit a corporation or any kind of a taxpayer to report according to a choice of two methods, and I agree with him. Nobody can justify it.

Now, if you will examine this amendment, you will find it can not be partisan and it is not a question of raising taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Would the gentleman mind having the amendment reported again?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The amendment provides for the striking out of section 118, and if the gentleman will read that section he will know exactly what it means.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have read it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The amendment is, as I have tried to explain, that you will no longer permit corporations like the United States Steel Corporation, like the Henry Ford Corporation, or the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, and others which have a multiplicity of corporations throughout the United States, to report as one corporation, but that you will require each one of them to do what every other corporation has to do, namely, make an individual return.

In Texas, for instance, the Standard Oil Co. will have a company named the Sun Oil Co. In Texas it drills a lot of wells. They will say it does not make any difference how much they lose, because they will charge it against the affiliated companies.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I do.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman seems to be trying to leave the impression that if each individual corporation had to make its tax return separately, it would eliminate what is apparently unfair competition, which the gentleman is trying to leave the impression is practiced. Suppose if we did that——

Mr. GARNER of Texas (interposing). You make your own interpretation of what I am trying to do.

Mr. BEGG. That is the only interpretation I can make.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You have stated your whereases; now just ask your question.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman believe that if his amendment were adopted there would not be competition between the big corporations and the little ones?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But I do say that in this competition we ought not to encourage by law a multiplicity of corporations and we ought not to favor the big ones as against the little ones. [Applause.]

Mr. BEGG. Nobody is trying to do that.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You are doing it in this law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I say, gentlemen, let us be honest. By this section you give the big corporations, nine hundred and odd corporations, an advantage over the little corporations, and I say you ought not to give them that advantage, and I say we ought to strike this language out of the bill, and that is my purpose in offering the amendment. If it is not beneficial to some one, why not strike it out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will tell the gentleman why not, in a moment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Why not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Go ahead now. I will wait until the gentleman is through.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I yield to the gentleman to tell why not. I am perfectly willing to be interrupted, but I imagine the spark did not connect and the gentleman could not tell me why not and therefore took his seat.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do any of these large companies, like the Standard Oil Co., the Steel Trust, or the American Tobacco Co., own 95 per cent of the stock in the other concerns as provided in section (b)?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes. This is the way they own it. The holding corporation owns the stock in all the balance of them and therefore they have the 95 per cent ownership. It is generally 100 per cent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And does that bring them within the definition of this provision?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; holding the entire amount. That is exactly the way it is done.

Frankly, this could not be a partisan matter. It is impossible to say that the method of rendering taxes can be a partisan matter. I do not think any of you gentlemen could possibly come to the conclusion that the method of rendering the tax can be a partisan matter.

I am trying to point out to you that there is benefit being derived by nine hundred and some corporations that they ought not to have, and if you will strike out section 118 you will get twenty-odd million dollars additional into the Treasury from nine hundred and some corporations by having them render their taxes just like every other corporation is rendering such taxes, and it ought to be done, gentlemen.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. There is no one contending for this provision except the large corporations, is there?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Why, certainly not. It does not benefit anybody but the large corporations. It can not benefit anybody unless there are two or more corporations. I defy any gentleman to find where it would do any good or would be possible to file as an affiliated corporation if there was but one corporation. So it can only benefit in cases where there are two or more corporations.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. In the case of the Standard Oil Co., for instance, having these subsidiary companies, was not that the result of the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co.?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. And this would give them the same status they would have had if they had not been dissolved, would it not?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

This will also simplify matters. Just think of it for a moment! They have cases pending in the Treasury Department going back to 1917, 1918, and 1919, and the reason is that it is almost impossible under the excess-profits tax provision to go back and value a corporation like General Motors, for instance.

I do hope you gentlemen will hear what the advocates of section 118 have to say. I say to you frankly, I wish you would examine it. I can not find a single reason for it, and I do not believe they can give you a good reason for it, viewed from the standpoint of equity and justice. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas may understand the effect of his amendment. I doubt it. If the gentleman will strike out 118, it would not abolish the consolidated return which is contained in section 141. There would be consolidated returns continued for a couple of years, and then after that time consolidated returns are abolished; but there is the privilege of taking the losses under section 141.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Without section 141 they would not have authority to file consolidated returns even for the next two years, would they?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, if you should strike both of them out, that is true; but let us see about that.

The gentleman says that the large corporations want this section 118. The large corporations do not want it. They are in sympathy with the gentleman from Texas. If the gentleman only knew it, they would like to have this section stricken out. The large corporations want to have the law stay as it is. What the committee did was to take a middle ground and put in this provision in section 118 and then provide in section 141 that after a certain date consolidated returns should no longer be permitted, although losses sustained by subsidiary companies of which the parent company owned 95 per cent of the stock might still be included.

What is there wrong about this? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] talks as if these big companies were the only ones permitted to get the benefit of this loss provision in some way. The fact of the matter is, it does not make much difference to the big companies if they own 95 per cent of the stock. When the subsidiary company has a loss, does not the parent company lose it? And what is the difference whether they make a consolidated return or whether they make a separate return for each company?

Mr. BUTLER. Then what is the benefit of the consolidated return? I will be indebted to my friend if he will tell me that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The consolidated return, it is contended by the companies, makes, on the whole, a fairer method of adjusting the matter; but there are certain complications about it, so that it has been recommended that the consolidated return be abolished after a certain period, because it does cause complications in assessing the tax. That is the chief difficulty about the consolidated return.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.
Mr. HUDSON. If it is to be abolished eventually, why is it not abolished now? What is the reason for the extension of two years?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So they can get ready for it and adjust their accounts accordingly.
Mr. HUDSON. Then it is a mere matter of bookkeeping?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A matter of bookkeeping and getting themselves adjusted to it.
Mr. LAGUARDIA. And is the life of the consolidated return to be only two years?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You will find in section 141 the provision for consolidated returns by corporations for the taxable years 1927 and 1928. After that time it is abolished, but the provision that they can get credit for the losses sustained by a company in which they hold 95 per cent of the stock is continued.
Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is continued. That is the feature some of us do not like.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to get through with my statement.
Mr. LINTHICUM. I simply want to ask the gentleman which method will give us the most taxes. The gentleman from Texas says this provision would give us $20,000,000 additional.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think it would give us a cent more, but would simply introduce confusion into the method of computing taxes, and the corporations could easily adapt themselves to it. They can abolish all these small corporations, make a new corporation, and take them all in under its original wings, if they want to do so, so far as that is concerned. It would cause some consolidations, some dissolutions, and the formation of new corporations, so that there would be fat pickings for the corporation lawyers.
Mr. LINTHICUM. Would it not simplify matters if each corporation made its own return?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it would simplify the matters for the Treasury. That is the object of the provisions of section 141.
Now, let me answer the gentleman from Texas. The gentleman from Texas said there was no one who pretended to justify this position. Saturday you heard the gentleman from Texas talk, and while in the most of his talk he was merely entertaining the committee, he did say something upon which we are agreed. He said that when I appointed the advisory committee consisting of distinguished experts I did a good job. I would not compliment myself that way, but he said that there could not have been better or fairer men for that purpose. Now, that advisory committee that was created—he gave the names of them—recommended this provision of section 118. The report of the advisory committee was submitted to the joint committee, and a majority of the joint committee agreed to it. If the gentleman from Texas disagreed at that time I did not hear it. A majority of the joint committee agreed to it.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I ask for five minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Now, I do not know anything unfair about this proposition. The loss is not allowed for two companies. The gentleman from Texas seems to speak as if the small company got it and then the other company got it. On the contrary, the law guards particularly against that. The loss is only allowed the consolidated group, and that is fully provided for.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How does the gentleman from Iowa answer the point made, or attempted to be made, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] when he said that the subsidiary corporations would practice cut-throat tactics competing with the business of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], driving him out of business, and then recoup with the New Jersey Corporation?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is an entirely fanciful objection. There is no big corporation would do it. It would be in violation of the antitrust law. Besides, if they wanted to do this, they could consolidate the corporations.
Mr. GARNER of Texas. Then the gentleman agrees with me, but thinks the big corporations would not do it on account of the good conscience of the corporation, that they would not permit it?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.
Mr. GARNER of Texas. But they have the power to do it.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I say that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will not better the situation a particle.
Mr. LAGUARDIA. It would make it more expensive.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Possibly; but it would not prevent it.
Mr. ALDRICH. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.
Mr. ALDRICH. It would be exactly against the antitrust law?
Mr. GARNER of Texas. But it would be in accord with the economic law passed by Congress giving them this advantage.
Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman from Iowa claims that the proposition of the gentleman from Texas is not tenable, why does he try to affect the situation by making section 118 operative for only a brief period?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The purpose of this is to moderate the law. The consolidated return is abolished in 1929, and after that affiliated corporations are required to file a separate return. It would be a difficult matter for the corporations to adjust themselves to this right away.
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Then the gentleman is in substance admitting that there is force in the proposition of the gentleman from Texas. You are going to correct the existence of this abuse in the course of two years?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The provisions of the bill will simplify matters, and I think we ought to take that course.
The large corporations do not want it and the gentleman from Texas is in error. They would like to have section 118 stricken out.
Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman from Iowa give me an authority for that?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I will give the gentleman one, Doctor Adams.
Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, Doctor Adams does not own any affiliated corporations.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know he does not.
Mr. GARNER of Texas. There is not a corporation gets the benefit of it except those big enough to have a child. If the affiliated corporations have to make a return, how could it hurt them?
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The repeal of this would enable them to go ahead with their consolidated returns.
Mr. GARNER of Texas. No; it would not. If you strike out section 141, following it up, then you have no law for consolidated returns.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And you will be in a fine situation with business generally if you do that. The fact of the matter is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] does not understand the effect of his own amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is simply raising a bugbear here that is not justified at all. This is an extremely complicated matter, which nobody can fully explain in a short time, but the very experts that the gentleman said were fair, were just, were economists, and whom he recommended in the highest way last Saturday, recommended this provision as an improvement on the present law, and it was adopted not only by the advisory committee but by the joint committee, and the joint committee recommended it to the Ways and Means Committee. Here it is; and we have not heard any opposing voices to it except those of large corporations. I have heard from them indirectly. They do not want this provision in here, and if it is taken out they will just continue to file their consolidated returns. That is all I desire to say.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for three minutes in order to ask him a question.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In order to clear up the confusion that is in the minds of some of us, including myself, I ask the gentleman this question: In the case of these affiliated corporations, is it now permitted those that suffer losses to make returns, taking credit for those losses, and then permitted those who have made profits to take all of the exemptions they would be entitled to by making separate returns in each case?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no. Those that file consolidated returns, of course, have to file them all together; their returns include both losses and profits, and they are all put together; they are combined when all owned by practically the same party.

Mr. SABATH. And they take out the losses and are allowed the losses that they have sustained in any of their groups and deduct them from the profits of the parent or mother corporation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman owned a farm and sustained a loss on it, why should he not be entitled to the credit for that loss? And if one corporation owned another corporation and sustained loss, why not be permitted to have credit for the loss that the other sustained upon filing a joint return?

Mr. SABATH. But these are different corporations.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Of course.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are all owned by the same parties.

Mr. SABATH. And that is the evil, that is the trouble, and wherever they can take the loss they will, to the disadvantage of other smaller corporations, whom they destroy by unfair competition.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; if the gentleman will ask a question.

Mr. BLANTON. With regard to the case the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] put, where the Standard Oil owned subsidiary corporations in Texas, those subsidiary corporations can do business in Texas only because they are subsidiary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not yield to the gentleman to make an argument.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should they not make their separate returns when the State would not permit the parent corporation to do business there at all except through subsidiary corporations?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman does not mean to intimate that the Standard Oil Co. can not do business in Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. It has been prohibited from doing business there.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HALE. Supposing as an individual I operate a half dozen stores in a half dozen different cities. On one I make some money and on another I lose. When I am making my return as an individual I am entitled, am I not, to offset my loss in one store against my profit in the other?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HALE. Is there any reason why a corporation should not be entitled to do the same?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. None that I know of, and where one corporation owns a number of stores it has the same right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. I think that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] must think that the House is very credulous if he expects us to believe that this section 118 of the proposed law is not desired by the large corporations. What is the situation? If it were not for section 141, to which the gentleman referred, the corporations would not be permitted to file any consolidated return after the passage of this act, and if we do strike out section 118, as proposed in the amendment of my colleague, and which I hope we will do, then we ought to end the evil of consolidated returns by following it up and striking out section 141 when we get to it.

The Ways and Means Committee has adopted what my friend from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] terms the middle course, and has prohibited the corporations from filing consolidated returns after the taxable year 1928, but to take the place of that unjust privilege the corporations have secured the enactment, or rather have secured the inclusion of section 118 in this bill, another unjust privilege, which will permit them for all time hereafter until Congress otherwise changes the law to take advantage of the loss of any affiliated corporation in offsetting the net income of the parent corporations. Thus these chain corporations would continue to get the substantial benefits of filing consolidated returns, although ostensibly the privilege of filing consolidated returns would be repealed by section 141 after the taxable year 1928.

Mr. Chairman, my friend, Mr. GARNER, is usually right, and even when he is wrong, his faults lean to virtue's side, but he was never more right upon any proposition that he has ever advocated in the House of Representatives than the amendment he offers here to-day. [Applause.] There is an old saying—and I think that it is a very true one, especially when applied to tax matters—that every tub ought to stand upon its own bottom. Now, a corporation—I do not care who the stockholders of it are—is a legal entity. It has a right to sue and be sued in its own name; it has the right of life until the expiration of its charter. It has many privileges because of its corporate charter, and I can not see any more reason and equity in allowing two or more corporations to pool their gains and losses and thereby reduce the amount of taxes that they are to pay. I can see no more reason in allowing two or more separate legal entities to do that than to allow two or more individuals to pool their gains and losses and thereby reduce their taxes. If either is right the other is right, but neither is just and neither should be permitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I ask for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In the State of Texas, which I have the honor to represent in part, the Standard Oil Co. can not transact any business except that which may be in interstate commerce. Why? Because it has violated the law of the State of Texas, and in a suit has been permanently enjoined from doing business in Texas. Now, what is this method permitted in section 118? The method is to allow the parent corporation to organize a separate legal entity, a separate corporation. And under the vicious provision that permits consolidated returns, why, the parent corporation is permitted to pool all of its returns together. Now, after the taxable year 1928 they can not file consolidated returns, but under section 118, if it is permitted to remain in the bill, they can hunt up an affiliated corporation that has had losses and take advantage of those losses upon their own corporate return. Now, gentlemen, I do not think the Congress ever enacted a more unjustified law than that which originally permitted the filing of consolidated returns. It has caused a loss of millions of dollars that should have gone into the United States Treasury and would have been paid by corporations plenty able to pay the taxes. Already we have a good deal of complaint at the growth of chain stores and chain corporations. They are making it mighty hard for the independent dealer, and some of the States are endeavoring to enact laws by their own State legislatures to prohibit the spread of these chain stores and chain corporations. I am not saying we ought to venture out into that field at the present time. That is a matter not now before us for discussion, but I do say we ought not to confer an advantage upon these chain corporations by permitting consolidated returns, and under section 118 one corporation which has made a profit to take advantage of the losses of affiliated corporations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. Mr. Chairman, I will only take a minute; but I do want to answer the impression that might have been left in the minds of some Members when the inquiry was propounded by the gentleman on my left making a comparison of an individual owning three or four stores with affiliated corporations owned by the same stockholders. He cites the comparison as an illustration to show that the corporation owning two or three different businesses ought to be treated the same as an individual. The difference is this, that the corporations are organized into different entities for certain specific advantages. For instance, if the owner, an individual of a chain store, as illustrated by the gentleman, met in one of his stores with losses and he is sued and a judgment creditor obtains judgment in excess of the assets of store No. 1, there are stores Nos. 2 and 3 to answer and all of his assets are merged for payment of liabilities; but in the case of affiliated corporations and one of its corporations is sued, say, corporation A, and there is not sufficient to satisfy the judgment obtained, the judgment creditor can not look to corporations B and C to recoup his judgment because they are entirely different entities.

In many instances, as I understand, different corporations are organized for that sole purpose. They say, "Here we have got a good business; it may be risky in another State, but we will organize a separate corporation, but we will be liable only to the extent of the separate corporate assets." It is a distinct advantage. Therefore groups of stockholders incorporating into separate corporations must balance the disadvantages with the advantages, and it is manifestly unfair to permit the loss of one corporation to be charged against the profits of another.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no doubt but that they ought to be considered as one corporation. But this is a question of profit, and the question of profit and loss is just the same in the case illustrated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] with reference to corporations as it is when the property is owned by one corporation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It gives a corporation under different entities an advantage in taxation of 11 per cent over its individual or single corporation competitors. I am talking about competition. If corporation A has corporations B, C, and D, and corporation D is operating in a poor market, it can afford to operate at a 10 per cent loss to the detriment of its competitors there, because it can make up its losses by applying them to the profits of corporations B and C and thereby reduce its taxes.

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. If I owned a corporation as an individual, why should I not have the same advantage?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All of your assets are liable if you are operating in your individual capacity. But if these four others are cooperating with you——

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. What would that have to do with it? I do not agree with you on that. It does not make any difference whether you are in a corporation or are acting as an individual. What does a corporation tax have to do with this? It makes no difference. I might be incorporated as an individual and have two dummies with me. That has nothing to do with the profits.

Mr. GIFFORD. Some of us are really trying to understand this proposition. I think we ought to express ourselves and see if we do. I understand section 141 continues the present law as in section 240 for two years and then section 118 takes effect.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a fact.

Mr. GIFFORD. And this is a new law. What worries us is that any two of these corporations can get together and juggle transactions and take advantage of questionable sales to each other to get deductions. Should it be made possible or at least encourage one corporation to purposely sell to another to show a loss?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is stopped by the bill. It is simply a fraud.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, we must necessarily have these chain methods of doing business. It does seem that there must be some advantage here, and I can not help having the suspicion that they can juggle their losses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have a special provision in the law, section 45, that permits the bureau to allocate the income where it belongs. It does so. He does not permit these corporations to place the expenses just where they want to put them.

Mr. GIFFORD. My objection is not particularly to do with the allocation of the income. This section has not been properly explained to us. The only persuasive explanation we have had is that the advisory committee says, "This is the better language." Under section 118 allowing any two of a group to make returns we might suspect that they can do some juggling under that construction.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why does the gentleman make such remarks as that when he has not made any effort to ascertain from the Treasury or from the experts that such a thing would be permitted? I assure the gentleman, after having given this matter a great deal of study, that it can not be permitted under the law.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not been able to take it up with the Treasury. One does not need to. You understand that by operating one chain corporation with another they can purposely make losses by exchanging with each other. It is a new law that we are passing. If we just read the bill, we can not fail to understand that we at least encourage exchange of properties to effect deductions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I turn to section 45, on page 36 of the bill. It provides:

> In any case of two or more trades or businesses (whether or not incorporated, whether or not organized in the United States, and whether or not affiliated) owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interests, the commissioner is authorized to distribute, apportion, or allocate gross income or deductions between or among such trades or businesses, if he determines that such distribution, apportionment, or allocation is necessary in order to prevent evasion of taxes or clearly to reflect the income of any of such trades or businesses.

It is necessary in order to really reflect the income. The commissioner has the authority to make that change. Of course, any of our income tax laws can be evaded.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the Chairman expressed himself as in doubt.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let us have tellers, Mr. Chairman. We might just as well have tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. TREADWAY and Mr. GARNER of Texas to act as tellers.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported ayes 158, noes 153.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 119. LOSS ON SALE OF STOCK OR SECURITIES

> In the case of any loss claimed to have been sustained in any sale or other disposition of shares of stock or securities where it appears that within 30 days before or after the date of such sale or other disposition the taxpayer has acquired (otherwise than by bequest or inheritance) or has entered into a contract or option to acquire substantially identical property, and the property so acquired is held by the taxpayer for any period after such sale or other disposition, no deduction for the loss shall be allowed under section 23 (e) (2) of this title; nor shall such deduction be allowed under section 23 (f) unless the claim is made by a corporation, a dealer in stocks or securities, and with respect to a transaction made in the ordinary course of its business. If such acquisition or the contract or option to acquire is to the extent of part only of substantially identical property, then only a proportionate part of the loss shall be disallowed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have asked for this limited time for the purpose of addressing myself to a proposition which I consider the most vital in connection with this tax bill. I am concerned about the productiveness of this bill if enacted into law. Or, in other words, I fear that this bill will not produce the necessary revenues for a surplus in the Treasury to keep up the war-debt payments. Every generation should pay its own debts, and it is up to the generation that made the war debt to see to it that it is paid off. My attitude toward this bill, as I am about to express myself, is not going to surprise any Member of the Ways and Means Committee. I have appeared before that committee biennially every time the members of that committee were considering a tax reduction bill since the war, and besides discussing some of the tax schedules, I have tried to impress upon them each time the necessity of providing a surplus in the Treasury to make certain that the public debt be retired within at least 25 years after 1920.

My attitude as just expressed is one reason why I have always opposed all provisions in every revenue bill since the war which looked like a refund to income-tax payers. I am opposed to the provision in this bill which makes the reduction in the corporation income tax applicable to the 1927 income. [Applause.] I am not at all impressed with the reasoning of the Ways and Means Committee in its report accompanying this tax bill on this proposition. Evidently the committee as a whole is pretty well satisfied with the provision, as no minority report was filed. Among other things, the committee attempts to justify this provision for the reason "that a very considerable proportion of sales of corporations were made at a small profit or no profit or even at a loss." This is given as showing that the corporations were unable to pass this tax on to the purchasers of their products. Well, the corporations that operate without profit or at a loss—and I understand it is something like 41 per cent of them—will not be benefited by this provision. There is no use to shed any tears about them here, for having no income tax to pay, they will not get any of that $160,000,000 or $180,000,000—the amount the corporation income tax will be reduced for 1927. The committee in its report further states that "economists generally agree that the tax can not be passed on except by a monopoly."

If the committee is correct, then there is one thing certain, and that is that the corporations during the last few years have put out a lot of false propaganda in order to bring about a reduction in the corporation income tax. The corporations have claimed that if the corporation income tax were reduced, it would enable them to sell their products cheaper to the public. There is no question but that the corporations have passed this tax on, if within their power to do so, just like any other of the costs of producing or handling their products. The committee in its report appears to admit that a monopoly could pass the tax on. One other thing is certain, and that is, in so far as the corporations are able to control the prices of their commodities, they add this tax on to the prices of their commodities. The corporations most able to control the prices of their products and to add the tax thereto are the large corporations, the powerful combinations of corporations, and those corporations which have a monopoly on the products they produce. There can be no question but what such corporations will derive directly some benefit from this refund provision.

Last fall a year ago I received a letter from one of the most intelligent and successful corporation men in the State of Iowa. He opposed the then proposed refund of the surplus in the Treasury to income-tax payers. Instead, he argued for a reduction in the corporation income tax. He stated that if the corporation got a rebate or a refund it would be impossible to pass that on to the consumer in the shape of lower prices, but, on the other hand, if there were a reduction of the corporation income tax, the corporation could reduce the prices on the articles it sold to the consumers. He inclosed with that letter a very interesting statement, which I shall have printed in the RECORD without comment, showing the effect of the corporation income tax on the cost of a keg of nails or a spool of barbed wire. I submit the statement for printing at this place:

The following taxes enter into the cost of a keg of nails or a spool of barbed wire when they are ready for delivery to the farmer in Iowa:

1. A mining corporation mines ore in Minnesota and into the cost of production of the ore is figured a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

2. A railroad carries the ore to Duluth and into the cost of its operation this railroad must figure a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

3. A steamer will carry the ore from Duluth to Gary, Ind., and into its cost the steamer company figures a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

4. A steel company reduces the ore to billets and the steel company pays a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

5. The billet is sold to the wire-producing company, who takes it and makes it into rods, then to wire, and manufactures nails and barbed wire. This wire company pays a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

6. A railroad company delivers the barbed wire and nails to a jobber in Iowa, and into the cost of operation this company is obliged to figure a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

7. The jobber is incorporated and must add to the cost of doing business a corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

8. A railroad company transports the nails and barbed wire from a jobbing house to the dealer, and again we find it necessary to recognize the corporate tax of 13½ per cent.

9. We need not take the process much further, as only about 25 per cent of the dealers are incorporated. Those who are must pay the corporate tax. Those who are operating as a partnership or individual have an advantage over those who are incorporated.

From the above it will be seen that the corporate tax of 13½ per cent has been figured into the cost of the keg of nails or spool of barbed wire at least eight times. It is impossible to believe that a reduction of 2½ or 3½ per cent would not materially affect the price of the article in question to the consumer, who is in this case the Iowa farmer.

Now, I have been led to believe, and especially from the literature I have received from corporations, that a reduction of the corporation income tax would benefit the consumers. If this reduction in the corporation income tax is not going to benefit the consumers, then the strongest argument that has heretofore appealed to me why the tax should be reduced fails.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman what reason he thinks there would be for reducing the corporation tax at all under his theory, because he certainly will admit that corporations do not sell for less than what they can get.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Well, I read the report with a great deal of care.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The report went into that matter at great length.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If they do not sell for less than they can get, then after this tax is reduced and they do not sell for less than before the tax was reduced, from the people's standpoint what is the reason for reducing the tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman knows the reason. The only reason which was given to the committee was that this tax is imposed on the stockholders, that it is an unfair tax and an unfair discrimination.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I wish I had the time to read the statement I referred to a moment ago. It is along the line that the corporations have been contending to bring about income-tax reduction for the last two or three years. That statement will be in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman puts that in, I will put in the RECORD a letter from a corporation in Iowa equally as large.

Mr. RAMSEYER. My colleague is privileged to place in the RECORD anything he desires. One reason I am placing this statement in the RECORD is to make my position clearer to the gentleman and others than I could myself. I think the statement is accurate and fair.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman will examine the hearings, he will find where two gentlemen owning very large corporate interests stated that they owned and controlled, with their affiliated corporations, $42,000,000,000 worth of property, and that it was undoubtedly carried on to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I suggest the gentleman examine the hearings and see if they did not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has that wrong.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I did not read the hearings to which the gentleman refers, so I do not know about the accuracy of that statement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will state that the trend of prices, according to statements made in the RECORD, does not correspond with a reduction or increase of taxes. This argument that has been made by some has simply been made to help get taxes reduced. That is all.

Mr. RAMSEYER. My attitude on this proposition is the same as when the income tax on individuals was up. I am not, as I stated at other times in this House and as every Member of this House should know, for high income taxes for the sake of imposing burdens on individuals and corporations. I am ready to reduce taxes on corporations and individuals as low as it is possible and yet have enough money in the Treasury to meet the expenses of the Government and have enough left to apply annually a considerable amount on the national debt. I have expressed my attitude not only here but before the Ways and Means Committee on the importance of having an adequate surplus for the payment of the national debt.

This proposal to refund or to make the corporation income tax apply to the 1927 earnings, as well as the proposal made yesterday to refund the surpluses annually to certain taxpayers, is economically unsound, lacking in good statesmanship, and in the long run will prove politically unwise. This $180,000,000 deducted from the 1927 corporation income tax should be applied on war debt payments.

FARM ORGANIZATIONS FAVOR DEBT REDUCTION AND OPPOSE INCOME-TAX REDUCTION

My chief purpose in asking for time this afternoon to discuss the tax bill is to get before you the attitude of the great farm organizations of the United States on the proposition of paying the war debt speedily. I have maintained ever since the war that the war debt should be paid speedily and that provision should be made by law for a sinking fund applicable to the entire national debt. Now the sinking fund applies to only about half of the national debt. In recent years the farm organizations have taken the same position that I have urged since the war. I, of course, do not claim they have taken this position because I have been contending for it, but I am presenting it to you to bring to your attention how the great mass of the people, through their organizations, are thinking and that they are demanding of Congress at this session that nothing be done to interfere with the orderly and speedy payment of the national debt.

The three great farm organizations, to wit, American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers' Union, and the National Grange, held their national conventions during the latter part of last fall, while the Ways and Means Committee was considering this bill and after the Treasury recommendations had been made. All three of these organizations are opposed to reduction in income taxes, are opposed to the repeal of the Federal estate tax, and favor the speedy payment of the national debt.

The Farm Bureau Federation last month reaffirmed its resolution along this line adopted a year ago. It reads as follows:

Our Federal debt was created in times of prosperity. It should be liquidated with all reasonable expedition while prosperous times continue. To delay into future generations the payment of this debt would be equivalent to doubling the burden not only in the interest paid but in regard to times of depression into which our Nation may occasionally fall.

Any excess for years to come of income over expenses should be used in lessening the debt burden of our country rather than refunding it to persons and corporations who paid.

We reaffirm our position relative to Federal taxation, which is, substantially, that the basis of payment of such taxes should be net income. Present tendencies of granting exemptions, of lowering rate brackets in income, corporation, and estate taxes, so that reduced taxes may be enjoyed by those best able to pay, and of reducing the annual payments on our national debt, all are tendencies in opposition to the tax policies of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

I wish to call your especial attention to the second paragraph of this resolution. It is worth rereading:

Any excess for years to come of income over expenses should be used—in lessening the debt burden of our country rather than refunding it to persons and corporations who paid.

Listen—

That position is absolutely sound, and Members of this House can do no better than to take a similar position.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAPES). The gentleman from Iowa has consumed 10 minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman's time is extended 10 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The Farmers' Union, in its national convention, also held last month, has this to say in its resolutions unanimously adopted:

We are emphatically opposed to the proposed reduction of Federal income-tax rates, especially on the higher income brackets.

We believe an inheritance and gifts tax is the fairest tax that can be levied, for the reason that no part of it can be passed on to the consumer. We also believe that the great war debt should be reduced as rapidly as possible, and that an inheritance tax materially assists in this reduction without burdening anyone.

Next I want to give you the position of the National Grange in its national convention, also held last month, in its resolutions, under the head of principal grange declarations, I find this statement:

Opposes reduction in income taxes at the present time.

Further in the resolutions is this statement:

The National Grange opposes any income-tax reduction until existing war debts are materially reduced.

Here you have the great farm organizations of the United States speaking with unanimity. On the proposition of farm-relief legislation the farm organizations are not united, but on the question of applying the surpluses in the Treasury to reducing the national debt, every farm organization is absolutely of one mind.

I have not had time to investigate the attitude of labor organizations of the United States on this question, but I am advised from reliable sources that the labor organizations, and the laborers generally, of the United States are in accord with the farm organizations and the farmers on the issues that I have just submitted to you in the resolutions of the three great farm organizations. In other words, 80 or 90 per cent of the voters of the United States are in accord with the farm organizations in their attitude on war-debt payments.

I have made known to you now the attitude of the great farm organizations of the United States on what I regard the chief issues in connection with this tax bill. I insist that the attitude of these organizations is entitled to your most respectful consideration.

Next, I wish to present to you the attitude of the President of the United States, as expressed in annual messages and in speeches, on the rapid payment of the war debt. In his annual message to the Sixty-ninth Congress the President came out very strongly for the speedy payment of the war debt. Just preceding that message several prominent Members of Congress had given out interviews that they favored refunding of our war debt so as to extend the payment over a period of 62 years. The President, in that message, strongly opposed that proposal and suggested by way of illustration the payment in 20 years. The President again stated his position emphatically in his last message. I shall place in the RECORD excerpts from the President's message to the Sixty-ninth Congress.

The most forceful and thought-provoking statement made by the President on this subject was in his speech before the Union League of Philadelphia on November 17, 1927. I read:

The enormous debt has been partly refinanced at progressively lower rates and increasingly diminished in amount. At the end of this fiscal year almost one-third of the entire debt will have been paid. The saving in interest alone is about $1,000,000 for each day. But—well over $18,000,000,000 of debt still remains. It is a menace to our credit. It is the greatest weakness in our line of national defense. It is the largest obstacle in the path of our economic development. It should be retired as fast as possible under a system of reasonable taxation.

When I read these meaningful sentences I was reminded of the exhortation of Solomon to those seeking wisdom and understanding:

To understand a proverb, and the interpretation; the words of the wise, and their dark sayings.

I fully realize that the propaganda for tax reduction has a stronger political appeal than the unanswerable arguments for debt reduction. To date we have made a very good record in debt reduction. The Treasury has applied every surplus dollar from every source derived to the retirement of the war debt. Now, we have come to the parting of the ways. According to the committee's estimate, if business continues prosperous, there will be a surplus not exceeding $41,000,000 in 1929. If business should be a little less prosperous, then there will be a deficit in the Treasury. So far as I can find in the report of the Ways and Means Committee, there is no recommendation to provide a surplus to apply on the war debt. That committee warns this House not to increase the tax reduction beyond that recommended in the bill for fear of a Treasury deficit. There is no concern expressed for a surplus to apply on the war debt. If the committee's estimates are correct, it is certain that there will be no considerable surplus to apply on the war debt, and there may be an actual Treasury deficit. As I stated when I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, I could not approve a bill that did not hold out the hope of a considerable surplus to apply on the war debt. I am for tax reduction whenever possible, but I can not approve tax reduction at the expense of debt reduction.

I have endeavored for a number of years to impress upon the Ways and Means Committee, and on the membership of this House, the importance of adopting a legislative policy that will insure the payment of the war debt by the generation that made it. I shall continue this fight. The sinking fund should apply to the entire war debt and not to only half thereof as is now the law. If the sinking fund did apply to the entire debt, then you could talk about balancing the Budget and nothing more. As long as this sinking fund law remains as it is, it should be the attitude of Congress in writing tax bills to see to it that there is a surplus of several hundred million dollars in the Treasury to apply on war-debt payments in addition to the present sinking fund and other existing provisions for debt retirement. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, having been granted leave to extend my remarks, I submit for printing in the RECORD, first, the following statement of Alexander Hamilton in "Cost of Government in the United States," by the National Industrial Conference, Inc., on page 125:

As the vicissitudes of nations beget a perpetual tendency to the accumulation of debt, there ought to be, in every government, a perpetual, anxious, and increasing effort to reduce that which at any time exists, as fast as shall be practicable, consistently with integrity and good faith.

Second. Two paragraphs from the President's annual message communicated to the two Houses of Congress at the beginning of the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress:

It has always been our policy to retire our debts. That of the Revolutionary War period, notwithstanding the additions made in 1812, was paid by 1835, and the Civil War debt within 23 years. Of the amount already paid, over $1,000,000,000 is a reduction in cash balances. That source is exhausted. Over one and two-thirds billions of dollars was derived from excess receipts. Tax reduction eliminates that. The sale of surplus war materials has been another element of our income. That is practically finished. With these eliminated, the reduction of the debt has been only about $500,000,000 each year, not an excessive sum on so large a debt.

Proposals have been made to extend the payment over a period of 62 years. If $1,000,000,000 is paid at the end of 20 years, the cost to the taxpayers is the principal and, if the interest is 4¼ per cent, a total of $1,850,000,000. If the same sum is paid at the end of 62 years, the cost is $3,635,000,000, or almost double. Here is another consideration: Compared with its purchasing power in 1913, the dollar we borrowed represented but 52 cents. As the value of our dollar increases, due to the falling prices of commodities, the burden of our debt increases. It has now risen to 63½ cents. The taxpayer will be required to produce nearly twice the amount of commodities to pay his debt if the dollar returns to the 1913 value. The more we pay while prices are high, the easier it will be.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were presented to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The committee resumed its session.

THE REVENUE BILL

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 120. INCOME FROM SOURCES WITHIN THE UNITED STATES

(a) Gross income from sources in United States: The following items of gross income shall be treated as income from sources within the United States:

(1) Interest: Interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, not including—

(A) interest on deposits with persons carrying on the banking business paid to persons not engaged in business within the United States and not having an office or place of business therein, or

(B) interest received from a resident alien individual, a resident foreign corporation, or a domestic corporation, when it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that less than 20 per cent of the gross income of such resident payor or domestic corporation has been derived from sources within the United States, as determined under the provisions of this section, for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year of such payor preceding the payment of such interest, or for such part of such period as may be applicable, or

(C) income derived by a foreign central bank of issue from bankers' acceptances;

(2) Dividends: The amount received as dividends—

(A) from a domestic corporation other than a corporation entitled to the benefits of section 251, and other than a corporation less than 20 per cent of whose gross income is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner to have been derived from sources within the United States, as determined under the provisions of this section, for the three-year period ending with the close of the taxable year of such corporation preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence), or

(B) from a foreign corporation unless less than 50 per cent of the gross income of such foreign corporation for the three-year period ending with the close of its taxable year preceding the declaration of such dividends (or for such part of such period as the corporation has been in existence) was derived from sources within the United States as determined under the provisions of this section;

(3) Personal services: Compensation for labor or personal services performed in the United States;

(4) Rentals and royalties: Rentals or royalties from property located in the United States or from any interest in such property, including rentals or royalties for the use of or for the privilege of using in the United States patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulas, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like property; and

(5) Sale of real property: Gains, profits, and income from the sale of real property located in the United States.

(b) Net income from sources in United States: From the items of gross income specified in subsection (a) of this section there shall be deducted the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of any expenses, losses, or other deductions which can not definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income. The remainder, if any, shall be included in full as net income from sources within the United States.

(c) Gross income from sources without United States: The following items of gross income shall be treated as income from sources without the United States:

(1) Interest other than that derived from sources within the United States as provided in subsection (a) (1) of this section;

(2) Dividends other than those derived from sources within the United States as provided in subsection (a) (2) of this section;

(3) Compensation for labor or personal services performed without the United States;

(4) Rentals or royalties from property located without the United States or from any interest in such property, including rentals or royalties for the use of or for the privilege of using without the United States, patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulas, good will, trade-marks, trade brands, franchises, and other like properties; and

(5) Gains, profits, and income from the sale of real property located without the United States.

(d) Net income from sources without United States: From the items of gross income specified in subsection (c) of this section there shall be deducted the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto, and a ratable part of any expenses, losses, or other deductions which can not definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income. The remainder, if any, shall be treated in full as net income from sources without the United States.

(e) Income from sources partly within and partly without United States: Items of gross income, expenses, losses, and deductions, other than those specified in subsections (a) and (c) of this section, shall be allocated or apportioned to sources within or without the United States, under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. Where items of gross income are separately allocated to sources within the United States there shall be deducted (for the purpose of computing the net income therefrom) the expenses, losses, and other deductions properly apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of other expenses, losses, or other deductions which can not definitely be allocated to some item or class of gross income. The remainder, if any, shall be included in full as net income from sources within the United States. In the case of gross income derived from sources partly within and partly without the United States the net income may first be computed by deducting the expenses, losses, or other deductions apportioned or allocated thereto and a ratable part of any expenses, losses, or other deductions which can not definitely be allocated to some items or class of gross income; and the portion of such net income attributable to sources within the United States may be determined by processes or formulas of general apportionment prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. Gains, profits, and income from—

(1) transportation or other services rendered partly within and partly without the United States, or

(2) from the sale of personal property produced (in whole or in part) by the taxpayer within and sold without the United States, or produced (in whole or in part) by the taxpayer without and sold within the United States, shall be treated as derived partly from sources within and partly from sources without the United States. Gains, profits, and income derived from the purchase of personal property within and its sale without the United States or from the purchase of personal property without and its sale within the United States, shall be treated as derived entirely from sources within the country in which sold, except that gains, profits, and income derived from the purchase of personal property within the United States and its sale within a possession of the United States or from the purchase of personal property within a possession of the United States and its sale within the United States shall be treated as derived partly from sources within and partly from sources without the United States.

(f) Definitions: As used in this section the words "sale" or "sold" include "exchange" or "exchanged"; and the word "produced" includes "created," "fabricated," "manufactured," "extracted," "processed," "cured," or "aged."

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Wherever there is an entirely new principle of taxation, or a new exemption, I think the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee ought to call attention to it. Here we have a new provision in section 120.

You turn to page 94, lines 10 and 11, you will find section C, which reads:

Income derived by a foreign central bank of issue from bankers' acceptances.

In order to know what that means you have got to turn back to page 93, lines 12, 13, 14, and 15, and you read:

(a) Gross income from sources in United States: The following items of gross income shall be treated as income from sources within the United States:

(1) Interest.—Interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, not including—

Now, the things you do not include are down here. The things not included are (A) and (B), and then you come to (C), which says—income derived by a foreign central bank of issue from bankers' acceptances.

Now, I am not going to make a motion to strike this out, but I do think the committee ought to understand the policy that is to be adopted by the Congress, and that is that we are favoring the foreign bank as against our own banks. If this exception did not go in, interest derived in this country by bank acceptances would be subject to tax. Interest on acceptances of your bank where they accept your paper have to pay interest.

Now, the query comes, Why did you make this exception? Well, you know when you make one exception it calls for another. When you make an exception it comes back to roost. The other fellow will say, "Well, you did it for MADDEN, why do you not do it for OLDFIELD?"

I remember the arguments made, as well as yesterday, before the Mexican conditions existed there. We exempted in the 1926 or the 1924 act—I forget which—the interest on money that the people of Mexico had in this country. That was to induce them to put their money in our banks. It was a good thing, good public policy, but I suggest that it is a little difficult to satisfy your own mind that you are going to give a preference to foreign banks.

It does not appeal to me and I would like to strike it out because (A), (B), and (C) are based on the same principle.

I might add inferentially for the information of the Republican side as well as the Democratic side that this provision is the only provision that was recognized in the bill looking to the Secretary of the Treasury's recommendations. We thought he was entitled to some recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I think the Secretary's recommendations are worthy of the most serious consideration. He is a great financier and in many ways has made a great Secretary of the Treasury. So that his recommendations ought to be recognized and I did not make any kick about giving him this exception.

There was one other thing that the Secretary recommended that we adopted. He made an argument before the committee that was unanswerable to my mind, and I think his argument ought to be recognized. I refer to the argument that he made in favor of continuing the tax on prize fights. It is a very forcible argument. He pointed out where we had received two hundred and fifty thousand and odd dollars from the Tunney-Dempsey prize fight, and he said, "Who wants to repeal it?" Mr. Chairman, I could not find it in my soul to make an argument against it, so we just increased the rate from 10 to 25 per cent in response to the Secretary's argument in favor of that method of taxation.

Mr. MADDEN. And I wish that you had made it more.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. We said, if it is such a good tax, as the Secretary says, we might just as well make the rate as high as we can make it to receive the greatest amount of revenue, and you will find in this bill an estimate of $750,000 additional revenue on account of that splendid argument made by the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to prize fights. He lost $35,000 by this other amendment to which I refer, but he recouped on account of his argument about prize fights some $750,000 for the benefit of the people.

Mr. MADDEN. So that there was a net profit of $725,000?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes; and this all because we carried out two of the suggestions made by the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I think my friend is altogether too modest. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is entitled to the credit for this provision with respect to prize fights, and I willingly give it to him.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Maybe so, but I just want to show that I am an impartial juror, and that I can give credit where credit is due, and whenever I can say a word for the Secretary of the Treasury I am anxious to do it. I took the floor on this occasion to point out these things, which we did because of the influence of the next greatest Secretary of the Treasury we have ever had—Alexander Hamilton being supposed to be the best.

Mr. MADDEN. And I suppose it is the gentleman's idea that a prize fight could be appreciated just as well with a 50 per cent tax as with a 20 per cent tax?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, no; 50 per cent would be too high. We would get no revenue.

Mr. MADDEN. What was the rate?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Twenty-five per cent. If we had thought that 30 per cent would be better than 25 per cent, we would have put it at 30 per cent, but the committee decided that 25 per cent was the rate that would bring in the largest amount of revenue. Coming to the conclusion that the Secretary had made such an argument as could not be answered in respect to prize fights, we put the rate where we thought we would get the greatest amount of revenue.

Mr. MADDEN. And what did he say about the rate?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. He did not have anything to say about the rate, but we, as scientific tax providers, thought that the rate we provided was the proper rate to produce the greatest amount of revenue.

Mr. MADDEN. I think the gentleman followed the Secretary of the Treasury by not paying any attention to him.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say just a word with regard to the provision in section 120 excepting and exempting from taxation the income derived by foreign central banks of issue from bankers' acceptances. This is done in order to keep foreign funds in the United States. In every other country in the world, particularly in the great countries of Europe, foreign banks of issue may keep funds on deposit without paying interest upon the income. There are three methods by which such foreign banks of issue can invest their money in the United States at the present time: First, by placing the money on deposit; second, by investing it in Government securities; and, third, by investing money in bankers' acceptances. Placing the money merely on deposit gives these banks of issue a very small return by way of interest. Some foreign banks of issue are not permitted to invest in Government securities which are not issued on a discount basis.

However, if those banks of issue invest their funds in these two methods, either by placing them on deposit in banking institutions or by purchasing Government securities, they are now exempt from tax upon the income. It is only in the case where they buy bankers' acceptances where they are now compelled to pay taxes on the income. These bankers' acceptances have the advantage that they are short-term paper and are very liquid assets and are just the kind of securities that foreign banks of issue want in order to keep their funds in the United States.

This statement is only by way of explanation for the insertion of this item in section 120, showing the reasons why the Treasury Department recommended this action be taken and why the Committee on Ways and Means approved it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 121. UNLIMITED DEDUCTION FOR CHARITABLE AND OTHER CONTRIBUTIONS

In the case of an individual if in the taxable year and in each of the 10 preceding taxable years the amount of the contributions or gifts described in section 23 (n) plus the amount of income, war-profits, or excess-profits taxes paid during such year in respect of preceding taxable years, exceeds 90 per cent of the taxpayer's net income for each such year, as computed without the benefit of section 23 (n), then the 15 per cent limit imposed by such section shall not be applicable.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a question. There is nothing in the report on this, and clearly it reads as though it was put in there to take care of some one individual.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is existing law. I have forgotten just when it was adopted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is nothing in the report about this.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is in the 1924 act.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is existing law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What is it doing here?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. We are adopting the whole title relating to the income tax after the year 1927.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I took that up the other day and I found that there are several sections of the existing law that are not repeated in this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then they will not be in force after this date.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then we have a few amendments to put in.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean with reference to the income tax?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For instance, there is one on the theater tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is different. As to the income tax, we are repeating the whole law.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And that is the law now?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If a man gives away 90 per cent of his income for 10 years, then he can deduct the whole amount?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are there many of these taxpayers?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; not a great many. It would be a good thing probably if there were more.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 208. MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES OTHER THAN LIFE

(a) Application of title: Mutual insurance companies, other than life insurance companies, shall be taxable in the same manner as other corporations, except as hereinafter provided in this section.

(b) Gross income: Mutual marine insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance.

(c) Deductions: In addition to the deductions allowed to corporations by section 23, the following deductions to insurance companies shall also be allowed, unless otherwise allowed:

(1) Mutual insurance companies other than life insurance: In the case of mutual insurance companies other than life insurance companies—

(A) the net addition required by law to be made within the taxable year to reserve funds (including in the case of assessment insurance companies the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as additions to guarantee or reserve funds); and

(B) the sums other than dividends paid within the taxable year on policy and annuity contracts.

(2) Mutual marine insurance companies: In the case of mutual marine insurance companies, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraph (1) of this subsection, unless otherwise allowed, amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment and the payment thereof;

(3) Mutual insurance companies other than life and marine: In the case of mutual insurance companies (including interinsurers and reciprocal underwriters, but not including mutual life or mutual marine insurance companies) requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses, the amount of premium deposits returned to their policyholders and the amount of premium deposits retained for the payment of losses, expenses, and reinsurance reserves.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, through the courtesy of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] I am permitted to make a brief statement. In 1924 the Income Tax Department made a ruling, or a ruling applies beginning then, that the heads and officials of county, municipal, and State hospitals are engaged in a proprietory business and therefore not exempt from taxation on their income. I have in my district the tuberculosis hospital in the State of New Jersey, built 20 years ago by State money, operated ever since by State taxation, and presided over by the same gentleman from the beginning, Doctor English. While we can not offer an amendment now with any success, I am going over to the higher body——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No, no; the lower body.

Mr. EATON. The lower body, and then if they can be induced to give relief to our long-suffering hospital officials we will come back here, and Mr. GREEN of Iowa and his copatriots assure me we will receive hospitable treatment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 214. CREDITS AGAINST NET INCOME

In the case of a nonresident alien individual the personal exemption allowed by section 25 (c) of this title shall be only $1,500. The credit for dependents allowed by section 25 (d) shall not be allowed in the case of a nonresident alien individual unless he is a resident of a contiguous country. These credits shall be determined by the status of the taxpayer on the last day of the taxable year, except that in case of death the rule provided in section 25 (e) (3) shall be applied.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I do this for the purpose of calling the attention of the House, and especially Members from the cotton States, to a demonstration that will be made of some cotton bales next Friday morning in the House Office Building, in response to an expressed desire on the part of several Members of the House.

The Department of Agriculture has been making some tests in the use of cotton bagging as distinguished from jute bagging in the wrapping of cotton. In performing these tests it took some cotton baled at Henderson, N. C. and compressed to high density at Norfolk, Va., and shipped it to Bremen, Germany, and back. They have taken 9 bales from this shipment. Of these 9 bales, 4 were wrapped in cotton bagging of various weights, 4 in cotton colored the same shade as jute, and 1 bound in jute. They were subjected to the test of being sent to Bremen, Germany, and shipped back, thus being subjected to twice the ordinary handling. It is found the cotton bagging was in good shape, and in most instances better than the jute bagging. These bales will be on display next Friday morning in the caucus room of the House Office Building through the courtesy of the Speaker and the Superintendent of the Building, and those interested will have an opportunity to see them and see their condition after having been shipped abroad and back. The bales shipped bound in cotton bagging part weighed 12 ounces per yard, part 16 ounces, part 20, and part 24 ounces. New jute weighed 32 ounces per yard. The weight of covering a bale of cotton is 5 to 9 pounds and jute 14 pounds, exclusive of ties. There is a difference of only 36 cents in the cost of a bale of cotton wrapped in cotton bagging from that wrapped in jute, and the main difference that has always taken place in the price received has been owing principally to the fact that in the Liverpool market cotton has customarily been docked 30 pounds for the bagging and ties. That is one of the reasons for discouragement in the use of cotton bagging.

Cotton bagging is gradually coming into use, and this test of of the department is to encourage the use of cotton in covering cotton bales. It would take some two or three or four hundred thousand bales off the surplus market if the cotton could be used instead of the jute.

Mr. CRISP. I believe the gentleman answered the question I was going to ask—if it was true that if the entire crop was wrapped in cotton it would dispose of about 500,000 bales of cotton and take it off the market?

Mr. JONES. Yes; in a large crop it might run near that amount. Of course, the problem of a surplus is of great concern to our people, and it would be of great benefit to the cotton-growing States. Jute is produced in foreign countries, principally in India, and not in this country. Any new uses that are found for cotton will aid in disposing of the surplus and thus tend to the maintenance of a fair price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPLEMENT L—ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF DEFICIENCIES

SEC. 271. DEFINITION OF DEFICIENCY

As used in this title in respect of a tax imposed by this title "deficiency" means—

(a) The amount by which the tax imposed by this title exceeds the amount shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return; but the amount so shown on the return shall first be increased by the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency, and decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax; or

(b) If no amount is shown as the tax by the taxpayer upon his return, or if no return is made by the taxpayer, then the amount by which the tax exceeds the amounts previously assessed (or collected without assessment) as a deficiency; but such amounts previously assessed, or collected without assessment, shall first be decreased by the amounts previously abated, credited, refunded, or otherwise repaid in respect of such tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, the section just read relates to the assessment and collection of deficiencies. Yesterday the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] raised a question with regard to the cost of collection of income taxes. I said I would try to secure some information upon that subject. I have here a statement sent me this morning by Mr. Charles R. Nash, the Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert a statement made by the Assistant to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

COST OF ADMINISTRATION—FISCAL YEAR 1927

The expenditures made for administering the internal-revenue tax laws for the fiscal year 1927 were $32,967,764.17, not including expenditures for refunding internal-revenue collections and taxes illegally collected, which in no sense are administrative expenses. The aggregate receipts of internal revenue for the fiscal year 1927 were $2,865,683,129.91, which makes the cost of operation for that fiscal year $1.15 for each $100 collected, as compared with $1.23 for each $100 collected for the fiscal year 1926, or a reduction of 6.5 per cent.

Approximately 40 per cent of the cost of administering internal-revenue tax laws during the fiscal year 1927 was expended in the auditing of back-year returns. It is not possible for the bureau to segregate the cost of auditing back-year returns from the cost of collecting the current year's revenue, as the work is interlocking to a vast extent, and the attempt to segregate such cost would require a very extensive as well as an expensive system of cost accounting.

The cost of collecting the internal revenue averaged very close to $1.80 for each $100 collected for 10 years prior to the World War. Following is a statement showing internal revenue receipts and expenditures, as well as the relative net cost of collecting each $100 for the fiscal years 1913 to 1927, inclusive. The cost of enforcing the narcotic and national prohibition acts is excluded in these figures for the years in which the enforcement of those acts was under the control of this bureau.

Fiscal year	Receipts	Expenditures	Cost per $100
1913	$344,424,453.85	$5,484,654.61	$1.59
1914	380,008,893.96	5,779,329.72	1.52
1915	415,681,023.86	6,804,688.77	1.64
1916	512,723,287.77	7,199,163.32	1.40
1917	809,393,640.44	7,699,031.08	.95
1918	3,698,955,820.93	12,003,214.07	.33
1919	3,850,150,078.56	20,573,771.52	.53
1920	5,407,580,251.81	27,037,134.50	.50

1924	2,796,179,257.06	34,676,688.11	1.24
1925	2,584,140,268.24	37,266,573.16	1.44
1926	2,835,999,892.19	34,948,483.37	1.23
1927	2,865,683,129.91	32,967,764.17	1.15

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall comment upon this statement only to the extent of saying that for the fiscal year 1927 the total receipts of the Internal Revenue Bureau from all sources were $2,865,683,129.91, and the expenditures for all purposes were $32,967,764.17, making an average cost per hundred dollars of collection of $1.15. In other words, one and fifteen one-hundredths per cent has been the rate of the cost of collection in the bureau. I think that is a very remarkable showing. [Applause.] It shows that even in the very lowest brackets of the income tax—and no matter what we do in the matter of exemptions and deductions there will always be a lowest bracket—in the very lowest bracket, where the rate is 1½ per cent, the tax would be $1.50 per hundred of net income. The average cost of collection is even less than that returned from the lowest tax that possibly might be collected.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman's statement analyze and show the cost in the collection of taxes, starting with the low brackets and going up? Is not advantage taken of the fact that, using all the taxes collected and the total expense as a basis, they include in many instances cases where they collect $50,000 or $100,000, it costs no more to collect it than to collect $1 from the poor working girl?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Illinois is not taking advantage of anybody. I stated what was the cost per $100 of collections in the bureau during the year 1927. Of course I have not segregated the cost in the manner suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma. The figures come from the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Any Member of the House can get exactly the same information as that I have procured, or any other information he may desire, by making application to the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. The point I want to make is this: When I was State auditor of the State of Oklahoma I could make a statement to show to the people of the State of Oklahoma how much it cost to collect $10,000,000, but the statement did not show how much it cost me to collect a dollar's tax from one individual.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not know how the gentleman conducted his office in Oklahoma.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. You could not well answer the question raised by the lady from New Jersey without covering that point.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I believe the statement I have inserted is informative, and I think the Members of the House will find that it gives them valuable facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 272. PROCEDURE IN GENERAL.

(a) Petition to Board of Tax Appeals.—If in the case of any taxpayer the commissioner determines that there is a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title, the commissioner is authorized to send notice of such deficiency to the taxpayer by registered mail. Within 60 days after such notice is mailed (not counting Sunday as the sixtieth day) the taxpayer may file a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals for a redetermination of the deficiency. No assessment of a deficiency in respect of the tax imposed by this title and no distraint or proceeding in court for its collection shall be made, begun, or prosecuted until such notice has been mailed to the taxpayer, nor until the expiration of such 60-day period, nor, if a petition has been filed with the board, until the decision of the board has become final. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 3224 of the Revised Statutes the making of such assessment or the beginning of such proceeding or distraint during the time such prohibition is in force may be enjoined by a proceeding in the proper court.

For exceptions to the restrictions imposed by this subsection see—

(1) Subsection (d) of this section, relating to waivers by the taxpayer;

(2) Subsection (f) of this section, relating to notifications of mathematical errors appearing upon the face of the return;

(3) Section 273, relating to jeopardy assessments;

(4) Section 274, relating to bankruptcy and receiverships; and

(5) Section 1001 of the revenue act of 1926, as amended, relating to assessment or collection of the amount of the deficiency determined by the board pending court review.

(b) Collection of deficiency found by board.—If the taxpayer files a petition with the board the entire amount redetermined as the deficiency by the decision of the board which has become final shall be assessed and shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector. No part of the amount determined as a deficiency by the commissioner, but disallowed as such by the decision of the board, which has become final, shall be assessed or be collected by distraint or by proceeding in court with or without assessment.

(c) Failure to file petition: If the taxpayer does not file a petition with the board within the time prescribed in subsection (a) of this section, the deficiency, notice of which has been mailed to the taxpayer, shall be assessed, and shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(d) Waiver of restrictions: The taxpayer shall at any time have the right, by a signed notice in writing filed with the commissioner, to waive the restrictions provided in subsection (a) of this section on the assessment and collection of the whole or any part of the deficiency.

(e) Increase of deficiency after notice mailed: The board shall have jurisdiction to redetermine the correct amount of the deficiency even if the amount so redetermined is greater than the amount of the deficiency, notice of which has been mailed to the taxpayer, and to determine whether any penalty, additional amount or addition to the tax should be assessed—if claim therefor is asserted by the commissioner at or before the hearing or a rehearing.

(f) Further deficiency letters restricted: If the commissioner has mailed to the taxpayer notice of a deficiency as provided in subsection (a) of this section, and the taxpayer files a petition with the board within the time prescribed in such subsection, the commissioner shall have no right to determine any additional deficiency in respect of the same taxable year, except in the case of fraud, and except as provided in subsection (e) of this section, relating to assertion of greater deficiencies before the board, or in section 273 (c), relating to the making of jeopardy assessments. If the taxpayer is notified that, on account of a mathematical error appearing upon the face of the return, an amount of tax in excess of that shown upon the return is due, and that an assessment of the tax has been or will be made on the basis of what would have been the correct amount of tax but for the mathematical error, such notice shall not be considered (for the purposes of this subsection, or of subsection (a) of this section, prohibiting assessment and collection until notice of deficiency has been mailed, or of section 322 (c), prohibiting credits or refunds after petition to the Board of Tax Appeals) as a notice of a deficiency, and the taxpayer shall have no right to file a petition with the board based on such notice, nor shall such assessment or collection be prohibited by the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

(g) Jurisdiction over other taxable years: The board in redetermining a deficiency in respect of any taxable year shall consider such facts with relation to the taxes for other taxable years as may be necessary correctly to redetermine the amount of such deficiency, but in so doing shall have no jurisdiction to determine whether or not the tax for any other taxable year has been overpaid or underpaid.

(h) Final decisions of board: For the purposes of this title the date on which a decision of the board becomes final shall be determined according to the provisions of section 1005 of the revenue act of 1926.

(i) Prorating of deficiency to installments: If the taxpayer has elected to pay the tax in installments and a deficiency has been assessed, the deficiency shall be prorated to the four installments. Except as provided in section 273 (relating to jeopardy assessments), that part of the deficiency so prorated to any installment the date for payment of which has not arrived, shall be collected at the same time as and as part of such installment. That part of the deficiency so prorated to any installment the date for payment of which has arrived, shall be paid upon notice and demand from the collector.

(j) Extension of time for payment of deficiencies: Where it is shown to the satisfaction of the commissioner that the payment of a deficiency upon the date prescribed for the payment thereof will result in undue hardship to the taxpayer the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary (except where the deficiency is due to negligence, to intentional disregard of rules and regulations, or to fraud with intent to evade tax), may grant an extension for the payment of such deficiency or any part thereof for a period not in excess of 18 months, and, in exceptional cases, for a further period not in excess of 12 months. If an extension is granted, the commissioner may require the taxpayer to furnish a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount of the deficiency, and with such sureties, as the commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the deficiency in accordance with the terms of the extension.

(k) Address for notice of deficiency: In the absence of notice to the commissioner under section 312 (a) of the existence of a fiduciary relationship, notice of a deficiency in respect of a tax imposed by this title, if mailed to the taxpayer at his last known address, shall be sufficient for the purposes of this title even if such taxpayer is deceased, or is under a legal disability, or, in the case of a corporation, has terminated its existence.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I would like at this time to offer an amendment that would change this whole section so that the tax returns would be much more simple to make than they are at present. I know that most of the Members of this House realize how difficult it is to make satisfactory returns at this time, and how intricate and expensive a proposition it is. We have in West Virginia a number of coal operators that have to come here as many as three different times to have their tax returns corrected on one case. In many instances they have to bring their books, their papers, their clerks and expert accountants, and the cost in getting these returns corrected is more than the amount they would get in return, and that in many instances is a very large amount. In fact, it costs some of the coal companies ten or twelve thousand dollars to get corrected back returns that have been assessed against them wrongfully. My amendment would simplify that in a general way.

They recently appointed a committee to go over that, but unfortunately I did not have an opportunity to go before that committee, and I want to ask at this time unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to print therein proposals which we think would be of much advantage in making returns under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES. I have read the report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which I received a few days ago. I have read the report with much interest, in view of the personal experience I have had with the bureau and those charged with the administration of the internal revenue laws.

The principal purpose for which a committee was appointed from both Houses of Congress was—to investigate measures and methods for the simplification of internal revenue taxes, particularly the income tax.

The result of the committee's investigation is a condemnation of the present methods as insufficient, causing the inexcusable delays and enormous expense to both the taxpayer and the Government. This delay and expense to the taxpayer is so great as to amount to a complete denial of justice in most cases where the taxpayer and the unit do not agree as to the facts and the law.

The utter lack of competency of the bureau is shown by the following facts, among others, taken from the report:

(1) In the last five years there was collected from the taxpayers the sum of $690,862,327.71 illegally and unjustly. The yearly average of these illegal exactions was $138,172,465.54. The average number of employees was 15,332, at a total expense to the Government of $170,360,571.75.

(2) One-half of all the cases involving $10,000 or more decided by the Board of Tax Appeals were decided in favor of the taxpayer. The findings of the bureau were wrong and unjustifiable in one-half of all its conclusions. This record of inefficiency necessarily resulted in overrunning the Board of Tax Appeals with more work than it can possibly turn out.

(3) Quoting from volume 3, page 2, of the report:

More than 19,000 undecided cases are now pending before the Board of Tax Appeals, involving aggregate deficiencies of $550,000,000. The petitions being filed with the Board of Tax Appeals (new cases) exceed the number disposed of by more than 200 per month.

By the end of next year there will be 21,400 undecided cases pending before the Board of Tax Appeals.

CAUSE OF THIS CONGESTION

Of course, it necessarily follows that as long as the department is wrong in half the cases that come before it, and forcing the taxpayers to pay more than $125,000,000 a year unjustly and without warrant of law, controversy and litigation will continue to increase.

The actual results of the present system condemn it as utterly inefficient and unduly extravagant.

The injustice to and burden upon the taxpayer in defending himself against these unlawful exactions are really appalling when all the facts are known and given proper consideration.

Unfortunately there is no way by which an intelligent estimate can be made of the vast sum of money that it costs the taxpayers to resist and defend the illegal demands that the Internal Revenue Department is making upon them. This expense in loss of time and expenditure of money is so great that thousands of taxpayers are paying these illegal assessments rather than to make a successful defense thereto, because it is cheaper in the long run to pay than to defend.

THE TAXPAYER'S BURDEN UNDER PRESENT CONDITIONS

(1) After filing his return he is visited by a field agent, to whom he must explain all of his business transactions, his books of account, depletions, and depreciations, including religious and charitable donations during the year. The field agent then makes his report to the local unit, which furnishes the taxpayer with a copy of the agent's report and finding.

(2) Taxpayer files his protest with the local unit and is given a hearing before this unit. This hearing means that the taxpayer brings a number of witnesses, including bookkeepers, accountants, engineers, experts of various sorts, including tax experts and attorneys. These witnesses are all high-priced specialists, who give their testimony after making a thorough examination of all the taxpayer's business transactions, plants, machinery, and physical conditions. From this evidence the local unit makes a recommendation to the department at Washington. The local unit has no power to settle anything, although it has heard all the evidence pro and con. It acts only as an advisory board. The local unit finally sends the case to Washington.

(3) Then the taxpayer, in order to receive simple justice at the hands of his Government, will be forced to take all his books and records and high-priced witnesses to Washington, and before some unit in the department have the second hearing and another trial. He must pay the railroad, Pullman fares, and hotel bills and other incidental expenses, which keep on mounting up. The chances are that the case will be shifted from one unit to another before a final determination is reached. I quote from page 5, volume 3, of joint committee's report:

(6) SHIFTING RESPONSIBILITY

It is admitted that there has been a failure on the part of the personnel of the bureau to assume responsibility in the disposition of cases. Final decisions have been shifted from place to place in the bureau and from the bureau to the Board of Tax Appeals. "Passing the buck" undoubtedly exists.

To such an extent has this "passing the buck" prevailed that several hearings, conferences, and trials have been required from the same taxpayer on the same case, attended with much cost and delay.

The reason for these various hearings and delays is stated as follows:

This is in most instances merely a consequence of the Treasury's inability to retain individuals competent and willing to assume responsibility and make final decisions.

After 10 years' experience, with the aid of many amendatory acts of Congress, the Treasury frankly admits that the present system is an utter failure, involving enormous and unnecessary time and expense upon the honest taxpayer.

(4) When a conclusion is finally reached by the bureau—one-half of which are erroneous—the taxpayer moves the case to the Board of Tax Appeals. This tribunal hears the whole case de novo. All the books, records, and witnesses that had given testimony (1) before the local unit and (2) before the unit in the bureau at Washington, often two or three times, must again (3) be brought all the way to Washington to testify and repeat before the Board of Tax Appeals precisely the same testimony and proofs that have been produced at least twice, and often three or four times before, at previous hearings, involving the same questions for the same year. It should be remembered that this complicated system of procedure is tremendously expensive to the taxpayer, which is a complete loss to him, to say nothing of the time taken away from his business.

The present system should be so simplified as to permit of but one hearing, involving the taking of testimony, and every step after that should be confined to the record made at the hearing.

In the interest of both the Government and taxpayer I make the following suggestions, which will speed the hearings and final determination of the cases and come as near to securing justice to all concerned as it is possible to do in matters of taxation:

A. The field agent should make his report direct to the collector in each district, the taxpayer to be furnished a copy from the collector's office. Upon receipt of such report the taxpayer can file his protest with the collector, setting forth the grounds of his objections to the report.

B. Upon such protest coming in the collector will fix a day for a hearing and so notify the taxpayer. At the time fixed the taxpayer will bring before the collector all his evidence to sustain his contention. The Government will be represented by counsel, who may introduce rebuttal testimony. The evidence on both sides will be taken down and made a part of the record. After argument of counsel, if any should be desired, the collector shall decide the matter in controversy, and his findings and judgment shall become a part of the record. There will be a complete record of the whole proceeding, including all the evidence and the collector's judgment thereon.

APPEALS

C. All appeals shall be taken direct to the Board of Tax Appeals sitting at Washington. This appellate tribunal will review the collector's findings on the record made before the collector, and sustain or correct it as they may find just. But they will hear no evidence of any kind other than that contained in the record itself. The Board of Tax Appeals will act solely as an appellate tribunal to correct the errors of the collector as they appear on the record already made.

The original record or a certified copy shall be sent by the collector to the Board of Tax Appeals whenever an appeal is desired, and thus save much time and expense in the preparation of a new record or a copy.

D. In the method suggested there would be one hearing with witnesses, and this would be held in the district where the taxpayer lives. Instead of three or four trials there would be but one, involving the expense of both sides in producing their testimony. After this one trial all the additional expense would be for counsel to argue the case from the record before the Board of Tax Appeals.

This suggestion is based upon precisely the same principle that governs all our court proceedings. The collector would correspond to our district or trial courts, where all the evidence heard becomes a part of the record. On appeals from the trial court the record is transmitted to the appellate court, which hears no evidence, but acts only upon the record before it, and corresponds to the Board of Tax Appeals.

If the Congress should act upon this suggestion and make provision for its adoption, it would do away with the present method, which the Treasury frankly admits is cumbersome and most inefficient. It would reduce the internal-revenue employees more than one-half, and thus save an enormous expense to the Government.

SPEED OF APPELLATE HEARINGS

The increasing congestion of cases before the Board of Tax Appeals is due to two causes primarily, namely:

(1) The taxing units of the bureau are constantly changing their personnel. The more experienced and efficient men are leaving the bureau for better employment outside. The less efficient are "passing the buck" from one to another, and finally the taxpayer is driven to the Board of Tax Appeals to get justice.

(2) The Board of Tax Appeals have to go into a trial de novo, with all the delays incident to the production and hearing of original evidence in each case. If the Board of Tax Appeals would hear these cases on the record as made they could dispose of three or four times as many cases as they do now and with greater satisfaction to themselves and the litigants.

Under the suggestion made the collector could not shift his responsibility. The parties interested would get action immediately, and his findings would carry such weight that his judgment in most cases would be accepted by both parties and thus become final at once. Whatever expert and technical assistance necessary could be supplied him by the commissioner on regular or periodical assignment. He can and would decide cases in the first instance with more dispatch and reliable judgment than can possibly be had from the bureau at Washington.

That the present system of administering the internal revenue affairs of the Government is faulty and woefully inefficient is known by all who have had any experience with the bureau at Washington. In order to correct and simplify it so that it will function expeditiously with the least cost and expense to the taxpayer and delay to the Government, controversies should be heard and tried in the district where the taxpayer lives. This is the policy established by Congress for the administration of justice in our courts. A man may not be sued except in the judicial district where he resides.

To a considerable extent the foregoing suggestions have been approved by the report of the committee.

The report says, page 7, column 1:

In order to bring the audit work current, collectors of internal revenue have been assigned the task of auditing all the smaller individual returns, and during the past few years have also audited a majority of the larger individual returns.

With the aid of the field agent the collector can give an intelligent audit to all the returns filed with him, whether individual or corporate.

The committee says (p. 7):

It is recommended that serious consideration be given to the consolidation of the offices of collectors of internal revenue and the offices of internal revenue agents. A single organization will promote efficiency and convenience to taxpayers in the collection of taxes for the following reasons:

(a) Better service will be rendered to the taxpayer since there would be one directing head and one office in each collection district to which a taxpayer "may have convenient access."

(b) It would aid the central office at Washington.

(c) There would be a saving of $2,000,000 a year in expense. At present "there is a duplication of work in the mathematical verification of tax returns. There is a duplication in the numerous records that are required to be maintained. There is a duplication in the correspondence and files. Other important elements on which savings can be effected are rentals of office space, telephone, consolidation of mechanical equipment, and traveling expense."

If it is desirable, as the committee finds, to give the collectors more authority to determine in the first instance questions that arise between the Government and the taxpayer, such authority should be extended to include all returns and all taxpayers, individual and corporate.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 278. JEOPARDY ASSESSMENTS

(a) Authority for making: If the commissioner believes that the assessment or collection of a deficiency will be jeopardized by delay, he shall immediately assess such deficiency (together with all interest, additional amounts, or additions to the tax provided for by law) and notice and demand shall be made by the collector for the payment thereof.

(b) Deficiency letters: If the jeopardy assessment is made before any notice in respect of the tax to which the jeopardy assessment relates has been mailed under section 272(a), then the commissioner shall mail a notice under such subsection within 60 days after the making of the assessment.

(c) Amount assessable before decision of board: The jeopardy assessment may be made in respect of a deficiency greater or less than that notice of which has been mailed to the taxpayer, despite the provisions of section 272(f) prohibiting the determination of additional deficiencies, and whether or not the taxpayer has therefore filed a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals. The commissioner shall notify the board of the amount of such assessment, if the petition is filed with the board before the making of the assessment or is subsequently filed, and the board shall have jurisdiction to redetermine the entire amount of the deficiency and of all amounts assessed at the same time in connection therewith.

(d) Amount assessable after decision of board: If the jeopardy assessment is made after the decision of the board is rendered, such assessment may be made only in respect of the deficiency determined by the board in its decision.

(e) Expiration of right to assess: A jeopardy assessment may not be made after the decision of the board has become final or after the taxpayer has filed a petition for review of the decision of the board.

(f) Bond to stay collection: When a jeopardy assessment has been made the taxpayer, within 10 days after notice and demand from the collector for the payment of the amount of the assessment, may obtain a stay of collection of the whole or any part of the amount of the assessment by filing with the collector a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount as to which the stay is desired, and with such sureties as the collector deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of so much of the amount, the collection of which is stayed by the bond, as is not abated by a decision of the board which has become final, together with interest thereon as provided in section 297.

(g) Same—Further conditions: If the bond is given before the taxpayer has filed his petition with the board under section 272(a), the bond shall contain a further condition that if a petition is not filed within the period provided in such subsection, then the amount the collection of which is stayed by the bond will be paid on notice and demand at any time after the expiration of such period, together with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of the jeopardy notice and demand to the date of notice and demand under this subsection.

(h) Waiver of stay: Upon the filing of the bond the collection of so much of the amount assessed as is covered by the bond shall be stayed. The taxpayer shall have the right to waive such stay at any time in respect of the whole or any part of the amount covered by the bond, and if as a result of such waiver any part of the amount covered by the bond is paid, then the bond shall, at the request of the taxpayer, be proportionately reduced. If the board determines that the amount assessed is greater than the amount which should have been assessed, then when the decision of the board is rendered the bond shall, at the request of the taxpayer, be proportionately reduced.

(i) Collection of unpaid amounts: When the petition has been filed with the board and when the amount which should have been assessed has been determined by a decision of the board which has become final, then any unpaid portion, the collection of which has been stayed by the bond, shall be collected as part of the tax upon notice and demand from the collector, and any remaining portion of the assessment shall be abated. If the amount already collected exceeds the amount determined as the amount which should have been assessed, such excess shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer as provided in section 322, without the filing of claim therefor. If the amount determined as the amount which should have been assessed is greater than the amount actually assessed, then the difference shall be assessed and shall be collected as part of the tax upon notice and demand from the collector.

(j) Claims in abatement: No claim in abatement shall be filed in respect of any assessment made after the enactment of this act in respect of any income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 166, strike out lines 17 to 20, inclusive, and insert:

"(j) Claims in abatement: No claim in abatement shall be filed in respect of any assessment in respect of any tax imposed by this title."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a clerical error. The language now in the bill applies to the 1926 act. What we should have is an amendment that will apply only to this act, and that is the purpose of the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk. The matter is fully covered so far as any taxes under the prior act are concerned by the prior law, and consequently the provision which is now in the bill is inappropriate. The amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 322. REFUNDS AND CREDITS

(a) Authorization: Where there has been an overpayment of any tax imposed by this title, the amount of such overpayment shall be credited against any income, war-profits, or excess-profits tax or installment thereof then due from the taxpayer, and any balance shall be refunded immediately to the taxpayer.

(b) Limitation on allowance.—

(1) Period of limitation: No such credit or refund shall be allowed or made after three years from the time the tax was paid, unless before the expiration of such period a claim therefor is filed by the taxpayer.

(2) Limit on amount of credit or refund: The amount of the credit or refund shall not exceed the portion of the tax paid during the three years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, or if no claim was filed, then during the three years immediately preceding the allowance of the credit or refund.

(c) Effect of petition to board: If the commissioner has mailed to the taxpayer a notice of deficiency under section 272(a) and if the taxpayer files a petition with the Board of Tax Appeals within the time prescribed in such subsection, no credit or refund in respect of the tax for the taxable year in respect of which the commissioner has determined the deficiency shall be allowed or made and no suit by the taxpayer for the recovery of any part of such tax shall be instituted in any court except—

(1) As to overpayments determined by a decision of the board which has become final; and

(2) As to any amount collected in excess of an amount computed in accordance with the decision of the board which has become final; and

(3) As to any amount collected after the period of limitation upon the beginning of distraint or a proceeding in court for collection has expired; but in any such claim for credit or refund or in any such suit for refund the decision of the board which has become final, as to whether such period has expired before the notice of deficiency was mailed, shall be conclusive.

(d) Overpayment found by board: If the board finds that there is no deficiency and further finds that the taxpayer has made an overpayment of tax in respect of the taxable year in respect of which the commissioner determined the deficiency, the board shall have jurisdiction to determine the amount of such overpayment, and such amount shall, when the decision of the board has become final, be credited or refunded to the taxpayer. No such credit or refund shall be made of any portion of the tax paid more than three years before the filing of the claim or the filing of the petition, whichever is earlier.

(e) Tax withheld at source: For refund or credit in case of excessive withholding at the source, see section 143 (f).

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I understood from one of the gentlemen on this committee that this bill provided that where a corporation or individual transferred its or his business they could get a receipt from the department, if they did not owe anything, so they would not hold up funds for taxes. I want to know whether I am correct.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no special provision of that kind. But I had understood that where a receipt was obtained the department carried out that idea.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman that under the present administration we have corporations which are not making any money and, therefore, they pay no taxes. They sell out, but they are compelled to hold up a certain amount of their assets until the statute of limitations runs and there is nobody authorized to issue a statement that they have no claim for taxes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I understand what the gentleman refers to. There is a provision in the bill for a settlement between the bureau and the taxpayer and where that is agreed to by both parties that is final absolutely and it can not be opened up again.

Mr. McKEOWN. If there are no taxes due they can so certify and turn him loose so that his funds will not be held up indefinitely? They do not do it now and I wanted to know whether under this bill that can be done.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman refers to the matter of a release of liens?

Mr. McKEOWN. No. I will illustrate. Corporation A has paid taxes, but in 1926 it makes no money and, therefore, has to pay no taxes and there are no taxes due; then corporation A sells out to corporation B and corporation B requires corporation A to hold certain funds from that sale until the statute of limitations runs. That ought not to be, and I want to know whether there is any provision in this bill by which corporation A can go to the Treasury Department, have an examination made, and get a clear receipt that there is no claim, and turn their property loose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There are two provisions which would apply to the case the gentleman mentions. The first is that provision with reference to settlements, which provides that when an agreement is made between the Treasury Department and a taxpayer a final settlement can be made and it can not be reopened. Then there is another provision that when a corporation wants to dissolve, they can have a final audit within a year.

Mr. McKEOWN. If that is construed to apply to a sale, it is a good provision, but the way it is at the present time if a corporation sells out, it is compelled to hold certain assets for an indefinite period of time until the statute of limitations runs and that ought to be cured in this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know how a corporation could sell out entirely without dissolving.

Mr. McKEOWN. One corporation can buy out another corporation or an individual can buy the property of a corporation and dissolve it. All I am trying to do is simply to have some provision in the bill providing that the department shall give them a clear receipt and say there is no tax due so they will not hold up any of their assets. I think it is a very necessary matter and I would like to have the committee's construction that it is the intention of the department to do that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that can be done.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is all I wanted to know. The thing I am interested in is that it is provided for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—MISCELLANEOUS TAXES

PART I. ESTATE TAX

SEC. 401. DEDUCTIONS IN CASE OF NONRESIDENT DECEDENTS

(a) Section 303 (b) (1) of the revenue act of 1926 (relating to deductions from the gross estate of a nonresident decedent) is amended by striking out: ", but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per cent of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States."

(d) Overpayment found by board: If the board finds that there is no deficiency and further finds that the taxpayer has made an overpayment of tax in respect——

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MERRITT: Page 183, after line 16, insert a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 401, Title III, of the revenue act of 1926, shall not apply in the case of any decedent dying after the enactment of this act."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment very clearly is out of order, but I am not going to make a point of order against it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I think the House or the committee ought to have an opportunity to debate this question, and I do not want to be charged with preparing the bill in such form that the amendment would not be in order. I have been charged, I may say, if the gentleman from Connecticut will permit——

Mr. MERRITT. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In some of the public prints I have been charged with not permitting a fair submission of this question to the Ways and Means Committee at the time of the hearing. This charge was utterly and absolutely false. Every indulgence was granted at the hearing to those who favored the repeal of the tax, nevertheless some of the papers misrepresented the matter. I saw a quotation from the Louisville Courier-Journal the other day in criticism of myself and the gentleman from Texas to the effect that the gentleman from Texas and myself said at the hearings that the people who were there asking the repeal of the inheritance tax had no business there because they were not invited and that nobody had any right to appear before the committee except those who had been specially invited by the committee. Now, there is not a word of truth in such a statement. The fact of the matter is the committee did not specially invite anybody at any of the hearings, out of all the numerous witnesses, except the Secretary of the Treasury and such officials as he wanted to present. They were the only ones to whom the committee sent any special invitations, and I do not want to have any repetition of such comments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment which the gentleman has offered, although I shall not insist upon it. I want to ask the chairman of the committee, however, this question. The gentleman has stated he is in favor of rather liberal debate upon the question now pending.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's purpose to attempt to press for a vote on any actual amendments of the bill this afternoon?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; it is not. We ran very late last night, and I think we can well afford to adjourn a little early this afternoon.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. May I ask the gentleman a question in order that the gentlemen of the House who may have business elsewhere may be informed? Is it the purpose to try to pass the bill to-morrow or have it go over for a vote on Thursday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it would be best to have it go over for a vote on Thursday.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I think it would be well to have an agreement now that the bill will be voted on Thursday, so that the membership of the House may accommodate themselves accordingly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No earlier than Thursday, the gentleman means?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No earlier than Thursday. We will then have ample opportunity to-morrow for debate on this amendment as well as other amendments that will be offered. It will be an accommodation to the House to know that we are going to vote on the bill Thursday.

The CHAIRMAN. We can not have an agreement to that effect now, of course, because that would have to be submitted to the House, but we can have an understanding.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether it would not be possible to approximate the length of the debate now so that we may have some idea as to when the vote will come in the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You can not do that in Committee of the Whole. You can have a gentleman's understanding that a vote will not be taken earlier than Thursday, but, of course, you can not in Committee of the Whole fix a definite time.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But there can be some understanding as to our purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; of course.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that the debate close in one hour or two hours——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman means on this particular matter?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; on this particular item. We can make that one hour or two hours or whatever time may be agreeable.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman was referring to the vote on the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; only on this particular item.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] proceeds, will he permit a further interruption?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I may, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Texas. Is it now understood that the final votes upon this bill will not be had earlier than Thursday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the understanding to which I have heard no objection from any one. It is agreeable to the gentleman from Texas and myself.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then there will be no roll calls earlier than Thursday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No roll calls earlier than Thursday, but I hope gentlemen will attend, nevertheless, when there are votes here in the committee.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take the time of the committee to go into a general argument with reference to the estate tax either on economic grounds or on constitutional grounds.

The economic ground is well understood—that the tendency of estate taxes is to use accumulated-capital estates for current expenses, which is an economic waste. The legal or constitutional ground is equally well understood that the right to hold property and to dispose of it by will depends on the law of the States and not on the United States, and therefore the tax should be left to the States. These grounds have been discussed so often that nothing can be added to them now.

If, under the necessities of war, the United States steps in and levies taxes on estates despite these economic and constitutional objections, there is certainly no excuse for the United States to lay these taxes in time of peace.

But at present, even beyond these reasons which are basic and which exist at all times, it appears to me that an objection even more important appears in the reasons given by the committee, and those favoring it, for continuing the tax at this time. The reasons given are that if the United States does not impose this tax then the State in many cases will not, and that there will be a race among the States for taking off the estate tax which will result in social injustice.

That has been stated many times in argument and in the hearings. Now, obviously, if those are the reasons it means that we are continuing this tax, not for the purpose of revenue but for certain social purposes, under the urge of those who fear the evils of large estates, and therefore think that a part at least of these estates should be taken away from the heirs and thus avoid danger to the social fabric. Therefore the United States through its Congress is undertaking to coerce the States and legislatures by Federal legislation in regard to State legislation on estate taxes.

It appears to me that if there is or ever has been any clear invasion by the United States of the sovereign rights of the States, this is a very glaring example. If the United States can legislate so as to force the States into a certain line of legislation on estates, of course they can do it in other directions.

For example, the State of Connecticut has no income tax. Perhaps some social reformer would say we ought to have an income tax, and therefore legislate in our Federal revenue bill so as to force the State of Connecticut to have an income tax. I do not believe gentlemen would seriously consider that, but I do not see any difference in the logic of it. Or they might insist that we should have a certain type of excise tax in the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. MERRITT. I shall be very glad to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The purpose of levying the tax is so that the estate tax shall be substantially equal, and if the State desires to levy a tax it can do so. The other purpose is that it is going to yield a considerable amount of revenue, which is very important in this bill, in the way we stand now.

Mr. MERRITT. If the reason of the tax was to raise revenue for the United States and have it equal throughout the Nation, and that was all there was of it, my contention, except as to the economical and constitutional grounds, would fail; but when the bill says that the United States will collect $100 and give the State back $80, it seems to me the reason given by the chairman is interfered with.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will my friend yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman has indicated that there are legal objections to the plan that is now in effect. I take it for granted the gentleman's attention has been called to the case decided by the Supreme Court in January, the case of the State of Florida against Mellon, in which it appears from the principal brief for the State of Florida that every conceivable constitutional objection was presented, and all of those objections seem to have been overruled, the court holding that the legislation is constitutional. Explicit reference was made to the 80 per cent credit and the motive of Congress in providing it. And so I think we must assume that the validity of the act is now beyond question.

Mr. MERRITT. I admit that the decision of the Supreme Court takes precedence of my view of the law, but I was arguing the matter on general theoretical principles.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. I ask the gentleman to differentiate between an invasion of State rights when the Federal Government undertakes to tax the estate of an individual, and the action of the Federal Government when it undertakes to tax the income of an individual while alive. What violates State rights in the first case and does not in the second?

Mr. MERRITT. Of course there is a difference between the income of an estate and the estate itself.

Mr. BEGG. I would not concede that. The estate just becomes an income to some individual.

Mr. MERRITT. Oh, no.

Mr. BEGG. Why not?

Mr. MERRITT. It is a gift from a deceased person.

Mr. BEGG. If some of my ancestors die and leave me some money or some property, I do not know what you would call it if it is not exactly the same thing as getting an extra dividend, say, from some stock that I might hold.

Mr. MERRITT. But the gentleman's ancestor would have to die every year.

Mr. BEGG. Oh, I do not have to have that extra dividend every year.

Mr. MERRITT. No; the gentleman does not, but I think there is a very distinct economic difference between accumulated capital and the income from the employment of that capital.

Mr. BEGG. I would agree with the gentleman if he undertook to discuss the question from a certain angle, but I am trying to hold it to a discussion of State rights. If the Federal Government is violating State rights by taxing the estate of an individual, would it not also violate the same State right by taxing the income of that individual?

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Of course, we have a constitutional amendment upon the matter of the income tax. I do not say that the Federal estate tax is unconstitutional, and I am in favor of the estate tax.

Mr. BEGG. That does not answer anything. I want to know what the difference is in the violation of State rights.

Mr. MERRITT. I admit it is legal. I am only talking about the theoretical sovereignty of the State. When you talk about something that you get by devise being the same as income, I think the gentleman is in error economically, because what he is talking about is the same as if I went into his State and said to his ancestors while living, "I am going to take 10 per cent of your capital."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I have practically finished what I had to say, because all of these questions have been considered by you gentlemen on the floor. I do think that we ought to all bear in mind the danger of legislating to bring results indirectly. The Supreme Court has animadverted on that in the child-labor case and some others, I think. If we will confine ourselves to Federal matters and to scrutinizing not only legislation of this sort, but so-called State-aid legislation, I think we shall much better preserve the integrity of the union and the sovereignty of the States and the independence of our citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print at the end of my remarks the resolution of the Connecticut Legislature on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection, but I think the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] had that printed the other day.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, it is a very short resolution and it seems to me that it would come very properly at the close of my colleague's remarks. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I have no objection to it, but I call attention to the fact that in the RECORD of this morning will be found resolutions of the various legislatures of the United States that have been passed on this subject, all inserted in the Senate proceedings and it includes the resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 36

Resolved by this assembly—

Whereas by the provisions of the Federal revenue act of 1926, which impose taxes on the estates of deceased persons, this State is being subjected to a form of coercion in order to compel the imposition of State death taxes at rates higher than its citizens desire to impose upon themselves for their own needs and benefit; and

Whereas any form of coercion, or financial inducement to States, by Federal authority is in distinct conflict with the spirit of our constitutional government, is offensive to sound policy, and is destructive of the responsibility of citizens and of States with respect to the power to levy taxes, the most vital of the powers which inhere in government; and

Whereas joint levies of taxes by the Federal Government on the one hand, and by the States of the Union on the other hand, are unprecedented in the history of this country, and are particularly offensive when the Federal enactment operates in any way to influence or control the exercise of sovereignty by the respective States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the general assembly that the Congress of the United States should forthwith repeal the provisions of the revenue act of 1926 which impose taxes on the estates of deceased persons, leaving this field of taxation exclusively to the States of the Union in times of peace.

* * * * * * *

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the chairman of the committee if we are going to adjourn at this time or when?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Unless the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] wants to be heard now, I would be glad to move that the committee rise. I think that we will adjourn very shortly.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I would like to have the floor at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], a member of the committee, is on his feet.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I will defer to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 1, had come to no resolution thereon.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 92

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorizd and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, the office of legislative counsel, and employees paid on vouchers under authority of resolutions, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1927, on the 20th day of that month.

Mr. MADDEN. I move the adoption of the resolution. It is the usual resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time and passed.

ADDRESS OF LOUIS LUDLOW, PRESIDENT OF THE NATIONAL PRESS CLUB

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have an address made by Mr. Louis Ludlow, president of the National Press Club, at a luncheon held in Indianapolis, which bears upon constitutional questions. I think it is a valuable address, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, how long is this address?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is not very long, the length of an ordinary luncheon address.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Upon what subject?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon constitutional questions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not believe I care to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following remarks of Louis Ludlow, president of the National Press Club:

BACK TO THE CONSTITUTION

Jacob turned out to be a great patriarch, albeit in his younger days he was a pretty shifty specimen. There was something about the unregenerated Jacob, his imaginative faculties and, above all, his clever way of doing things which suggests a resemblance to that modern doer of great deeds, Doctor Cook.

But the parallelism between Jacob and the great explorer diverges at Bethel, the "House of God." From the time Jacob, in his dream, saw the ladder that arose to Heaven he was a zealous servant of the Lord. Time, grown dim with age, does not efface the record of service he made in the upbuilding of the Lord's kingdom. And, in foreign lands, after he had overcome rather heavy marital difficulties and had founded the Tribes of Israel, his heart always went back to Bethel and he yearned, and yearned, and yearned, for the place where God first made him see the light. Fortunate he was to realize his hope, and no tongue can tell and no pen can describe the joy that must have bathed his soul when he was permitted to go back again to Bethel.

The happiness I feel to-day must be somewhat akin to that which overflowed Jacob when he went back to the scene of his youth, for Indianapolis is, indeed, my "House of God." My newspaper associates at the Capital have been very kind to me and I can not measure my gratitude to them. They have given to me the highest and the best that is within their power to bestow. There is joy and magic in the touch of their friendly elbows, but, after all, there are no ties like the ties of home.

And when, some months ago, the ties of home began to press and strain against my heart, and I became homesick as I think I never had been before, I received a letter from your president inviting me to this presence, and I want to thank Mr. Sparks, and all of you, for affording me this incentive and this opportunity to come back again to Bethel.

Before I proceed to a discussion along other lines you will pardon me, I know, if I dwell a little longer upon the emotions that arise within me. That letter from Mr. Sparks set a thousand bells to tinkling in my recollection and made all of the chords of my heart to join in "Home, Sweet Home." I remember our city (I say "our city" because in all my wanderings and through all my vicarious adventures Indianapolis has remained my home and heaven) when it was truly a Main-Street town, practically all of its activities being centered on its arterial thoroughfare. I also remember—and this is the very ne plus ultra of unchallengeable evidence of my antiquity—the old transfer station, that queer structure with a cheese-box effect through which all street-car passengers in the early nineties were cleared for transfer. It was an institution that was outstanding and distinctive. In subsequent years while rambling over the country I have made inquiries to satisfy my curiosity, and I have never yet found any other city that ever had a transfer box like ours. In the days when it flourished, with plain-clothes men guarding its portals, every citizen of Indianapolis who lingered in the vicinity of Illinois and Washington Streets was under heavy suspicion of nourishing a wicked scheme to beat the street-car company, and the burden of proof was on him.

MISTS OF YEARS FADE AWAY

As I stand here to-day my mind is surfeited with moving pictures of the past, and I hardly know whether the entertainment which I visualize is a comedy or a tragedy. The mists of years fade away and I can see myself out there on Illinois Street, just as I came up from the country when I was a boy three and a half decades ago, looking for a job, a stranger in a strange land; my mother's lunch basket on my arm; wearing a pancake hat, trousers several inches too short, $1.96 in my purse, a whang watch chain dangling over my vest front and in my pocket a watch which, if it had been a sentient thing, would have felt complimented on being called a turnip. I can see an electric car whiz by me—one of the half dozen or so then being operated on the only electrified line in Indianapolis—and I can see myself jump 6 inches in the clear.

I can see myself the next day over yonder on East Ohio Street, wearing the same sartorial ensemble, as I enter the old Sun office, housed in an ancient weather-beaten residence, and receive from Fred Purdy—God bless him!—a little friendly advice and my first assignment as a writer. And I can see myself still, a few days later, as I enter the restaurant in the old union station to interview the restaurant's proprietor, Thomas Taggart, on a matter of news, and my heart still overflows with gratitude when I recall how fine and splendid he was to me, just as he always has been to everybody. He seemed to think, and rightly so, that I was the original "feller that needed a friend."

It was here in Indianapolis, as an ungainly, awkward, uncouth boy from the sticks, looking for a toe-hold in the world, I broke all of the conventionalities that society ever erected in all of the ages, as indicated by such faux pas as I committed when in blissful ignorance of clerical laws of celibacy I undertook to interview the imaginary wife of a beloved old priest concerning her putative husband's physical condition. It was across the street from here, in the office of the old Indianapolis Sentinel, adjacent to Dick Stegemeier's eating emporium, where I undertook to light an electric lamp with a match—a pioneering venture that was wholly unsuccessful.

SAILING WITH GOD, THE SEAS

It was here that during my youthful reportorial years of endless travail, of alternating hope and abysmal despair, I sailed, with God, the seas, not knowing whether or not I would ever be able to come into port. The experience, painful as it was when the operation was on, probably was good for me, because in this crucible of fate my sympathies were broadened and I resolved times without number that whatever might happen to me in after life I wanted to be always on the side of the under dog.

And it was here that on bended knees before that saintly old soul, Chancellor Charles N. Sims, pastor of Meridian Street Methodist Church, I made my first prayer to the Father of us all that He would permit all of the struggling millions of earth, then and forevermore, to see the light of His countenance and would save everybody—everywhere—at last in heaven, for the Redeemer's sake.

It was here that I married one of the Indianapolis girls, and I am happy to report to you to-day that she has tolerated me all these years and still abides with me. It was here that our four children were born. In the little Anderson graveyard, northeast of the city, lie my wife's parents, who were among the best beloved of Irvington's older citizens. The gates of heaven never opened to two better souls than Frank and Merilla Huber.

Is it any wonder that wherever I may roam my heart lingers here? When my eyes are feasting on the beauties of rural England or the matchless glories of the Alps I am thinking, in the back of my head, about this "no mean city," and when the currents of hot air surge and resurge in the Senate of the United States my mind draws the welcome antithetical analogy of the winds that whistle around the corner of Illinois and Washington Streets on a blizzardly day in January.

ROLL OF THE MIGHTY DEAD

As I call the roll it seems to me that there are more of my old friends on the other shore than there are this side of the eternal gates. Nearly all of those who, in those early years, by their kind acts taught me the meaning of the gracious doctrine of noblesse oblige, and helped a boy to wage a battle, are dead. Judge John H. Baker, William H. English, Benjamin Harrison, Claude Matthews, W. H. H. Miller, Gen. Lew Wallace, Nathan Morris, Edgar A. Brown, Hosea Hawkins, Col. Eli Lilly, James Whitcomb Riley, Otto Frenzel, Dr. William H. Wishard, Dr. P. H. Jameson, James L. Keach, Charles W. Fairbanks, Gen. George F. McGinnis, Felix McWhirter, William Watson Woollen, John W. Kern, Daniel Wait Howe, Frank B. Burke, David F. Allen, Addison C. Harris,

John H. Holliday, Smiley N. Chambers, David Turpie, Gen. John C. New, Dore Johnson, Hugh J. McGowan, Thomas R. Marshall, Samuel M. Ralston, Albert J. Beveridge—oh, the list is innumerable! And when I think of all of the mighty dead, and all of the dead who were not so mighty, but so good and true, my voice chokes and my heart is touched by the pain of recollection.

Emerson, the great interpreter of the heart, who has done more, in my opinion, to chart the realm of divinity than any other philosopher whoever lived, save only the Man of Galilee, has said that love is our highest word and it is the synonym for God. Springing from a pioneer ancestry, whose family history is interwoven with the simple life, the humble faith, the camaraderie of Indiana Territory long before Statehood was vouchsafed to our matchless Commonwealth, my love for Indiana is as enduring as her sand dunes, as the banks of her Wabash, and as her everlasting hills.

It is to me a source of utmost pride that my forebears were among the earliest pioneers, who bore on their faces the stamp of honesty and sincerity and whose patience and industry carved out of the wilderness this great empire we call Indiana. It has always seemed to me that I loved the whole State and that I am bound to her by myriad bonds of affection. It is a solemn thought that many of these mystic ties, after so long a lapse of years, reach out into the silent cities of the dead, but others go into living hearts of purest gold and find there a response that, next to my intimate family affections, is the greatest joy and satisfaction I have in the world.

I pledge you to-day that I shall so strive to live that when the end comes I shall be able to surrender into the hands of those who love me an escutcheon that is untarnished and unsullied—the escutcheon of a Hoosier—and I shall expect when "thirty" is written at the end of my newspaper career to be put to sleep beneath the beautiful green blanket out yonder at Crown Hill that already covers so many of those whom I loved and who loved me.

WILL REGISTER TREMENDOUS SCOOP

Now that you have patiently indulged this overflow of soul I shall proceed to the subject of my remarks, which is "Back to the Constitution." I like that subject because it is so expressive of the extra-constitutional meanderings of the times and of the necessity of returning to the faith and practice of the fathers if America is to endure as a self-governing Nation of free men and women.

Speaking in the parlance with which I am most familiar, the time is coming in my opinion when some political party will be able to register a tremendous scoop if it goes before the country on a platform composed of those four meaningful words, the shortest and at the same time the most impelling platform the mind of man can conceive:

"Back to the Constitution!"

Not yet, perhaps, nor even soon, but some day the thinking people of this country will awaken to the demoralizing and devitalizing influence which paternalism is exerting in our national institutions, and when they do they will be not only ready, but eager, for this four-word, seven-syllabic platform. And while I am juggling with the horoscope let me add the prediction that when that times comes party lines will break and crackle like reeds before an avalanche of army tanks as a resolute electorate rushes the bureaucratic bulwarks and restores this Government to its constitutional moorings. If not, then God save the Republic!

As an observer of more than a quarter of a century at the seat of Government, honestly seeking to get a true X-ray picture of what ails us as a Nation, I believe the most unwholesome, the most insidious, the most far-reaching, the most distressing tendency of government to-day is the drift toward paternalism. The founding fathers had the right idea of government. Their heads were as clear as a bell. All we need to-day is a recrudescence to the principles they laid down, but the ship of state has been so warped out of its course by paternalistic and bureaucratic evolution that thoughtful persons almost despair of the future.

The fathers erected a government on the principle of dual sovereignty, it is true, but it was to be a government in which the people were to manage their home affairs as local welfare might dictate—a society of self-governing States, in which the people were to be left to rule themselves to as great an extent as possible. Under this well-devised order of things the Federal Government would touch the citizens lightly and would hardly be felt except in situations and crises that require unified national action.

THE IDEALISTIC CONCEPT

From this idealistic concept which the wisdom of the ages has accepted as best adapted to promote the happiness and contentment of a free people we have departed as far as one pole is from the other. The once-treasured doctrine, "The least governed the best governed" has given way to its antithesis, "The most governed the best governed." We no longer have a Government with local autonomy as the major factor, but a Government by an overshadowing and compelling Federal bureaucracy. I think it is literally true that all variations—and they have been many—from the simple constitutional scheme of Government provided by the founding fathers have been mischievous and dangerous experiments, baneful in their effect upon this country and upon the world, and that most of the evils from which we suffer governmentally may be traced to departures from either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution.

We have in Washington the great departments of government through which all of the executive functions would be transacted under the scheme of the fathers, but while these are 10 in number we also have more than 40 commissions, boards, and independent establishments that have reached out in all directions and usurped governmental functions. The growth of paternalism in America is vividly indicated by the preponderance of commissions and boards. As the spirit of paternalism waxed strong these commissions and other extra-constitutional forms began to spring up like mushrooms, the difference being that while a mushroom dies, a commission, once created, goes on forever. The State governments patterned after the national example and they, too, created commissions and boards and bureaus and whatnot, and the people have found themselves oppressed by supervising and directing authorities and their taxes pyramided at a horrid rate. Federal commissions have literally wasted billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money, which is bad enough; but when it is considered that they have been a potential medium in enforcing an enslaving paternalism upon the country, every patriot must rue their creation.

Alexander Hamilton, a political genius of the first magnitude, foresaw the danger, for he said:

"Lately Congress has gone into the measure of appointing boards but this, in my opinion, is a bad plan."

LINCOLN'S RULING PASSION

President Lincoln, with whom patriotism was a ruling passion, deplored the tendency toward extraconstitutional agencies of government, and out of the treasures of his mind he drew analogies and examples to warn his countrymen of the dangers which his statesmanship foresaw. Perhaps the last utterance by him on a public question was on this very subject. Its solemn notes have a peculiar force to-day. Just before he started for Ford's Theater on the fateful night of his assassination, a Mr. Ashmun, who had presided over the Republican National Convention of 1860, when Lincoln was first nominated for the Presidency, called at the White House and asked the President to appoint a commission to investigate certain cotton claims. Lincoln was under obligations to Ashmun, but he refused, and in doing so he spoke as a brave man and a patriot.

"Ashmun," he said, "I have done with commissions. I think they are contrivances to cheat the Government." (Vide Harry F. Atwood's Back to the Republic, p. 73.)

It undoubtedly was the purpose of the Constitution, although not specifically written into that instrument, that all governmental work, aside from legislative and judicial, should be performed by the heads of departments and their subordinates, and Federal Government has become wasteful, costly, inquisitorial, and domineering in proportion to the creation of commissions, boards, and other excrescences. The number of these commissions and establishments has grown and their tax-eating operations have developed until the appropriations for independent offices during the fiscal year 1928 amounts to over $500,000,000, or the equivalent of the entire cost of running the Government but a few decades ago. These sinister independent creations impose a thousand forms of paternalism upon the people and are continually grasping for more money and more power.

Those of us who spend our time watching the wheels of government go around see a hydra-headed and vicious paternalism grown up in this country which is touching every phase of life with its meddlesome activities and is sapping the very foundations of local self-government. The fact that this paternalism often hides behind the cloak of benevolence renders it less abhorrent only to those who are willing to take a dangerous dose of poison, provided only it is sugar coated. We who are behind the scenes do not lack concrete examples of this devitalizing influence at work in our Republic. They hit us in the face every time we turn around.

As I wrote this sentence I glimpsed on the desk before me a bulletin on frogs, issued by the Department of Commerce. I picked it up and waded through its textual and pictorial contents, and lo! I found in it a shining example of paternalism. It is a bulletin of 44 pages, superlatively illustrated, devoted to the propagation of frogs. It is hard for a simple-minded Hoosier to understand why Washington does not leave the task of propagating frogs to persons who are frogistically inclined. But Uncle Sam, standing away up there in his supernal majesty, says to the steady, easy-going frog:

"Multiply and replenish the earth!"

And to facilitate the frog in these worthy endeavors Uncle Sam, at the cost of untold thousands of the taxpayers' money, issues and circulates this bulletin.

I find upon examination that the bulletin was written by a Cornell professor who has a bug on frogs—pardon the metaphor—and here is some of the advice he hands out to the country boys who contemplate going into the frog business:

"Insects," he says, "are the main food reliance for frogs. Five orders, possibly a sixth (Diptera), enter largely into their dietary list. The five principal orders are Cleoptera, Lepidoptera, Hymenoptera, Hempitera, and Orthoptera."

FEEDING HIS FROG

The country boy whom Uncle Sam is encouraging to enter the frog business will know at once upon reading the above that when his frog gets hungry he must chase out after some Cleoptera, Lepidoptera, Hymenoptera, Hempitera, or Orthoptera. The Cornell professor in introducing his bulletin says:

"From time to time since Seth Green's day efforts have been made by our best fish culturists to raise frogs, but in all this period no definite successful mode of procedure has been evolved."

It remains for the Cornell savant to furnish clear and specific directions which any boy can grasp. For instance, quoting further from the bulletin:

"The aquatic salamanders, like the newt, frequently pull off eggs from a frog's egg mass for food. The large forms, like the mud puppy (Necturus) and hellbender (Cryptobranchus), may eat frogs' eggs or larvae if favorably situated. Among frogs there are several species whose adults do not stop at fratricide or cannibalism. In fact, it is one of the factors which has led some frog culturists to abandon bullfrogs, which will feed on anything from frogs to alligators, not even sparing their own progeny."

The freckled Indiana lad who wanders around barefooted in the marshes and herds his frogs will know hereafter—thanks to good old Uncle Sam—that he must be on the lookout for the Necturus and the hellbender, or the Cryptobranchus. However, he has some legitimate cause for satisfaction in the reflection that by the time one of his fractious bullfrogs has devoured an alligator it probably will be tired enough to hunt a corner somewhere and rest.

I have heard it said that some tight elections have been won by polling the frog vote, and I recommend this bulletin to our politicians who are interested in increasing the number of frogs.

Oh, the travesty of it all! To think that the Government that was founded by Jefferson and Hamilton—the Government that Lincoln died to save—has fallen so low that it has become an institution for the procreation of frogs!

MARK THISTLETHWAITE'S STORY

I note that while this bulletin is issued free through Members of Congress—Uncle Sam footing the bill, of course—extra copies may be obtained by any citizen from the Superintendent of Documents at 15 cents each, and I am reminded of Mark Thistlethwaite's story. All of us know Mark. He is the salt of the earth. Many years ago when Mark was a bachelor he and five other matrimonially unattached newspaper men decided they would live together, so they rented an apartment and fitted it out with half a dozen beds. In the course of time that pestiferous insect which the Cornell professor would call the Cimex Lectularius, but which Mark identified on the very first nibble as the old-fashioned bedbug, made its appearance, and the boys, after scratching a few days, decided to sell the furniture and close the establishment.

"What shall we ask for these beds?" inquired Mark.

One of his associates, a careful, thoughtful person, replied after a moment's reflection:

"Well, I'll tell you just what I think about that. No matter how little anybody pays for these beds he is going to get bit."

And that is exactly what I think about this bulletin. No matter how little any American citizen pays for it, he is going to get bit.

And so it goes. I have here an index of publications of the United States Department of Agriculture, and if anyone wants to get a bird's-eye view of paternalism all he needs to do is to run his eye over that book, with its names of thousands of publications paid for by the taxpayers, instructing the people how to do everything from roasting a peanut and putting the swaddling clothes on a baby to running a railroad. The distinguishing characteristic of most of these bulletins is that the bureaucrats tell the people how to do things concerning which the people are infinitely better informed than the bureaucrats.

Of course, paternalism costs frightfully, and the people pay the freight. And right here let me tell you a story about mosquitoes. I like this story because it shows that in at least one instance paternalism overreached itself and was hoist by its own petard. Under the head "Public Health Service," the appropriations for the fiscal year 1927 contained the following item:

"For a preliminary survey of the salt-marsh areas of the South Atlantic and Gulf States, to determine the exact character of the breeding places of the salt-marsh mosquitoes, in order that a definite idea may be formed as to the best methods of controlling the breeding of such mosquitoes, fiscal year 1927, $25,000, to be expended by the Public Health Service in cooperation with the Bureau of Entomology of the Department of Agriculture."

MOSQUITO MEETS MOSQUITO

Here the paternalistic camel stuck its nose into the mosquito tribe, and when the Senate Committee on Appropriations met again in solemn, secret conclave last spring to consider the 1928 appropriations the paternalistic camel was there trying to get its body in. Another appropriation of $25,000 to go after the salt-marsh mosquito was the objective. One of the greatest marvels of all times was that it was not granted offhand, and no doubt it would have been had not sectional rivalry developed among the mosquito champions on the committee.

One reverend Senator wanted to know why the comparatively inane and inoffensive salt-marsh mosquito of the Gulf of Mexico should be given a preferential status over the savage and muscular mosquitoes of New Jersey. This opened the ball. Nearly every Senator on the committee stood up valiantly for the prowess of the mosquitoes of his own State, and as the discussion proceeded State pride flared forth and State rights were defended in heated arguments. The proponents of the ferocious, man-eating mosquitoes of the North proved to be in the majority, and the upshot was that the committee adopted the item, but cut the amount to $10,000 and wrote the word "completion" into the item, so that the investigation of salt-marsh mosquitoes will end with the current fiscal year. The exact compromise that was worked out when mosquito met mosquito in the forum of debate is found on page 239 of the printed appropriations. Personally I have had many a chuckle over the outcome of this row, because it is the only instance in my recollection where paternalism, once intrenched and rampant, has had to take the count. Possibly the sad ending of the mosquito quiz is due to a realization by the committee that if all of the ferocious mosquitoes in America were "investigated," whatever that may mean, it would be necessary to float a billion-dollar loan. In this tiny paternalistic mosquito venture Uncle Sam gets off easily at a total cost of $35,000 and the salt-marsh mosquitoes are still doing business at the old stand.

INVASION OF RIGHTS

It is high time you business men should awaken, not necessarily to the wastage of untold millions of taxes, though that is bad enough, but to the ceaseless and ever-widening invasion of corporate and individual rights involved in the paternalistic activites of the Government. The political juggernaut not only is entering, but it already has entered, the realms where the individual should be unfettered and unmolested. Even you folks, well informed as you are, have no conception of the far-reaching activities of our central Government. These range all the way from the training of grocery clerks, which is actually provided for in a manual recently issued by the Federal Government, to the exercise of autocratic powers by the Interstate Commerce Commission and other commissions and boards. Among the Interstate Commerce Commission's excessive grants of authority it has been empowered by Congress to fix minimum rates. It can say to a railroad company that it shall not give to the people of a State, a section, or a community the benefit of lower freight rates, and the company is helpless in the matter. I am not saying that this authority is not justified as a means of preventing powerful carriers from occasionally undercutting weak competitors and driving them out of business, but I do point to it as an example showing how very far Government is going these days in regulating through bureaucracy the affairs of its citizens. Countless other instances could be cited, revealing the trend of centralization. The system requires more laws; officeholders are pyramided—always more expenses, more taxes. The Government conducts a school for bathhouse attendants. It issues a book on department leasing in retail stores, copy of which I have here.

A few years ago a number of business men from over the country were assembled at the Department of Commerce, when a young, fuzzy-mustached bureaucrat began to lecture them on how to route their sales agents. The business executives had acquired gray hairs working out that very problem, and when the amateurish bureaucrat began to spin theories they left the room in disgust.

In a bulletin entitled "Principles of Window Curtaining," the Government tells the good housewives how to select their curtains and chestily advises them that with the bulletin at hand "the homemaker need no longer rely on inspiration alone to obtain attractive curtains."

"Rely on inspiration alone!" No, indeed. Let Washington do it!

ABUSED OYSTER NEVER CHIRPS

Even the self-abnegating oyster, which never chirps when it is abused, is the subject of at least 20 Government books dealing with its habits, its ancestry and crustaceous kin and its ultimate gastronomic destination. Scores of bulletins have been issued instructing mothers how to take care of their children, how to perform the delicate attentions that are always suggested by a mother's love, and in every instance, as far as I know, the authors were spinsters who had reached an age where hope was no longer fortified by expectation.

The natural concomitant of the paternalism that grips our Nation is a multiplicity of laws. Bureaucracy, reaching for more and more power, never satiated but always looking for new fields to invade, goes to the fountainhead of authority and asks for laws which self-seeking and impotent legislators grant for the asking. Since 1789, when the first Congress assembled, 51,482 laws have been enacted and the American citizen is hedged about with a bewildering maze of "Thou shalts" and "Thou shalt nots." Not many well-informed persons will disagree with a recent statement of the brilliant Missourian, Senator JAMES A. REED, that "enough laws have been passed to govern the world for the next 10,000 years." The evil of statute padding grows apace, the Sixty-ninth Congress which expired on March 4 last being the worst offender in that regard. It passed 878 public laws, more by far than any other Congress, not excepting those of the World War period.

The Parliament of Great Britain, whose legislative activities touch far-flung dominions on which the sun never sets, can not hold a candle to the United States Congress in fecundity of its product. The United States enacted 213 public laws in 1919 against Britain's 102; 181 in 1920 against Britain's 82; 231 in 1921 against Britain's 67; 256 in 1922 against Britain's 65. But, then, the people of Britain are not coddled, bulldozed, supervised, and regulated like their patient and long-suffering American cousins.

After working many years a committee of Congress has completed a codification of the United States statutes. The result is a volume of 50 titles and 2,465 pages. There are 5,212,416 words in the volume and 14,808,000 ems in the composition. To put it in another way there are written in statutes for the regulation of the American people by this single body of lawmakers 5,212,416 words, and the whole of the law and the gospel was put in the Ten Commandments of Moses, and those commandments could be printed on a single page!

I sincerely believe that if the usual order could be reversed and an entire Congress could be devoted, not to enacting laws but to repealing archaic, harmful, bureaucratic statutes, that Congress would go down in history with a halo that will never attach to any other Congress.

THE INQUISITORIAL ARMY

An inevitable accompaniment of bureaucracy is a lust for inquisitorial powers. The appetite for attending to other people's business grows by what it feeds on and the result is a swarm of agents, inspectors, and other nosey functionares who go about over the country worrying, bluffing, and exasperating individuals and corporations. Twenty years ago—in 1907—Senator Joseph B. Foraker, who was always on the firing line fighting Federal encroachment, bemoaned the multiplication of useless officers and offices in what he called his "degenerate day." In an outburst of indignation he made this statement:

"The little band of 167 special deputies, agents, and inspectors on the pay rolls of the Government 10 years ago has been swelled to an army of more than 3,000."

Shades of Jefferson and Lincoln! An army of 3,000! Why, the inquisitorial army to-day numbers more than ten times 3,000. I say this advisedly, basing my statement upon an investigation which I have just completed. In order that I might have some reliable data to present to you upon the subject of Government espionage I addressed letters to the heads of the departments asking them to advise me as to the number of inspectors and agents under their respective jurisdictions and I have here replies from all of the Cabinet members or their assistants setting forth detailed official figures which, by departmental admission, make an army of over five times 3,000 or, to be exact, 15,836. This does not include the secret service and other secret activities, the number and personnel of which are never disclosed. All together, I have not the slightest doubt that the total of those who might properly be included in the espionage class is well over 30,000. In the Department of Agriculture alone there are 9,000 inspectors and agents, or three times the estimated number for the whole Government that cast such a pall over the stout-hearted Senator from Ohio. This is not guesswork. It is the truth, officially certified to me by the acting head of that great department, Renick W. Dunlap, an able, honest, and conscientious official, who writes to me as follows:

"At present the field force of the Department of Agriculture consists of approximately 16,000 employees. Of this number about 9,000 fall in the class of agents and inspectors. The Bureau of Animal Industry has 1,331 veterinary inspectors and 1,729 lay inspectors employed in connection with the enforcement of the meat inspection and animal quarantine acts."

HARASSING THE FARMERS

Let every farmer who is being harassed by an inspector reflect that there are 8,999 other inspectors and agents at work on his rural brethren. This may be poor consolation, but the suffering farmer is entitled to whatever benefit flows from the old adage, "Misery loves company."

There are 535 inspectors in the Post Office Department. The Department of Justice advises me that its Bureau of Investigation has 362 men, of whom 287 are field agents. That department also has 22 examiners in the field all the time checking up United States marshals and district attorneys, and 4 inspection agents. J. E. Harper, chief of the division of appointments of the Treasury Department, writes that he is very sorry not to be able to give the desired information in full in respect to that department, but that the chief of the Secret Service has a very positive rule that no information shall be given out as to the number of Secret Service operatives. He says there are in the Internal Revenue Service 3,091 internal-revenue agents, while the Customs Service employs 30 special agents, 81 customs agents, and 1,093 inspectors. The Department of the Interior reports 136 inspectors, and the Acting Secretary of Labor advises that there are 1,476 inspectors under his department. It is perfectly apparent that if full information could be obtained from unsearchable sources it would be found that the inquisitorial force abroad in the land is far in excess of 30,000. The system is so far-reaching that in some instances inspectors are sent out to spy on inspectors, and all of this in a land that boasts of its civil liberty!

Having spent most of my life on and around the bright spot where greatness treads, I might properly hesitate to paint this rather sordid picture of malperformance in the public service, but I warn you that not all public men in Washington, or anywhere else, for that matter, are great. I would be the last person in the world to indict all men in official positions, because that would be unfair and untrue. Some have dynamic minds and are guided by high resolve. Others are the Spifflediinks of purpose and intellectuality, whose chief occupation is trimming sails to catch every passing breeze. Many are pure gold, giving the best that is in them and all that is in them to the service of their country; while others—well, they are just plain, ordinary brass.

SPIFFLEDINKS IN ACTION

In this insidious and deadly process of wrecking local self-government, the Spifflediinks have been the main ally of paternalism. Upon their seared consciences must rest this true bill of indictment. The touchstone of their peculiar brand of patriotism has not been "Is this good for the country?" but "Is this good for me?" They are the culprits who have eternally fanned among our citizens the desire to get something for nothing, as if government were some mysterious fountain of largess from which all blessings freely flow. They do not explain that every dollar, every cent, every mill of the cost of these questionable blessings is thrown back upon the citizens themselves with a terrific penalty added for misuse of Government functions. I knew a Tennessee Member of Congress who introduced a thousand bills in one day. By so doing he almost precipitated a riot among the employees of the journal clerk, who had to brief all of those impossible measures for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. A New York Member had an individualistic style of Spifflediinking. He made it a point every day of his life when Congress was in session to take a petition of some kind to the House, and introduce it. That was his way of interlarding his name in the RECORD and inducing people to think he was a great man. When his well-stroked and contented constituents had no petitions for him to present he would turn the ingenuity of his mind loose on the things that ought to be regulated and work up petitions of his own. It is a common device of the Spifflediinks to encourage their constituents to get all sorts of impossible things from the Government, well knowing that by arousing interest along these lines their grip on the congressional job will be strengthened during the pursuit. Any sort of an issue or pretext will do, no matter how paternalistic or how harmful in its destruction of local self-government.

These are all untoward and distressing symptoms in our national life. Fortunately the people of America have the correctional remedy within their power. First of all, they should drive the Spifflediinks into the sea and should establish in their places men of intellectual honesty who will not promise to deliver the world with a fence around it, but who will really serve the people with all their love and all their strength and all their understanding.

"OLD FELLER, YOU'RE LOOKIN' WELL"

Many of you are employers. Suppose you should hire a traveling man to go out on the road and get orders for goods, and suppose after he has spent $1,000 of your money riding around in de luxe style and stopping at the best hotels you call him in to make a report.

"Have you got any orders?" you ask.

"No," he replies, as he slaps you on the back, "I haven't got any orders, but I want to tell you, old feller, how well you are looking. You are gettin' handsomer every day. How's your wife? That's good."

How long do you think it would be until you fired that man? Well, exactly that sort of thing is occurring all the time under the Government. The taxpayers pay high for service and what they get is that kind of baloney.

Recently some sight-seers were strolling through the grounds at St. Elizabeths Asylum for mental cases, just outside of Washington, when they came across a man who was chattering like one of our Darwinian ancestors and was trying vainly to shin up a telegraph pole.

"Who in the world is that man?" asked one of the party, addressing a guide who is noted for facetiousness.

"He is a Congressman who really tried to keep his pledges," was the reply.

In drawing this rather vivid portrayal of demagoguery I wish to have it understood that I am not attacking any particular individuals. I am speaking from a national viewpoint concerning a class that is too pestiferous in our national life. I am personally friendly with all of the boys, and sometimes I am almost inclined to sympathize with them in their extremities, but when I observe the wide latitude they take in their schemes to hocus-pocus the public I feel like tapping them on the sleeve and saying:

"Have a heart!"

Having got rid of the Spilledinks, the people should see to it that positions of trust are filled with men of purpose, with sincere men, with true men, with men who have the courage to fight to the last ounce of strength that the citizens of this Republic may enjoy forever the birthright prepared for them by Hamilton and Jefferson and saved for them by Lincoln. They should choose as their servants men of pellucid truthfulness; men whose rugged honesty sticks out all over them; men of the old Doc McGuffey type, who couldn't be insincere if they tried. Such men do not grow on bushes, nor thrust themselves into prominence in the political market places, but in their hearts abides the love of country, and if the call comes to them as an appeal to duty few there are who will resist it.

GREATEST THING IS SERVICE

The greatest thing in the whole world is service. It is the very apotheosis of human effort. The highest privilege that can come to any man is to be permitted to render honest, intelligent, unselfish, loving service to his fellows and one of the glaring inconsistencies in our country to-day is that so many of our public men spend more time trying to fool the people than they do in trying to serve them. Those apologists of the bureaucratic system who have fallen in with the specious notion that this is a "progressive age" and that progress somehow or other depends upon our departure from fundamentals, should remember that there are some things that never grow old. The Sermon on the Mount is the same flood of light to-day that it was when the Master, standing away up there next to God, delivered it. The constitution is the constitution now, just as it was when it sprang full-panoplied from the brains and hearts of the giants who created it, the greatest charter of liberty the world has ever known.

Ours is the responsibility to correct this alarming tendency toward the emasculation of the Constitution, the centralization of all power at Washington, and the destruction of local self-government. Upon us rests an obligation that is fearful in its magnitude. We are the guardians of posterity. We hold in our protecting arms the children of countless generations yet unborn. If we stand idly by and see their birthright surrendered inch by inch to an encroaching bureaucracy that knows no limits in its lust for power, we will be particeps in one of the greatest crimes of all the ages. Let us awaken to the insidious evil that ramifies our national life and, with hands aloft, solemnly resolve once more that this shall be a Government of limited powers, as Jefferson designed it—a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, as envisaged by the mighty Lincoln. And when we have made this high and holy resolution let us move forward with a conscience that never sleeps and a determination that smiles defiance to time and fate, and even death, while we battle with all our strength to lead our country out of the devious by-paths where suspicion lurks into the white light and broad highways of true statesmanship. Nothing short of that goal will measure our sacred duty to posterity and not until that is done will we enjoy the advantages and the happiness that belong to us as our rightful heritage in this great American commonwealth.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 21 of the act of Congress approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. 545), entitled "An act to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands," I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, including the reports of the heads of the departments of the Philippine government, for the fiscal year ended December 31, 1926.

I concur in the recommendation of the Secretary of War that this report be printed as a congressional document.

PAN AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF CHILD WELFARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House another message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I renew to the Seventieth Congress the recommendation I made to the Sixty-ninth Congress that legislation be enacted authorizing an appropriation of $2,000, to enable acceptance by the United States of membership in a Pan American Institute of Child Welfare to be established at Montevideo, Uruguay, in accordance with a resolution adopted at the Pan American Child Welfare Congress held at Santiago, Chile, in October, 1924.

The attention of Congress is invited to the accompanying report of the Secretary of State and its inclosed copy of Senate Document No. 184, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, containing my message of January 5, 1927, and related papers, on the subject.

It will be observed from the report of the Secretary of State that, in response to my recommendation, a joint resolution was introduced in the Sixty-ninth Congress authorizing the United States to become a member of the institute and an appropriation of $2,000 per annum for the contribution by the United States toward the support of the institute; that the joint resolution passed the House of Representatives and was reported without amendment by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, but owing to the congestion toward the end of the session of Congress the Senate was unable to act upon the resolution; and that the institute has received the adherence of the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Peru, Uruguay, and Venezuela and is now established and functioning at Montevideo.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND PUBLIC PARKS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House another message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith the Annual Report of the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital for 1927.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1927.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLANTON. Should it not also be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia? This embraces much business that is connected with the two jurisdictions in the District of Columbia. The Speaker pro tempore has just referred to both committees the Annual Report of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. It really ought to go to both of them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the matters contained in this report refer almost entirely and exclusively to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, whereas the other message contains matters relating to both the District of Columbia and to Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLANTON. But that subject embraces all the parks, the 1,200 parks, large and small, embraced in the District of Columbia. Counting the little and the big ones, there are 1,200 parks. It could do no harm to refer it to both committees, so that both would have jurisdiction to look into such matters as come within the purview of their work. It is immaterial to me, however, where it goes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker has examined this matter thoroughly, and has indicated that this is the only committee that should have jurisdiction, and accordingly he directed that it should be referred to that committee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. 3190) authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, when the Speaker signed the same.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 14, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, how manifold are Thy works! In wisdom hast Thou made them all.

Purge our vision, widen our horizons, and open our spiritual eyes that we may behold the light of Thy countenance. Refresh us, ennoble us, and purify us, that we may measure up to the highest ideals of manhood. God be with America's incomparable hero as he sails on in the open bowl of the skies, passes the shoulders of the mountains, and enters the gateway of the Republic on the south. May his chivalry, simplicity, and high moral standards be an example and inspiration to the youth of our land. We pray in the name of Jesus, the world's Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution (H. Con. Res. 7) providing for the printing of 10,000 additional copies of House Document No. 90.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1397) amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. L. p. 220), in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BORAH and Mr. SWANSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the State Department.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania and Mr. FLETCHER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the War Department.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee on this day had presented to the President for his approval a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3190. An act authorizing the President of the United States to present, in the name of Congress, a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

FIRST DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments to the first deficiency bill and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments to the first deficiency bill and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MADDEN, WOOD, and BYRNS.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to see whether we can not reach an agreement as to time for debate on this amendment, which is practically to the effect of repealing the estate tax. I want to see how many gentlemen wish to be heard.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment, and would like to have five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In case this amendment is dealt with within a stipulated time that will not exclude the offering of any other amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Gentlemen who want to get in and argue this matter had better get in during this time and present their arguments on this amendment, because amendments which are simply offered for the purpose of manipulating things can not serve any useful purpose.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman there is no such purpose in my mind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know there is not as to the gentleman from Virginia, but that might be true of others. I understand there are some amendments which are likely to be offered to which I shall be compelled to object on a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I should like five minutes.

Mr. CELLER. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa whether he is referring to the estate-tax section or the entire bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am referring to this particular amendment, the effect of which is to repeal the estate-tax section.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I would like to have 10 minutes, although I doubt whether I will use all of that time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will try to accommodate the gentleman and also other gentlemen from Florida.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I understand that certain members of the committee want time. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] wants 15 minutes, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] 10 minutes, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] 10 minutes. That would make 35 minutes requested by the members of the committee on this side. That is all the time requested on this side by members of the committee. I understand that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] wants 10 minutes and that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YON] 5 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That makes all together how much on your side?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That would make 55 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think we might take an hour on each side.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That would perhaps take care of everybody.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time be controlled equally by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and myself. It is true, of course, we are both against the amendment, but it is the understanding that he will take care of gentlemen on his side of the aisle.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let the RECORD show that I have requests on this side for 55 minutes, and I hope to use 5 minutes myself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think, Mr. Chairman, I will simply submit the request that debate on this section be limited to two hours.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate on this section, which is line 15, page 183, down to and including line 3 on page 184, be limited to two hours.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is, the section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. And all amendments thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman why he did not complete his request and ask that the time be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will make that as a supplemental request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that would be in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Chair is correct about that.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is a little unusual, I think, to have the time divided between two men both of whom are opposed to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not submitting that request.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I would like to say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Chair has just ruled that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] can not control this time, and neither can I control it, and I do not propose to try unless I have such power vested in me. Under the rules of the committee, if the time is limited to two hours, which I understand can be done, then it will be a question of recognition by the Chair.

Mr. MERRITT. That will be all right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and debate upon this section and all amendments thereto will close in two hours.

Mr. GREEN of Florida and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask recognition in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, a great deal has been said relative to the constitutionality of the estate-tax provision of the 1926 revenue act, which is now again up for discussion before our body. From the beginning I have contended that this bold and brazen act of the Congress was a violation of the States' rights and in absolute opposition to the Federal Constitution. If this law has been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, I am sure that you would agree with me that, at least, the spirit if not the letter of the law is unconstitutional.

In my opinion no more iniquitous piece of legislation has ever been enacted, and I believe it is now time for this evil to be corrected. The stamp act and the tea tax in days of old may well be compared to this attempt at wholesale interference with and the complete destruction of the rights of the States. In no other instance has the Federal Government so boldly undertaken, under the guise of its power of taxation, to invade government functions in powers of the State's government. The framers of the Constitution of the United States and the State conventions which ratified it, never intended that the powers of the States should ever be trampled upon in this manner.

From the beginning of this Government to the year 1924 no attempt has ever been made by Congress to violate the rule of geographical uniformity in the levying of duties, imports, and excises. No attempt has ever been made to discriminate between States in the Federal act for the purpose of controlling State legislation. The two provisions in the Constitution for the protection of the States against discrimination were as to direct taxes proportionate in accordance with representation, as to indirect taxes, geographical uniformity throughout the country.

In section 2, Article I, of the Constitution it is plainly said:

> Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union.

And in my opinion the estate-tax provision of the 1927 revenue act is purely a violation of the Federal Constitution, in spirit at least; and I sincerely trust that you gentlemen will, in a fair-minded manner, enter upon this question with tolerance and eradicate from your minds that sectionalism which has prevailed from the beginning in this discussion, and now at this time remedy the great wrong which has been dealt to one, at least, of our sovereign States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Yes; I always yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If this is such an iniquitous law, does not the gentleman think it is very strange, indeed, that of our great Ways and Means Committee of 25 members only 4 members could be found to vote against it?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I would like to say to my friend from Texas that the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives is the most powerful aggregation in the United States, and they have sat here and deafly denied the people of the United States this provision in the revenue act for 1927, when a majority of the people say they want the Federal estate tax repealed.

Mr. BLANTON. I deny that they deafly denied anybody and also that a majority of the people want it repealed. I heard the committee give the gentleman's aggregation which he speaks of here two whole days of hearings.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Yes; quite a hearing, and when this bill was under general debate in the House it was so arranged that we had 15 minutes in which to discuss this very important provision. The gentleman from Texas gave us all the time he could. The gentleman was not to blame, but I maintain that when only 15 minutes is allotted to a State whose constitution has been abrogated, surely time is valuable with the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. BLANTON. On this question the gentleman can not find 2 per cent of the people who live in my big district who will agree with the gentleman. They agree with the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. That may be true, but the gentleman's State pays less in Federal inheritance tax, with all of its mighty domain and its millions of people, than does my little State with a million and a third population.

Mr. BLANTON. The last report of the Internal Revenue Bureau shows that during the last fiscal year Texas paid to the Government $42,000,000, while the State of Florida paid in income taxes that same year only $35,000,000.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Will my friend state by what authority he says a majority of the people of the United States are opposed to this inheritance tax?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. As you gentlemen are aware, the estate-tax provision of the 1926 revenue act was so fixed as to vent havoc upon the State of Florida. This was the purpose of at least some of the framers of the 1926 revenue act, as will better appear by the written committee hearings and the House proceedings on this all-important and radical and prejudiced piece of legislation.

In this instance, at least, taxes are not apportioned among the several States inasmuch as by this iniquitous act it has obtained that the State of Florida is paying an unjust and unequal portion of the burden of taxation of our Nation. By reference to the report of the Internal Revenue Department of our Government I find that the State of Florida, with its one and one-third million population and with only a very small percentage of the wealth of the Nation, as of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, paid $5,495,662.41 Federal estate tax. I find also by reference to this same publication that only four other States pay a higher estate tax to our Government than does Florida. These States named in the order of payments are: New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and California. I find also in this same publication that the State of Idaho, which is a sovereign State the same as the State of Florida, pays only $454.56. I find that great States like Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, and Michigan (with all of its great automobile manufacturing establishments and great wealth), all paying less than the small State of Florida. Likewise is the great industrial State of Ohio, with her millions of population, paying less than the State of Florida. This unproportioned tax payment that is now paid by Florida is caused by the unequal apportionment of taxes as you have brought about by the 80 per cent credit provision of the 1926 revenue act. By this act you are compelling the State of Florida to pay an unjust proportion of the Federal taxation.

If Florida benefited by the 80 per cent provision she would to-day be paying about one and one-fourth million dollars estate tax to the Federal Treasurer, but by this iniquitous act with its unconstitutional spirit you are taking away approximately $4,000,000 in taxes from the Florida payers to the Federal Treasurer, which said moneys should be, according to the 1926 revenue act, left in the State of Florida.

Fellow Members of the House, I maintain that any act which discriminates as this estate-tax provision discriminates and which in actuality collects 80 per cent more taxes from one State than from another, and this said result was the avowed intention of the framers and perpetrators of this said law, that such a law is in violation of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States.

Let us go a little further in the matter of support of the Federal Government by taxation in the respective States. I find that the small State of Florida is paying from all sources a total of $44,483,095.42 to the Federal Government. Now, gentlemen of the House, do you believe that the laws of taxation are fair and are just which will compel a small and weak State to pay forty-four and a half million dollars toward the support of our Government annually when other States of similar population, or even greater, pay so much less amount? I would particularly call your attention to the fact that the large State of Iowa, according to this tabulation furnished by the Treasury Department, pays to our Government from all sources only $12,666,314.05. You should not be surprised, my fellow Members, that there are those on the floor of the House who are so zealous in their efforts to continue the iniquitous provision of the estate tax when a small State like Florida pays $44,500,000, approximately, toward the maintenance of our Government and when the powerful, populous, and rich State of Iowa pays approximately $12,500,000 annually toward the support of our Government. I find, gentlemen of the committee, that there are only 12 other States which pay a greater amount of taxation from all sources than does the State of Florida. And this high average in the payment of taxes obtained by the State of Florida is caused largely by the fact that the estate-tax provision of the 1926 revenue act was aimed at, directed at, and made for the handicapping and injury of the State of Florida.

The advocates of the estate tax, with its 80 per cent provision, would tell you that it is for the purpose of making taxation uniform; however, on scanning the figures in the case we find that since the 80 per cent credit provision has been enacted into law that the amount now received by the Federal Treasury from estate taxation is very small. In fact, in 1928 possibly $50,000,000 will be obtained; in 1929, possibly a lesser amount. In other words, the amount received will continue to decrease, because under the discriminatory and unfair 80 per cent feature the various States will continue to change their State laws to fit the national laws and thereby make mockery of the taxing powers of the respective States in order to receive the 80 per cent credit of such amount as is collected by the Federal Treasurer. We find the respective States now shaping their laws whereby they receive 80 per cent of the taxes collected on estates of decedents and the Federal Government receiving only 20 per cent. One of the most striking examples of this is the State of Georgia. I do not believe anyone would really contend that this and similar States in actuality has a State inheritance tax law.

It is not the duty of the Government to go around collecting estate taxes for the respective States. Neither was it ever intended by the framers of the Constitution of the United States that the Federal taxing power would go out so far as to crush the powers and prerogatives of the respective States.

It is encouraging to see such great States as Connecticut, Ohio, Virginia, and others now coming to and joining with Florida in this important fight for the rights of the respective States. I am glad that my distinguished friend the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] has this time offered the amendment for the repeal of the estate tax. I am proud to see the able gentlemen from Ohio, Virginia, and other States now coming in with Florida and fighting for the principle of the rights of the respective States; and, as a matter of observation, I would like to remind my colleagues that this subject is one which has obtained great proportions. I will give you here a list of the States whose legislatures have passed concurrent resolutions and memorials requesting the retirement of the Federal Government from this field of taxation, as follows: Connecticut, Texas, North Dakota, Washington, Rhode Island, Alabama, Maryland, Indiana, Arkansas, Florida, Michigan, Tennessee, Utah, Arizona, Delaware, Nevada, Oregon, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Colorado. States having passed same through one branch of their legislatures are Missouri, Illinois, Idaho, Maine, Iowa, and also many of the other States have been the scenes of activity in this behalf. However, our Committee on Ways and Means saw fit to again continue this iniquitous 80 per cent provision, as well as the estate-tax law in full. But I admonish my colleagues that when the legislatures of these respective States have spoken and have by petition requested an act upon your part to the end that the respective States be given their rights along the lines of taxation that you heed their mandates and vote with us in the support of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Connecticut, which will take from our statute books this discriminatory and unnecessary law. A majority of the legislatures of the respective States have spoken; likewise the representatives of the majority of the American people have spoken; therefore it is our duty to heed the mandates of the majority of the American people. Mr. Chairman, as time is so limited on this question and there are others who desire to talk, I will not take further time of the House to-day; however, I regret to see that it has been so arranged that those of us who are interested in this matter may have such limited time in which to discuss it, and I regret again that it has been so arranged that it is almost impossible to obtain a record yea-and-nay vote on this all-important question. I do not believe in lighting your candle and placing it under a bushel, but I do believe that all Members of the Congress should come out in the open and by their record vote let the people of America know whether they are for the rights of the States or for the continued encroachment of the great concentrating Federal power, which is forever growing with its bureaucracies. It is now time to obey the command, "Halt and about face" from the destruction of the rights of the States and carry back to our States and our people those rights and liberties which have forever meant so much in the preservation of our great Union.

My State has already by vote of 4 to 1 adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the State from levying in the future any inheritance or income tax, laboring under the belief that it is wrong to tax dead bodies; but if the other States desire to collect a death tax, we have nothing to say. But we do say that any effort of Congress to coerce and force the State of Florida into levying and collecting a State inheritance tax is emphatically resented.

Florida's constitution is her own and she has the right to say what her State must do in State tax matters. She also has the right, here in the Congress of the United States, to bring her plea for justice and fairness, and request the Congress to uphold the Constitution of the United States and to repeal the vicious provisions of the 1926 revenue act.

The State of Florida does not need a State inheritance tax, and may I advise you that the State government is debt free and has an enormous surplus of several million dollars in its treasury. Probably no other State in the Union has a debt-free government and large surplus in the treasury.

Florida is not asking any favor but only asking her rights as a sovereign State. She is asking that the constitution of her

State be saved and that the Constitution of the United States be upheld, and that she be permitted to tax and omit to tax her people for State purposes as she desires, and she refuses to be coerced by the Congress into the passage of a State inheritance tax law. The State chamber of commerce and scores of other civic organizations throughout the State are urging that Florida be given her rights in this matter. Florida feels and knows that she has been unjustly discriminated against and asks that this wrong be righted.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, I have just read a splendid argument against the 80 per cent provision. Said argument was made by the Hon. J. B. Johnson, of Florida. Among other things he shows the manner in which the country is accepting this iniquitous provision of the 1926 revenue act, and shows how the bill fails to carry out the intent of Congress. I take the liberty here to read a short statement from the argument.

As a concrete example of the practical workings of this rebate provision of the revenue act of 1926 the Legislature of Georgia has passed an estate tax law for that State, which was approved March 31, 1926. Section 1 of this law reads:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the legal representative of the estate of any person who may hereafter die a resident of this State, and whose estate is subject to the payment of a Federal estate tax, to file a duplicate of the return which he is required to make to the Federal authorities for the purpose of having the estate taxes determined with the State tax commissioner. When such duplicate is filed with the said official he shall compute the amount that would be due upon said return as Federal estate taxes under the act of Congress relating to the levy and collection of Federal estate taxes upon the property of said estate taxable in Georgia, and assess against said estate as State inheritance taxes 80 per cent of the amount found to be due for Federal estate taxes.

The tax officials of the State of Georgia are advertising the advantages Georgia has in a leaflet, which says in part:

There you are. Analyze the act and see just what it means; then compare it with the laws of other States, particularly the so-called noninheritance-tax States. The analysis shows the Georgia law is far better than if the legislature of the State, as has been done in other States, merely has passed a law prohibiting the levy or collection of any inheritance tax. The why is clear. Take an estate in Florida, for instance, large enough to have levied against it by the Federal Government as an estate tax, say, $75,000. Florida has no inheritance tax law of any kind, but the Federal Government levies a $75,000 estate tax, collects it, and the whole amount goes into the Federal Treasury with not one penny of benefit, so far as that $75,000 goes, to either the estate or to the State of Florida.

Make the same calculation in Georgia. The same kind of an estate, of the same value, finds a Federal estate tax levied against it for $75,000. The Federal law provides that this estate is entitled to an exemption of 80 per cent of the levy made against it for Federal estate taxes, provided that 80 per cent has been paid the State in which the estate is located as an inheritance tax. Do you get it? In the Florida case the Federal Government can give no exemption, nor can the State claim it, because there is no State inheritance tax; therefore the Federal Government has to take the whole $75,000. In Georgia the Federal Government assesses $75,000 against the estate, credits the estate with an exemption of four-fifths of the amount levied, and takes one-fifth into the Federal Treasury, the four-fifths which is credited as an exemption going into the treasury—the four-fifths which is credited as an exemption going into the treasury of Georgia. In both cases the estate pays only $75,000; in our case, we get our share for applying to the expense of operating our State government. The noninheritance-tax States are, of necessity, compelled to supply the deficiency in the source of revenue by taxing other property on which there is no Federal exemption.

If the Congress had wanted to be fair and had wanted to meet the uniformity provision in the laying and collecting of taxes as required by section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, they should have provided for the collection of the entire amount of the estate tax laid and then refunded to the treasury of each State for State purposes 80 per cent of the tax collected from each State. If Congress had no authority to do this, the Congress has no authority to do what it has done. Congress can not do indirectly what it is not allowed to do directly.

If it is so interpreted in the State of Georgia, which is one of the best and greatest States of the Union, then will it not be misinterpreted and misused in other States of the Union?

The rebate provision of this estate tax law is not only clearly outside the pale of the powers delegated to Congress but it is an expressed violation of the provisions of the Constitution, in that the tax is not "laid and collected to pay the debts and for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" and is not laid and collected "uniformly throughout the United States."

And I can never believe that this act of Congress ever represented the real feeling of the Members of Congress but was rather an avenue of escape for their respective States, enmities, and prejudicies, and since my colleagues and the Nation have cooled off and reflected I believe that it is now the ripe time to correct the wrong by adopting the amendment and retiring the Federal Government from the estate-tax field altogether and leaving the right to levy estate tax entirely with the respective States where it belongs.

Mr. Chairman, as I expect to speak on this subject from time to time, conveying my argument and the argument of the State of Florida—because it is not my fight; it is Florida's fight—before the House, I shall not speak at length to-day; but may I take time to inform my colleagues that the intent of the 80 per cent provision which was to stop the migration of people and the migration of wealth to the State of Florida has been entirely futile. The intent of this provision to stop the growth and progress of the State of Florida has been entirely without result, but in turn, Mr. Chairman, the great ship of growth, development, and progress upon which Florida embarked many years ago still sails on. To-day she is leading the South in building enterprises and general development. Small villages are growing rapidly into populous cities. Her vast reaches of more than 2,300 miles of seacoast are studded with splendid harbors and girded with among the best railroads in the world. Paved roads are rapidly extending themselves in every section of the State. Factories are springing up here and there and disbursing enormous pay rolls. Her mines are belching forth 80 per cent of the Nation's supply of phosphate, together with various and sundry building and manufacturing materials. Her tobacco fields are ever enlarging and growing more productive. Her common and staple crops, together with her livestock industries, are gradually improving. Her orange and grapefruit groves—the largest and best in the world—are becoming more lucrative. Her wild lands are rapidly transforming into gardens and fields and are to-day supplying the Nation with winter vegetables. Her more than 30,000 lakes are still clear, placid, and surrounded by gigantic forest trees, draped with gray Spanish mosses. Her thousands of springs still gush forth an overabundance of transparent and God-given fluid, sparkling with purity and virtue. Her rivers still meander "here and yon" and give vent to the sweet perfume of the magnolia in the moonlight. The flaming Poinsettia, the hibiscus, the bougainvillea, and the rose are still there, and the mocking birds sing at dawn.

My friends, Florida is carrying on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I will be satisfied with five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I can not agree to that. These other gentlemen are entitled to be heard.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. We have two hours.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I know that, but there are other gentlemen who want to be heard.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I want the gentlemen to be heard, but it does seem to me we could have five more minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I object.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the proposition which we are now considering is not a political proposition. If it can be given any party label, it is a Republican proposition, and I am supporting it to the best of my ability.

The fight for an estate tax commenced way back in 1907, when President Roosevelt sent a message to the Congress advocating this kind of tax, and the fight has proceeded until finally we have engrafted it into the legislation of the United States, and I hope it is there to stay.

I might advise the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] who has just taken his seat that the total amount of the Federal estate tax collected in his State in 1926 amounted to $1,170,794, while the total amount collected in the State of Texas in 1926 amounted to $1,080,000. Therefore in 1926 Texas contributed about as much as Florida.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. If the gentleman will go to 1927, after this 80 per cent credit has been brought in, the gentleman will find that Florida paid five and a half million dollars and Texas considerably less. Only four States in the Union paid more than Florida last year.

Mr. RAINEY. And Florida will continue to pay more of this tax than she has paid heretofore, because Florida is getting now to be an asylum for decrepit millionaires [laughter and applause], and the fact that Florida is paying more of this tax as the years go on is the strongest kind of argument in favor of retaining it. The estate of a millionaire in Florida pays the same tax exactly as if that millionaire had remained in some Northern State, where the environment is not so pleasant and where the Bimini Islands are not so near, and where airplanes can not bring in the refreshments which are attractive to a great many. Florida will continue paying this tax as long as it remains on the statute books, and Florida can get back her 80 per cent just as soon as she joins the Union [laughter] and amends her constitution and accepts her share of it.

This is the oldest tax in existence in the world. The ancient Egyptians developed an estate tax most carefully arranged.

It is older even than the Egyptian tax at the frontier. The ancient Egyptians developed the estate tax and all the nations of the world of any importance from that day to this have imposed it. We are getting into the band wagon last of all. We are getting in harmony with the theories of the tax experts and economists for 4,000 years and are now imposing it.

The tax is not imposed upon estates of under $100,000. Of an estate of $150,000, $100,000 will be entirely exempt, and a tax of 1 per cent will be imposed on $50,000. Therefore an estate of this size will pay a tax of $500, and $400 of that amount will be returned to the State where the decedent resided when he died, provided that State has consented to accept it by conforming to the provisions of the Federal law, and already 17 of them have done that, and all of them will do it within the next six or eight years. In England they impose this tax on all estates of over $500. Our tax does not assume any considerable amount until we reach estates of ten million and over. On estates of that size the tax is 20 per cent. On an estate of that size the tax in England is 40 per cent.

THE LAST CHARGE OF THE TAX DODGERS' BRIGADE

The fight to repeal this tax is the last charge of the tax dodgers' brigade, gallantly led by those governors of States and members of State legislatures who recently came to Washington in such numbers to overawe the Committee on Ways and Means and the Members of both Houses of the National Congress. Their expenses were all paid from their homes to Washington and back again, including their hotel bills here in Washington, and their entertainment while here, and they were lavishly entertained.

This tax is regulatory; retain it and tax-dodging millionaires—there are 30,000 of them now—will not be able to escape it, whether they live in Florida or any other State. Repeal it and the States will all be compelled to abandon this field in the near future. Repeal this tax and rich men can invest their money in tax-exempt securities and pay no local, State, or Federal tax while they live, and their estate will also escape taxation. This tax furnishes the only method that can be devised of reaching tax-exempt securities.

I regret that I do not have time to discuss the expensive lobby maintained here and throughout the country to bring about the repeal of this tax.

Vote down this amendment and retain this tax and you secure for the National Treasury between thirty and forty million dollars per year for all time to come, and this is about the amount we will lose if we repeal all taxes on automobiles. Retain this tax and you can remove the automobile tax. Choose now between the purchasers of automobiles and the rapidly increasing class of the very rich.

Retain this tax and you make it possible for the States, when they all conform to the Federal law, to collect from estates of over $100,000 five times as much as the Federal Government receives, and the States can still impose any taxes they may desire to impose on estates of under $100,000 in amount. This tax protects the States, and it is the only way in which the rights of the States to impose estate or inheritance taxes can be preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I withdraw my objection to the gentleman from Florida having five minutes more, and that will even up the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. YON. I object.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, it is with extreme regret that I am obliged on this amendment to take the opposite attitude from the majority of the great committee on which I have the honor to serve. I have, however, expressed my views against the Federal estate tax when previous bills were under consideration, and so I do not need to go into any argument as to my viewpoints and the merits of the amendment calling for the repeal of the estate tax.

The State of Massachusetts revised its laws to conform its laws with the Federal law whereby 80 per cent is returned to the State. However, our legislature was very particular to have that apply only for such length of time as the Federal estate tax might be in existence. In other words, it expressed no view as to the merits of the subject but rather wanted to conform to the requirements in order that the amount of money should be returned to the State that the Federal law provided for.

Our friends from Florida can carry out the same idea, perhaps, with a little more difficulty than we had in Massachusetts, because I understand they have adopted a constitutional amendment. But having adopted it they can repeal it. I think that is their way out of the trouble.

There has been no opinion expressed by our legislature for or against this measure on its merits. While men of influence in Massachusetts have expressed their views in favor of the continuance of the estate tax by the Federal Government, this opinion was based largely upon the fact that its application was bringing a million and a half of revenue into the State treasury. I gather from correspondence and the press of the State that a majority of the people of our State favor the repeal of this law. There is a feeling everywhere that Congress in adopting the present law—while our excuse was an equalization of the tax, nevertheless there was a desire for coercion against the States to bring them into line whether they desired to do so or not. That is true of the Legislature of Massachusetts, and I think of the Legislature of New York and some other large States. They do not approve of the Federal inheritance tax, but they do desire to conform to it to get their share of the returns.

There is a line of demarcation when we consider the right form for the Federal Government and the right form for the State. There is a line, and we maintain—and many other have the same view—that this tax is one that should be limited in its operations to the State as distinct from the Federal Government. To that extent I am a believer in State rights. I think this tax is one that should be levied by the States. There are plenty of sources for Federal income, plenty of ways that a tax can be levied for the benefit of the Federal Government. This is so distinctly a State proposition that it seems to us entirely wrong, now that the exigencies of war have gone by, that it should be continued to be used as a levy against the States for the benefit of the Federal Government.

I trust that this thought will be given due consideration by this committee to-day—where the line should be between the States and Federal Government in the exercise of the taxing power.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. HOCH. Due to the fact that vast estates are generally accumulated from the patronage of the whole country, does not the gentleman think that there is something inequitable for the tax to go to one State?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I do not think so. I think that the tax should go with the residence of the individual.

If an argument of this kind has any merit, the present law is entirely out of line. Either the Federal Government should have all of the inheritance tax or the State should have it all. A division, as suggested by the question of the gentleman from Kansas, is entirely illogical.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have no great desire to talk on the motion to repeal the Federal inheritance tax, but I feel that it should not be repealed at this time. It has been repeatedly stated that it is a war measure and that this Federal estate tax should not remain in peace times, but we must not forget that our large national debt of many billions is a legacy of the World War, and the same reason for this tax during the World War remains until at least this heavy burden of debt is paid or largely reduced.

I know that certain States, and also owners of very large estates urge its repeal. The same great interests opposed the Federal income tax. Without the income tax the World War could not have been financed and it is now the principal source of income to meet the needs of the Government, whose annual budget is now four billions of dollars. Certain States do not levy income and inheritance taxes—notably Florida, Alabama, Nevada, and the District of Columbia. They have abandoned this field of taxation to the Federal Government. Many are claiming that this estate tax should be left to the States. If the Federal estate tax is repealed, then the same large interests will exert their influence to have the States abandon taxation of estates on distribution after death, following the example of a few States like Florida, which has by constitutional enactment forbidden both income and inheritance taxes, either through pressure or by the desire to invite owners of large estates to locate in these States, fleeing from States where inheritance taxes are levied. Repeal the Federal inheritance taxes and great wealth can escape all inheritance taxes by change of their residence. Why should great wealth be thus allowed to be relieved of their full share of the burdens of taxation? This Federal tax is logical and just, because these great estates have gathered their wealth from all sections of the country. Take the automobile interests, the Standard Oil companies, the steel corporations, the copper magnates, the coal barons, the lumber interests, and great manufacturing interests, and the large individual owners of these great properties while living in a particular State and having their residence and domicile there, their wealth has been gathered from all the States. Repeal the Federal estate tax and they would pay estate tax in only their State of residence or can flee to States like Florida and escape both estate and income taxes. The distribution of estates on death go to the heirs or other distributees, who have not earned this wealth.

The General Government maintains a standing Army and great Navy and annually spends hundreds of millions of dollars to protect the life and property of its citizens. The Army protects the property from destruction and domestic trouble on land and our great Navy safeguards commerce on the seas and the property and investments in all parts of the world owned by large interests. Why should the Government expend annually hundreds of millions to protect the business and accumulation of great wealth and then relieve these large estates of a reasonable tax on distribution at death, no part of which has been earned by the distributees? Why not some return for this protection?

The tax is not heavy. There is exemption of $100,000 before any tax is levied on the net estate left on death and 1 per cent on $50,000 above such net exemption, so a net estate of $150,000 after all deductions would pay only $500 Federal tax—and 2 per cent on the next $50,000, so a net estate of $200,000 would only contribute on distribution the sum of $1,500. The tax is graduated above the exemption of $100,000—and there is a credit up to 80 per cent allowed for taxes paid to the States. Why cry aloud against this reasonable tax levied for the protection given during the years of its accumulation and going to distributees that have not earned it? The tax grows in per cent and becomes substantial in amount when the net estates left run into the millions. Great wealth favors strong governments with expensive armies and navies to protect them on land and sea, and yet great estates contend against this Federal tax and cry aloud that it is an invasion of the rights of the States to collect this tax alone; and when the Federal tax is repealed, the same great influence can press upon the States to repeal such tax or they can change their domicile to other States and avoid paying either income or estate tax.

Let us maintain a small, well-equipped standing Army for needed purposes and a strong Navy to protect our commerce and rights on the seas and wherever the rights of the citizens of the United States are, but let those most benefited not shirk their fair share of payment.

Thomas Jefferson in his day believed there should be a greater distribution of estates at death and was the author of the great statute of descents and distributions, so that estates should no longer go alone to the eldest son, and I believe there is a well-defined thought in the Nation that great estates on death should be reasonably distributed, so that wealth should not be unduly perpetuated in the hands of a few, so that a limited few shall not absorb the greater part of the wealth of the country. It has been often stated that 2 per cent of the 120,000,000 of the United States own over half of its wealth. Let the centralization of wealth and power increase and the day may not be remote when 1 per cent will own as much as the other 99 per cent of the wealth, as well as increased power and influence. I have no prejudice against wealth, which serves a great purpose, but I want it to bear its fair share of the burdens of government, whose strong arm reaches out for the protection of property wherever it may be.

Stocks and bonds largely exempt, hidden securities escaping taxation, stock dividends declared running into billions of dollars—untaxed—corporate dividends increasing enormously. Tax avoidance is so great that the Treasury Department urged the passage of a new revenue bill to help close the holes of escape of millions of dollars, and largely for this purpose to strengthen the administrative part of the revenue law the Ways and Means Committee of the House met in October to have hearings and to prepare the revenue bill now pending.

So enormous have been the profits of great wealth that the latest reports from New York indicate that the great corporations will declare extra dividends this year amounting to something like $400,000,000. This huge surplus represents the years profits over and above all fixed charges, including regular dividends. All of this sum is distributed by a few of the largest corporations. The smaller corporations and business concerns have not prospered to the same extent. Business failures have increased. Many banks in increasing numbers have failed. The toiling masses have not benefited. Agricultural sections have suffered while protected interests have been safeguarded by special legislation. The burdens of government should be equalized as far as possible—a fair and just distribution of taxes—our public debt reduced as fast as it can be reasonably paid without exacting too much contribution in any one year from business—war taxes entirely repealed as soon as reasonably can be done.

The present estimated wealth of the United States is $400,000,000,000—the estimated income $70,000,000,000. The total tax revenues for Federal, State, and local governments for 1926 as reported were $8,500,000,000. The total expenditures of Federal, State, and local Governments for the fiscal year of 1925 were $11,124,000,000. The total indebtedness of the Federal, State, and local Governments is about $32,000,000,000.

The report of the Federal Estate Tax Bureau shows that 65 per cent of the property comprising large estates consist of bonds and notes and similar intangibles, which manifestly escape taxation in whole or in part during the life of the decedent. There are two ways by which these billions can be reached for adequate taxation—through the agency of income and inheritance taxation.

The pending revenue bill as reported is in some respects at variance with the desires and advice of Secretary Mellon. The bill retains the estate tax which the Secretary of the Treasury urged Congress to repeal. The American Farm Bureau Federation urged that it be permanently retained. The Secretary of the Treasury urged that the Federal tax on automobiles be retained. The bill as reported cuts in half the automobile tax. The Farm Bureau says Federal taxes on automobiles should be eliminated, and this was done by the House when it voted for the repeal of all of the automobile tax by a large majority. The Treasury Department asked for a reduction of the corporation tax which is now 13½ per cent. The bill as reported cut it to 11½ per cent, which met the approval of the House.

The Farm Bureau Federation asked that the residue of the so-called nuisance taxes be repealed. This suggestion has been largely met.

The Treasury suggested a reduction in the surplus of $225,000,000—seeking to relieve business to that extent—the House favored a somewhat larger reduction, made so by repeal of the automobile tax and some further so-called nuisance taxes.

The budget presented to Congress by the President calls for expenditures in the next fiscal year of about $4,000,000,000.

The public debt is being reduced about one billion a year. A sinking fund is provided for reduction of the public debt, also an interest fund—so much set aside for that purpose each year—payments made annually by foreign creditors by law are applied to reduce the public debt. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to apply surplus on hand for reduction of the debt over and above what is necessary to meet the demands of the Government.

The revenue bill has much of merit in it—not entirely satisfactory to some of us but meets the majority thought, as amended in the House. What will be done with it in the Senate or in conference or when it reaches the President is uncertain. I hope when finally passed it will be helpful.

Of the two Garner amendments adopted by the House, the first will be helpful to the smaller corporations, such as banks and incorporated commercial concerns, and reads as follows:

Page 13, after line 6, insert:

"(b) Taxable income not more than $15,000: If the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 26 is not more than $15,000, then, in lieu of the rate prescribed in subsection (a), the rate shall be—

"(1) Five per cent if such amount is not more than $7,000.

"(2) Seven per cent if such amount is more than $7,000 and not more than $12,000.

"(3) Nine per cent if such amount is more than $12,000 and not more than $15,000."

The second Garner amendment repeals all of section 118 of the bill as reported and makes it mandatory on all affiliated corporations to file individual returns alike, thereby saving millions of taxes to the Government, and seeking to treat all corporations alike in making their returns. Under the present law holding companies and large corporations with subsidiaries may file joint returns and get benefits by offsetting losses of one against the profits of another. It is estimated that under the lower rates for small corporations the taxes they will pay will be decreased $24,000,000 next year. Under the affiliated return amendment it is estimated the large corporations will pay about $25,000,000 more annually, thus more than offsetting the Treasury loss resulting from the reduced taxes of small concerns.

Favoritism should no longer be written in any law—Federal or State. Taxes paid by big business as a rule is passed on to the consumer. The masses who both produce and consume should bear the burdens of taxation only to the extent necessary to meet the needs of Government, and those who benefit so largely from government should not be relieved of their fair share of the Federal taxation, now so largely needed by reason of the World War and its legacy of debt. Big business has faired better than small business, that has suffered largely because of depressed agricultural conditions, which need more reasonable tariffs and lower freight rates, that would both lower the prices of their purchases and increase the profits from the sales of their own products.

Real and continued prosperity will not come until substantial justice is done to agriculture. Mere revision of the revenue laws to collect taxes is not sufficient. Prosperity in high places will not be reflected among the masses and toiling millions unless just laws are enacted and administered for the benefit of all. I fear real relief will not come until there is a change in administration and the party now in power be retired from control.

This revenue bill has been carefully considered in committee. It is not perfect. Amendment of the revenue law and especially those provisions relating to administration and collection of the income tax was badly needed. The bill seeks to remedy existing conditions in the Treasury by increasing the efficiency of the force dealing with its administration and expediting the collections and in closing many holes by which millions of income taxes have escaped collection.

The efficiency of the law is in its administration. The administration of the income tax law has been severely criticized and very recently attacked by an eminent expert of high authority, whose testimony as an expert on tax matters has always been welcomed by the Ways and Means Committee. This expert, Prof. Thomas S. Adams, of Yale, and president of the American Economic Association, is reported in the press as saying in a recent address in Washington that the administration of the income tax law as applied to the larger and more complicated cases—has been characterized by vacillation, delay, and demoralizing uncertainty.

In making this attack he asserted—that there are now more than 19,000 undecided cases before the Board of Tax Appeals and that these cases involve aggregate deficiencies of approximately $550,000,000. Powerful interests are vigorously endeavoring to rid themselves of present and proposed tax burdens.

Surely a vigorous administration of the law is needed. If collections are expedited and the pending cases closed by early action, a much larger surplus will shortly be available for all needed purposes. The conditions, however, in the Treasury are not ideal—the recent refund of over $103,000,000, mainly to large corporate interests, does not give much encouragement on old collections, long held up. Prosperity is not as widespread as claimed when nearly 50,000 bankruptcies in 1927, with liabilities of nearly a billion dollars are reported, an increase of $80,000,000 more than in 1926. Let us hope that conditions will be better in 1928.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was reported out of the committee I reserved the privilege of voting to strike out the estate inheritance tax law if I had the opportunity. Therefore I rise to speak in favor of eliminating this tax. I do not believe in taxing the dead. It is not a sound constructive policy. It may be in time of war, but not in time of peace. It is not a good policy. Again, there are many instances where a going corporation is obliged to dissolve because of the estate tax. It is not the policy of our Government to take the principal of an estate: although during the period of the war there was some talk of it in order to meet our expenses, but that is not the policy of America, although it may be that of Russia.

An objection is raised in opposition to the repeal of this tax because we want the revenue. Let me read part of the statement given by the United States Treasurer to our committee:

The Treasury Department renews its recommendation that the Federal estate tax be repealed.

If the Government wanted the money, it would not have asked the Ways and Means Committee to repeal the estate tax. We in America, the richest country in the world, who have paid nearly $1,000,000,000 a year on account of our national debt, who have reduced taxes yearly by millions of dollars, can well afford at this time to write off the estate tax. It is an unpopular tax. The people of this country do not want it. It is an abhorrent tax. Although Members of Congress may favor it, I do not think they represent the voice of the American people unless they repeal this tax. I am not going into the constitutionality of the question. I appeal to you upon economic grounds and bring to your attention at this time the folly of taxing estates, the folly of taxing the dead.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the opposition to the estate tax, stripped of all camouflage and pretenses, must be based entirely on opposition to the tax itself, as just stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Very clearly there can not be any sound argument based on State rights when we find the distinguished and conservative gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] and the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] join hands with the gentlemen from Florida, Mr. GREEN and Mr. SEARS and Mr. YON, and other champions of State rights. I will say, though, that there are a good many State rights Democrats who are in favor of the Federal estate tax. There is nothing to arguments on this subject based on State rights.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This tax does not tax the dead, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] suggests. That is the one thing it does not do. It taxes the living, who takes this money without doing anything for it. This tax does not apply at all to the dead. There is no way of enforcing a tax against a dead man. It is a tax on the right of transfer.

Mr. WATSON. If an individual had no estate there would be no taxation, and therefore when he leaves an estate it taxes the dead.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania a man can not take his gold and property with him. He can not use his money after he is dead. Fundamentally, the state has the inherent right to take all of a man's property after his death. Instead of doing that, it gives certain rights of inheritance, and an estate tax or a transfer tax is simply a tax on that right given by the sovereign or state to those who, under the laws, are given that privilege. As to these States which cry now because they are discriminated against, I want to say that there is no State discriminated against by this law except by reason of its own act and will, and——

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In a moment. At a time when the States had necessarily to look for new sources of revenue many of the larger States were compelled to impose an inheritance tax. Then the very States now complaining said, "Now we will go into competition with those States; we will attract their wealthy men to us; come down into our State and we will not tax your property after you die."

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Then why enact the 80 per cent?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Any State that tried to take advantage of another State and whose purpose was frustrated by our Federal estate law and now complains is not worth the shedding of a movie actress's glycerin tears. [Applause.] There is nothing in our whole taxing system that is more equitable and better worked out than the automatic division of this tax between the State and the Federal Government. Under our dual form of government we certainly must have in many instances duplication of taxes, but here the Federal estate tax is very skillfully and equitably worked out to apportion the tax to the State so as to equalize these taxes and make it uniform throughout the country. The Federal Government gives back 80 per cent of the tax on the estate if the State taxes up to the amount. This makes a uniform estate tax throughout the United States.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In just a moment. Gentlemen, the opposition to this tax is to the tax itself. It is the easiest tax to collect. It brings in a revenue. It is a hard tax to dodge, because the money is in the bank, the securities are there, the property is all there, and it must all be transferred to the heirs or legatees and can be easily checked up. They can not go and get a certified public accountant, can not hire a lawyer, some ex-employee of the Treasury Department, to dodge this tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Or pass it on.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Or pass it on. It is a good tax and fair tax.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will permit, let the logic of the gentleman's argument be decided by a question. Is not a recognition of the fact that it is a matter within the province of the States found in the 80 per cent rebate?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; just an act of generosity. [Applause.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I am in no sympathy with the argument that the tax upon inheritances or upon estates of decedents is inherently wrong, unconstitutional, uneconomic, or unfair either to decedents or to heirs and devisees. I believe in an estate or inheritance tax. I think it is a proper form of taxation. The right of inheritance has never been considered a natural or inherent right. It is purely a civil right granted by law. Conditions and charges may properly be imposed for its enjoyment. In the Federal scheme of taxation it is an excise tax permitted by the Constitution.

At this time, however—and this is the only subject upon which I expect to differ with the action of the committee—I shall vote for the repeal of the Federal estate tax in the Committee of the Whole, but I make this suggestion to those who believe as thoroughly as they say they do in the repeal of that tax, that if you materially increase the amount of tax reduction by this bill, if you add item after item to the reduction of taxes in this bill, you will defeat the very purpose that you have in mind.

I shall reserve the right of voting against the repeal of this tax if I find, when the bill comes into the House, that it has been loaded down with so many and such large reductions and exemptions that we are in danger of destroying the integrity of the bill.

I do not think there is any great question of policy or principle involved in this matter. I think it is purely a question of whether the Federal Government needs the money. I would like to leave this field of taxation to the States, and I want to say to those Members who come from States which have no estate taxes or inheritance taxes at all, that they have less ground for complaint than those of us who come from States that have estate or inheritance taxes. My own State of Illinois has a heavy inheritance tax, and I feel that the States should eventually have the exclusive use of this method of raising revenue. When I feel that our finances are balanced as to receipts and expenditures, I shall favor the repeal of the Federal estate tax. But when, as I say, you load down this bill with a lot of other reductions and a lot of privileges and exemptions and releases from taxation, you are sure to defeat the very purpose you have in mind.

Mr. Chairman, under the leave to extend my remarks, I want to add that I earnestly hope that the total reductions finally included in this bill, when it is enacted into law, will permit the repeal of the estate tax to take effect as to persons dying after this bill becomes effective. I have grave fear, however, that in its present mood the Committee of the Whole—and, perhaps, the House itself—will so far increase the tax reductions as to imperil the fate of the whole pending bill. We can not afford to pass any law which will create a deficit in the Federal Treasury. The committee in charge of this bill placed a dead line on tax reductions at $250,000,000. The Treasury Department fixed it at approximately $225,000,000. The committee's recommendations aggregate $236,000,000, with possible increases of revenue that may bring the total reduction down to $232,000,000. There is a widespread sentiment in the country for debt reduction as against tax reduction. It would be better to pass no bill than to pass one that will imperil the Treasury. Those actually desiring some tax reduction would do better accepting half a loaf than getting no loaf at all.

That, Mr. Chairman, is all I care to say now. [Applause.]

Mr. FORT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the tax on estates seems to me to be so clearly within the power of the Government, as has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois, that that feature needs no discussion. The question of the right policy on this matter is perhaps open to some debate. There is, however, one feature of the estate tax as a Federal tax which has not been, it seems to me, sufficiently considered on the floor and in the public discussion of this question.

We now have, as a part of our structure of revenue taxation, the system of levying a tax upon the profits realized by men who buy property and subsequently sell that property at a profit as though those profits were current income. By this bill we are further fixing as a part of the policy of the Nation that in the case of the sale of property of decedents, whether by their executors or their legatees, the cost of the property for the purpose of determining the profit is taken as the value at the death of deceased. If, then, we strip from the bill the estate tax the entire profit which has been gained by any individual on the purchase of any security or land which he owns at the date of his death escapes all Federal taxation. There is no other way in which the Nation can reach the profit that has accrued prior to the death of the decedent except by an estate tax.

It is in the national interest that men who make money should be induced to utilize it for the good of the Nation as a whole. It is in the national interest that capital should be profitably and gainfully used in projects which employ others. It is not to the national interest that it should be planted in sleeping investments in the hope of future profit, and then permit that whole profit to pass to heirs free of all taxation, thus discriminating in favor of the man who does not usefully employ his money and against the man who does usefully employ his money. [Applause.]

If you place the provisions of this bill on the books relating to the sale of property after the death of the original purchaser, then you must retain the estate tax or the entire unearned increment escapes Federal taxation. The Federal income tax would reach that profit if the property were sold before death. Only through an estate tax can we bring to the Federal Treasury its proper share of that profit, the share it would have gained if the profit had been cashed during the life of the owner.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORT. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman is discussing the estate tax as a profit tax. Does not the estate tax apply to all estates, whether profitable investments or not?

Mr. FORT. Certainly. But, as I said, it is the only way to reach the profit.

Mr. DENISON. There may be a loss as well as a profit.

Mr. FORT. I want to reach the situation where a man has put his money into undeveloped lands and holding companies for the purpose of avoiding the payment of income tax. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Does it not also reach that part of his capital that is invested in tax-exempt securities?

Mr. FORT. It does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: On page 184, line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Paragraph (b) of section 301 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"'Paragraph (b). The tax imposed by this section shall be credited with the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession taxes actually paid to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia in respect of any property included in the gross estate. The credit allowed by this subdivision shall not exceed 25 per cent of the tax imposed by this section, and shall include only such taxes as were actually paid and credit therefor claimed within three years after the filing of the return required by section 304.'"

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to make a point of order against that amendment. I think it is out of order for a number of reasons. In the first place, there is already an amendment pending and this is not germane to that, and certainly it is not germane to anything in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I simply submit to the Chair the proposition that when a motion is made to repeal a law it brings before the House that law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will direct himself to the first statement of the point of order.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I did not get that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that there is an amendment now pending.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I ask that it be made to read an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The effect of the amendment is to strike out the whole inheritance tax.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In addition to that, if the entire tax is repealed does the gentleman then want to provide that 25 per cent of the tax shall be given to the States? That is his amendment and that amendment is not in order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, why would not this be in the nature of a perfecting amendment? In order to strike it out why could not the gentleman from Florida offer his amendment and why would not the vote come on that first?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That would be so if there was a text before the committee which is being perfected, but there is no text before the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But the amendment puts the text before the committee because the amendment is to strike out all of the act as it stands, and that is before the committee now. Why is not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida germane to that? The present amendment strikes it all out and the gentleman's amendment only strikes out a part and inserts other language instead. Why is not that germane and why is it not a perfecting amendment that ought to be voted on first?

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard a second, I thought the two hours were reserved upon this section and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HASTINGS. Would not the gentleman from Florida have to offer his amendment within the two hours? Suppose the amendment which is now pending is voted down, then it seems to me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida would be in order to the remaining part of the bill, and I had assumed that the gentleman's amendment would be offered and remain pending to be voted on if the other amendment is voted down, because it certainly then would be in order as an amendment to the remainder of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to pass upon that question.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, may the pending amendment be read for information—not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida but the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] on yesterday will be read for the information of the committee.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MERRITT: Page 183, after line 16, insert a new section to read as follows:

"Section 401, Title III, of the revenue act of 1926, shall not apply in the case of any decedent dying after the enactment of this act."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Florida read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] will be read for the information of the committee.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: On page 184, line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Paragraph (b) of section 301 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"'Paragraph (b). The tax imposed by this section shall be credited with the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession taxes actually paid to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia in respect of any property included in the gross estate. The credit allowed by this subdivision shall not exceed 25 per cent of the tax imposed by this section, and shall include only such taxes as were actually paid and credit therefor claimed within three years after the filing of the return required by section 304.'"

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that where you have an amendment to repeal a law a perfecting amendment can be offered. Certainly I can offer this amendment to repeal paragraph (b) of section 301 because it is before the House, but dealing frankly with my colleagues, as I always try to do, I will state that this virtually repeals the law of 1926. It reduces the credit feature from 80 per cent to 25 per cent. So, as a matter of fact, it is a repeal of that law and goes back to the former law of 25 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman's amendment, in the way it has been submitted, has no relation whatever to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], and that it is not in order at this time. The gentleman from Florida will be recognized for five minutes on the amendment now pending.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I trust the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee will be liberal with me, and I assure him I will be as brief as possible. I know your temper and that you want to reach a vote. I shall not go into the question of the inheritance tax, because that has been fully discussed. However, for the benefit of the new Members, I call their attention to my remarks of December 16, 1925, in which I quoted President Coolidge, Chief Justice Taft, and others along this line. You will find the remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 16, 1925. I will simply say that Judge Marshall held, in the case of Gibbons against Ogden, that—

Congress is authorized to lay and collect taxes, to pay debts, etc. This does not interfere with the power of the States to tax for the support of their own government.

Judge Marshall further held in the case of McCulloch against Maryland that—

The power to tax involves the power to destroy, that the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create, that there is a plain repugnance in conferring on one Government—the Federal Government—a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control, are propositions which are not to be denied.

Simply calling those decisions of Judge Marshall to the attention of my colleagues, I will pass over the question of the pending amendment, as I only have five minutes, and there are other points I desire to call to your attention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard some wonderful ideas advanced here to-day, new to me, coming from the Southland and believing, as I do, in State rights. I have heard it stated that Florida, a State that wrote into her constitution a provision prohibiting the levy of an inheritance tax by a vote of more than 10 to 1 of her citizens, could only get the benefit of this law if she would kneel at the feet of Congress and submit to its will. In other words, you have told us that we no longer belong to the Union and that if we want to join the Union, according to my good friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], the way to do it is to repeal our constitution and write it according to the wishes of the gentleman from Illinois. Knowing the gentleman from Illinois as I do, I can not believe he was serious. Illinois might submit to that proposition, Mr. Chairman, but I do not believe they would submit to it, and if they would submit to it, speaking for my people I say, regardless of the penalty imposed on us and standing on our constitutional rights, I repeat that Congress and no other power can make the people of Florida change her constitution. [Applause.]

Oh, why do you not be fair. The gentleman said the State of Florida is being filled with old, decrepit, invalid men moving from, perhaps, the State of Illinois. Let me congratulate those wonderful people of Illinois in that they have finally seen the light and moved out of the cold, wintry blasts to go down and bask in the sunshine of Florida, where we believe in State rights. [Applause.] We are glad to have them.

I am not as familiar with the glycerin tears of the beautiful moving-picture actresses as my handsome and eloquent friend and colleague from New York. I trust, Mr. Chairman, his mental horizon does not begin at the Statue of Liberty and set on the western side of New York City, but why is he not fair with you in arguing this matter, and instead of jumping on Florida, tell you that last year approximately $36,000,000 of Federal inheritance taxes were collected in the State of New York. Of this amount, in round numbers, $28,000,000 of it went back to New York and the Government only received $8,000,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will yield, Florida has the same privilege.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes; Florida has the same privilege, if we would listen to you, but we do not care to listen to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes; we have the same privilege, Mr. Chairman, when we get ready to surrender all State rights. The Government now is centralized, as you know, where people hardly know how to turn for fear the Government will take hold of them for violating some law that fundamentally is no violation of any law.

Why not say to Connecticut, "You have no income tax. We will penalize you in Connecticut until you write an income tax law." Why not say to Georgia and South Carolina, "You have a tax on tobacco; Florida has none; and until you take the tax off tobacco the Federal Government will penalize you by giving money to Florida in proportion to the amount of taxes you take from the people of Georgia." There is no limit to it except the possibility of getting votes. Against all of these endeavoring to preserve to a State its constitutional right, I pledge my vote.

Let me now give you some figures that may astound you. If you are sincere on the inheritance-tax matter——

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I am sorry, but I have only five minutes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. All right; I yield.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to know how the gentlemen differentiates the question of State rights that is involved in the Federal inheritance tax law and the Smith-Hughes law, the maternity act, or the Federal highway act, under which we take money out of our Treasury and give it to Florida to build highways.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. That is an appropriation and not a taxation matter.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes; they are appropriations.

Mr. BEGG. How does the gentleman differentiate the Federal income tax law?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Some of those laws I voted against. The income tax is provided for by the Constitution, and there has been no effort on the part of Congress to coerce the States.

Mr. BEGG. I do not recall the gentleman ever resisting the Federal highway appropriation or voting with me when I made a fight to cut down the contribution.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. No; I do not think the gentleman will find me resisting it because there are only a few things like that where the people get some real benefit out of their taxes, and besides the Constitution specifically authorizes the National Government to establish post offices and post roads, which makes that an entirely different question.

The citizens of Florida voted upon the amendment of their constitution in a perfectly legal manner, and even if we desired to do so it would take us four years to repeal the provision, and yet in the meantime you are penalizing us.

Let me call the attention of those who believe in a Federal inheritance tax to these facts.

It is estimated that in 1926 the Federal inheritance tax $156,000,000 dropped to $116,000,000, in round figures; in 1927 it will drop down to $100,000,000; in 1928 it will drop down to $80,000,000—this is the Treasury's estimate—I am informed in 1929 it will drop down to $65,000,000; and I am told that in about ten years the Government out of $156,000,000 will only get about $20,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is an estimate.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I am simply giving you the figures given by the department as an estimate. I do know that 17 States have now been whipped into line and have voted for an inheritance tax law in order to get the benefit of the 80 per cent refund, and this under the guise of taxation; but in the open you have bartered with them and said, "We will give you back 80 per cent of your taxes paid as inheritance taxes if you will write the law so you can benefit by it and as we dictate." What do we care about Florida paying her $5,000,000 and that $5,000,000 being distributed over the country for schools and roads?

I am not complaining. Let the States get the benefit of it; but I do say it is unfair to Florida to say to her, "You must change your constitution so that out of that $5,000,000 you can get 80 per cent of it back," while New York, as I have said, out of her $36,000,000, in round numbers, gets back $28,000,000 and only pays into the Government about $8,000,000.

It would be a wonderful thing for a demagogue to indulge in in the State in which he resides. I do not charge that any of my colleagues are demagogues, but I would like to have the question go before the people during a campaign, because they lose sight of these many intricate constitutional questions.

I simply ask you, my friends, not to forget the fundamental principles of our Government. [Applause.]

Under leave to extend remarks I call your attention to the following:

The President in his message stated to the House in 1925:

> Society is in much more danger from encumbering the National Government beyond its wisdom to comprehend or its ability to administer than from leaving the local communities to bear their own burdens and remedy their own evils. Our local habit and custom is so strong, our variety of race and creed is so great, the Federal authority is so tenuous, that the area within which it can function successfully is very limited. The wiser policy is to leave the localities, so far as we can, possessed of their own sources of revenue and charged with their own obligations.

Chief Justice Taft, in rendering his decision on page 37 (Fairbanks v. United States, 181 U. S. 283, 285), used the following language:

> The good sought in unconstitutional legislation is an insidious feature, because it leads citizens and legislators of good purpose to promote it without thought of the serious breach it will make in the ark of our covenant or the harm which will come from breaking down recognized standards.

On page 39:

> In the case at the bar, Congress in the name of a tax which on the face of the act is a penalty seeks to do the same thing, and the effort must be equally futile. So here the so-called tax is a penalty to coerce people of a State to act as Congress wishes them to act in respect of a matter completely the business of the State government under the Federal Constitution. This case requires, as did the Dagenhart case, the application of the principle announced by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 423) in a much-quoted passage.

On page 40:

> Should Congress in the execution of its powers adopt measures which are prohibited by the Constitution, or should Congress, under the pretext of executing its powers, pass laws for the accomplishment of objects not intrusted to the Government, it would become the painful duty of this tribunal, should a case requiring such a decision come before it, to say that such an act was not the law of the land.

On page 43:

> The court there made manifest its view that the provisions of the so-called taxing act must be naturally and reasonably adapted to the collection of the tax, and not solely to the achievement of some other purpose plainly within State power.

Mr. CROWTHER and Mr. STOBBS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York whether he is for or against the Merritt amendment?

Mr. CROWTHER. I am against the Merritt amendment.

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I heartily agree with all that has been said in reference to the fairness of an inheritance tax. I think the point that ought to be borne in mind, however, is that the States have preempted this field for 50 years, or perhaps not quite that length of time, and the Federal Government has only gone into the field recently.

The reason why I am opposed to the estate tax is because I disagree with the statement of the gentleman from New York that the present Federal estate tax is an equitable proposition.

I am going to demonstrate that if I can by an illustration. Suppose a person dies in Massachusetts leaving an estate to his wife and children. Suppose under our laws there the wife and children would pay an inheritance tax of $2,000. Suppose the Federal tax on the estate would be $5,000. I am using these figures arbitrarily to illustrate my point. Under the 80 per cent provision and the special law of Massachusetts passed to take up the slack there would be paid to the Federal Government out of the $5,000 Federal tax only $1,000, because, although under our State law originally the widow and children would only be obliged to pay to the State of Massachusetts $2,000; yet, on account of the special Massachusetts estate tax passed to take up the slack so as not to allow any part of that 80 per cent of the Federal tax to go back to the Federal Government, the estate which would go to the widow and children would be taxed $2,000 additional in the illustration I have used. Therefore, instead of the widow and children being taxed $2,000, they would be taxed $4,000, and only $1,000 would go to the Federal Government.

In other words, the tax on the widow and children in Massachusetts, taking my figures, would be double the amount that it would have been if there were no Federal tax, simply because the State of Massachusetts has taken up this slack so that no part of the 80 per cent would go to the Federal Government.

Suppose a man left an estate, not to his widow and children, but to a friend outside of the immediate family. Of course, in Massachusetts such friend would have to pay a higher rate. Suppose such person had to pay under our Massachusetts regular inheritance law $4,000. Then what would be paid by that individual would be $4,000. Eighty per cent of the $5,000 Federal tax would be $4,000, and that individual, who is not a member of the immediate family—and that is the point I want to make clear—is not penalized one cent, because his tax is equal to the 80 per cent provision; but the widow and children, because they pay a less rate, are penalized double the amount of their original tax. So I say to you that the practical operation of your Federal inheritance tax is to penalize your wives and children and the people who ordinarily under the State law would pay a less amount of tax, and it inures to the benefit of the people who are not immediate members of the family and who under the State law would pay a larger amount of tax.

I say that is an unfair tax and it has the effect of reaching out and coercing our different States to pass that provision which they have all been passing to take up the 80 per cent slack—not because they want to, for we do not want to pass it in Massachusetts; we do not want to reach out in Massachusetts and take that $2,000 away from the widow and children, but we will not let that go to the Federal Government, and we do reach out and take it, and the reason why we do it and the reason why it is done in every other State is because we are practically forced into doing it because of this Federal inheritance tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STOBBS. Let me finish my statement. That is the practical operation of the Federal inheritance tax in Massachusetts and in every State of the Union where we have low rates for the members of the immediate family. The answer to that statement, I suppose the chairman of the committee would say, is, to be sure, we may be forcing the State into that condition, but we want uniformity throughout the United States, and the Federal estate tax is going to make a uniform method of taxing inheritances throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. STOBBS. Mr. Chairman, may I proceed for two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that that would not be the answer that I would make.

Mr. STOBBS. It is not uniformity that we want. Each State has a perfect right and ought to be left alone to work out its own inheritance-tax problems. We want to balance the budget as between inheritance taxes and direct property taxation, but the Federal Government comes in and says, "You have to increase your taxes by reason of this 80 per cent provision; you have to increase your estate taxes to reach up and take up the slack in that 80 per cent provision," and so, instead of being left alone to do what we want to do, we are obliged to meet that situation. I say that is unfair and that we ought to be left alone.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But Florida would not let you alone, because——

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I am glad to know that Florida has more power than the other 47 States.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman talks about an estate of over $700,000, with an exemption of $100,000, and he has not brought that into consideration at all.

Mr. STOBBS. Let me say to the chairman of the committee that the State of Massachusetts, under the special estate tax law that we passed to take up the 80 per cent slack, took in $1,500,000 that we would not have taxed the people otherwise, and if we had been let alone and not obliged to do that that $1,500,000 would not have been taken from the widows and children, who otherwise would not have been touched.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the Federal, State, and local governments annually collect from the American people $8,500,000,000 of taxes, of which about $3,250,000,000 are for the benefit of the Federal Government and the remaining $5,250,000,000 are for the benefit of the State and local governments. This huge amount constitutes one tax burden that rests in common upon our 118,000,000 people. The individual taxpayer is not so much concerned as to whom he pays taxes as he is about the question of equity and relative fairness of the total taxes imposed upon him, whether they be for Federal, State, or local purposes. The first question, therefore, that should be kept in mind in exercising the taxing power of both the Federal and the State and local governments should relate to the duty and the purpose to apportion and arrange such a combination of the most suitable tax methods as would secure the fullest possible measure of equity and fairness to each of the 118,000,000 population who are called upon to share the common burden of $8,500,000,000 of taxes. In no other way is it possible to avoid to a more or less extent gross inequalities and unfairness either to individuals or groups or businesses subject to tax. For illustration, I favor the repeal of the Federal automobile tax in order that the States may have the entire levy to apply to the construction and maintenance of public roads. In other words, we should at all times undertake to equalize the burdens of this total of $8,500,000,000 of tax levies.

With this purpose in view, is it wise and justifiable to enact as a part of this annual tax of $8,500,000,000 an estate or inheritance tax levy of, say, from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 a year? My individual view is that there should be annually collected by some governmental agency—by the States if they will—from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 of estate taxes to displace an equivalent amount of more inequitable and more vicious taxes now in existence. This is one of the oldest and most universally recognized tax methods in history. It is one of the least burdensome, most fair, and easily collected taxes thus far devised. The soundness of the principle has been universally recognized by economic authorities for thousands of years. It has never been seriously challenged except from that selfish motive which would challenge any tax method. One specious objection to the tax is that it is a tax on capital. This is in no sense a test. The true test of a tax is its equity and justice and productivity. If a tax is fair, just, and equitable, it is utterly immaterial as to how it is measured, whether by capital or income or other standard. All taxes deplete one's capital to the extent that they are paid, regardless, as just stated, of how they are measured. It is impossible to find in our present Federal, State, and local tax structure any other taxing method less burdensome or inequitable than the estate tax. Under the notorious general property tax the citizen pays as high as 40 to 50 per cent of his net income and as high as 4 to 5 per cent of his actual assessed capital. Why is not this challenged as "a tax on capital"? The estate tax, on the other hand, if imposed to the extent of three to four hundred million dollars would only take a small fraction of 1 per cent of our national capital, and this would come off of wealth and not poverty. There is no escape, therefore, from our duty to cooperate in a policy that would make this a part of the general tax levy of $8,500,000,000.

How, then, can such levy most effectively be brought about? Shall the Federal act be now repealed and leave such levy to our existing State inheritance tax system, in the light of their chaotic condition? When the Federal act was passed in 1916 the States, acting separately and independent of each other, had been wrestling with this tax method for a generation, with the result that only $30,000,000 was being derived from this method and eight States alone were securing five-sixths of its total revenues. The fact was generally recognized that these State inheritance-tax systems had virtually broken down. Duplicate, triplicate, and quadruple taxation of the most oppressive kind had become prevalent everywhere. There was the widest difference in rates and exemptions in the State laws, which also were subject to frequent and radical changes in various directions.

For many years the National Tax Association, comprising representatives of the States and of important groups of taxpayers, were proclaiming the fact that the one outstanding defect in the State inheritance tax laws was the lack of uniformity and stability of rates and exemptions, coupled with the taxation of intangibles belonging to the estates of nonresident decedents. State authorities and this National Tax Association during all these years had been struggling to bring about the one prerequisite for the suitable development of substantial State inheritance tax laws, namely, uniformity and stability. By no other course was it deemed possible successfully to impose and collect substantial State inheritance tax levies. My distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. STOBBS] has just announced the policy that each State should have carte blanche to do as it pleases about all phases, such as taxing intangibles, and the size of the rates imposed and the exemptions. As a matter of fact, this is precisely the policy practiced during the past 40 years, with result that we have every sort of multiple taxation among the State inheritance-tax systems, which has resulted in their general breakdown. Some States have a 5 per cent maximum, others 45 per cent, and still others none at all, while intangibles in some instances are taxed as high as six or more times. If there is any one point that has been agreed upon by the supporters of inheritance taxation, including that by the States, it is that uniformity must first be worked out and established among the States before they can possibly hope to maintain and collect a respectable tax levy. This brings us to the Federal estate-tax situation——

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I would be glad to, but——

Mr. GILBERT. In the line of which the gentleman is speaking?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will pardon me, but I only have five minutes. In connection with the Federal estate-tax situation let me first remark on the matter of uniformity that many years ago, when New York raised her inheritance-tax rates slightly, the press of the country asserted that during the first eight months following $400,000,000 was transferred out of the State to other States with less rates. In other words, everyone knows that it is a distinguishing characteristic of many of those with large wealth that they have a roving disposition, migratory habits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes, or I will yield him my time, in order that he may be recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended five minutes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in further connection with the preliminary and indispensable problem of uniformity of State laws, there was a conference of tax representatives of the State and Federal Governments in 1925 here in Washington. It seemed to have been held under the auspices of the National Tax Association. They had a final meeting in New Orleans and recommended that the Federal estate tax be continued for six years, primarily from the standpoint of the success of the State inheritance tax systems, in order to give them time to do what they have been struggling to do, to do away with rivalry among themselves, and to promote uniformity, as it has been described.

I make the point that since the States themselves recognize that they must put their respective houses in order by establishing uniformity and abandoning multiple taxation, and since a majority of their own representatives at the New Orleans conference recognized that the continuance of the Federal estate tax for six years would, by maintaining tax uniformity in the meantime, offer indispensable aid to all the States seeking to promote uniformity and stability of their respective systems and thereby pave the way for a substantial tax levy. How, then, can any person favoring a substantial tax levy in this country oppose the present retention of the Federal tax which alone will make it possible for the States to bring about uniformity among themselves? What right has any one State or group to raise the question of coercion, when the overwhelming majority of the States insist that they desire a substantial inheritance tax levy in this country, and agree that it can only be made possible by first establishing among themselves uniformity and stability? Is this overwhelming majority of the States to be denied the right of temporary cooperation by the Federal Government on the objection of some minority State or States? Under this policy inheritance taxation save to a nominal or trifling extent would soon be abandoned in this country. We would also be required to abandon the practice and doctrine of majority rule in order to avoid the charge of "coercion" by even the smallest minority. When the majority is proceeding in an orderly and legal way to establish governmental policies in this country, it would be an unheard of procedure for the minority to raise the question of "coercion" as an effective block to such course. And yet this is the only question that is attempted to be raised in this controversy.

The sole question, as I see it, is whether we desire to levy from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 of taxes from estates, or whether in deference to the views of a small minority, many or most of whom are opposed to all inheritance taxation, we shall practically abandon this tax method by repealing now the Federal act, and thereby deprive the States, struggling to bring about uniformity among themselves, of Federal uniformity which would so greatly aid the States to secure this end. To base the opposition to this one available course of developing the inheritance tax upon the theory of State rights is an entire misnomer. I yield to no person in my loyalty to that time-honored doctrine. It is a gross violation of both its letter and spirit, however, to urge State rights in connection with this inheritance-tax situation when everyone understands that the inevitable effect of the course insisted upon would be the virtual destruction of inheritance taxation. I admire those who stand for State rights, but I would regret to see any true champion of this sacred doctrine invoke it as a shield for gross tax injustice by exempting the great wealthy estates in chief measure from inheritance or estate taxation. State rights does not mean the exemption of wealth from its fair share of taxes. If we should impose the English rates, our revenue yield would be from $800,000,000 to $900,000,000. But no one is proposing that. We simply propose a very moderate levy of a small fraction of 1 per cent, as stated, that would displace within a very short time an equivalent of general property tax or other harsh tax methods.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Federal estate tax is so small that within six years the revenue from the estates alone would pay it.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Unquestionably so. If a person is a friend of estate or inheritance taxation in this country, it is impossible to escape the view that the Federal tax should be maintained for a few years and until the States shall have opportunity to put their houses in order and to get out of the chaotic and collapsed condition into which their inheritance tax systems have fallen. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. YON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, when I made a few remarks the other day I did not expect to appear again before you on this subject. I am not now going to take up much of your time. I am only presenting a few facts setting forth the economic and financial condition of Florida and the reasons for our State legislature passing resolutions, and later, the people ratifying the resolutions, amending our constitution, making it impossible of assessing incomes and inheritance taxes in the State for the next 20 years from 1924.

Of course, the State was all in a state of excitement during the time of your consideration of the general revenue bill two years ago. It seemed that everybody was talking of the Florida boom. Everyone either was going to Florida or wanting to go, and consequently you had a disposition toward Florida then that ought not to exist at this time. The boom ought never have been. Florida will continue to grow as she had previously to the boom, and that was not of Florida people's making.

Now, getting down to the situation there now, I will say that in view of the fact that a little over a year ago a terrific hurricane struck the southeast and the northwest tips of the State, and the news went forth that Florida was destroyed with the storm, and the storm was used as a scare, greatly exaggerated, and kept hundreds of thousands of people from their usual winter vacations in the Nation's winter playground. But did this kill Florida? No; emphatically. And along just before the storm the boom had played out; and did that kill Florida? I say no again.

The people of the State—and that included lots of newcomers—have gone ahead tenaciously to keep up the great road-building program; and to give you an idea of what that is, our State road department has been working on the expenditure of more than a $15,000,000 budget this year, and on a cash-as-they-go basis, and the results of the work of the department to August 1, in that under their supervision, not taking into account the thousands of miles of splendid paved roads built by the sixty and odd counties, they have completed 227 miles of concrete, 17 miles of bitulithic concrete, 85 miles of slag asphalt, 89 miles of bitulithic macadamize, 23 miles of block asphalt, 737 miles of S. T. rock base, 418 miles of sand, clay, and gravel surface, and 28 miles of marl, or a total of 1,643 miles of as good road as is in the country; and, besides, they have graded over 2,000 miles with a grade surface of 30 feet and a 60-foot R. O. W. This work was not all done this year, but the great strides were reached last year and continued through this. Besides our road programs the financial statement of our State treasurer shows a good, healthy balance in all funds as of October 1, 1927, of $5,919,230.74, with no bonded indebtedness, and a 7½ mills State mileage, occupational, and other licenses and taxes, we raise something over $40,000,000 a year; and for these reasons we felt like we could forego the levying of incomes and inheritances. And now I am asking you gentlemen, in view of the foregoing facts, that you will please give us the advantages acceding to us under our law and constitution. And is it right, gentlemen, that you should endeavor to coerce a State by legislation that is not given you the right under the Constitution, for there is a sphere for national legislation to make assessments for National Government expenses; but when my State says that they don't want to assess a tax and collect it of a certain sort, as in the estate tax, I don't see how you could constitutionally take from us a share greater than from another State under the different schedules as are carried in the present revenue law.

It seems that the constitutional prerogatives of the State are all overlooked in the matters of expediency by this the greatest legislative body in the world. Now, as to the part the State of Florida pays of internal taxes, the latest report furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, shows the total of $44,483,095.42 internal taxes, of which the larger items are individual incomes, $20,400,660.33; corporation incomes, $15,189,168.89; cigar and tobacco manufacturers' tax, $2,827,856.97; and estate and gift transfers of over a million dollars; and stamp taxes and miscellaneous making up the balance. The income taxes for the taxable year 1926, as per report of commissioner's office, shows an even greater amount—corporation, $17,679,748.17 and individual $28,998,920.30—or total incomes of $46,678,668.47, or the tenth State in the Union in payment from this source for calendar year. The fiscal year report for the year 1926 still further shows that Florida is paying a very high per capita tax. With a population of 1,317,000, she paid $32.81 per caipta, or the fifth in the Union per capita. Florida had that year 1.02 per cent of population and paid 1.52 per cent of taxes; also, Florida is thirty-second in population and, as stated, fifth per capita in payments. Great States like Arkansas, Georgia, Kansas, Nebraska, Kentucky, Iowa, and numbers of others that voted for this 80 per cent credit clause are paying from $3.05 to not over $10.64 per capita; and, of course, the States that pay the greater per capita are those States where the heads of and the general offices of great corporations, nation-wide in their scope of operations, are located; and, really, Florida helps pay their taxes, and Florida also is thirteenth among the States in percentage of payments of internal taxes, as shown by fiscal year report of 1927. In view of the part my State has played in the matter of paying Government taxes since you last arranged your revenue bill, do you not think we are doing our share? I can not help but express that the inclusion of your 80 per cent credit clause was an unnecessary step and does carry an injustice to a sovereign State. I believe you are fair and each of you have in your make-up enough of that spirit to not carry this injustice longer to my State or others, the few that have no law on their statute books assessing inheritance taxes. [Applause.]

You have punished Florida long enough now; please show your generosity and amend the revenue act so as to leave out this 80 per cent credit clause.

Of course in reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress and the remarks made in support of the 80 per cent credit clause, anyone would know that this provision was intended to strike at my State, and the right for them to self-determine their strictly State affairs.

I am a Democrat not because I happened to be born "down South" and a native of my State. I am raising my voice in defense of its constitution; but if I had been born in Maine or the most solid rock-ribbed Republican State in the Union, and with the nature in me, I would be a Democrat. I am just naturally Democratic. I like associations with people and believe in that inherent right that the people, all of them, are entitled to equal rights under the law of the State and Nation, and I am placed in a rather embarrassing position, a new Member in this body, to have to take issue with such a large body of my Democratic friends on this very important question, for they, too, say along with the Republicans, that my State is not privileged to assert her individual rights to levy and collect taxes as she sees fit without being prevented from enjoying those rights by legislation of this body. [Applause.]

I thank you, gentlemen.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I take the opportunity to say that I am in favor of sustaining the action of the Committee on Ways and Means in reporting to retain the inheritance tax.

Regardless of other considerations, it seems to me that to repeal it would be inconsistent with the needs of the Treasury and would make it more difficult at least to repeal or to reduce other taxes which are more burdensome, and the repeal or reduction of which is more urgent.

The inheritance tax is perhaps the least burdensome of all taxes. It is easy to collect, and, as has been stated here this afternoon, it can not be dodged, and it can not be passed on to the consumers. As it now stands, the Federal inheritance tax is practically no burden to anyone, exempting as it does altogether the first $100,000 of an estate, and taxing the next $50,000 1 per cent only, and so on progressively up to 20 per cent until the estate reaches the value of $10,000,000; all above that amount being taxed 20 per cent. The total amount that taxes may be reduced this year is very limited, and it seems as though Congress should concern itself first with the reduction or repeal of other taxes which are more burdensome than the inheritance tax. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been requested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to recognize the gentleman from Florida to speak for five additional minutes, and there being no one else in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] seeking recognition, the Chair complies with that request. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the kindness of the Chairman of the committee in granting me additional time. There are only two or three further observations I would like to make on this matter. One of these observations is this: That when revenue is collected for defense, for the payment of debts, or for the general welfare, then it may well be said it is within the power of the Government to assess and collect, but when a tax is collected for coercion then it is a violation of the Constitution. We maintain that is the case here. I have no doubt in my mind, my friends, especially when these distinguished gentlemen from other States—the States of Iowa, New York, and other States—come before you and undertake to direct your vote by telling you that people are going to Florida for the purpose of evading taxation; that they are leaving your States for that purpose, and that the State of Florida is undertaking to coerce 47 other States into enacting laws similar to that in the State of Florida. I say, when they tell you this, their entire argument falls. Two years ago they did not say that Florida was coercing. They said "Florida, you must pay it," and now they say it has reached such great proportions where Florida is coercing the other 47 States. I wish Florida did have the power to coerce them in this matter and let the other 47 States have their just constitutional rights.

Then the State of New York says—at least one gentleman [Mr. LAGUARDIA] from that State said—that Florida was not worth, I believe, the moving-picture crocodile tears, or something like that. My friends, that should strengthen the argument to those of you who are on my right, when you see the manner in which we are looked upon by the great controlling power in the United States; when the financial center of our country, when the section of our country that directs the cancellation of debts owed us by foreign governments, when the section of our country which directs the elections of our Presidents and which directs the collection and the levying of tariffs in our country, comes to you and says the sovereign State of Florida is not worth the tears of a moving-picture actress. My friends, do you believe the time has come when you can support the issues that those on our left would sponsor and undertake to crowd upon us? It is worthy of your consideration, my friends, you should unite with us who would protect the rights of the States.

Twenty-two of the States of our Union, through their legislatures, have spoken and by both branches of their legislatures have requested the repeal of this tax. Other States have passed resolutions for repeal through one branch of their legislatures. I do not believe there is anyone here who comes from a State whose legislature has passed this resolution that believes the 80 per cent credit was put there for any other reason except to dodge and make a mockery of the Federal estate tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal said in this debate about the coercion of the States and there has been a great deal said about the Federal Government invading this field of taxation and robbing the States of its benefits.

Since the sixteenth amendment of the Constitution was passed it changed the whole system and theory of Federal taxation. Federal taxes are no longer levied according to States or according to enumeration, but under the authority of the sixteenth amendment the Federal Government can now reach out to the individual.

So I think the argument which pits the amount paid by one State against the amount paid by another State is now irrelevant and not to the issue, as the Federal Government now levies the taxes upon individuals and is permitted to do so under the Constitution. The States are using the sovereignty that is given to them in levying any kind of inheritance tax they please, and the Federal Government has the same authority and is levying an inheritance tax or an estate tax. They are both exercising an authority which they have without any coercion.

If one State says it does not need this kind of revenue and believes in this theory to the extent of putting it in its constitution, they have a right to do so.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. We had inheritance taxes long before the sixteenth amendment.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CELLER. And that is not the justification.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I understand that. I am not offering it as a justification but as an example of the fact that we are not now collecting Federal taxes by States, and therefore to compare what Florida pays with what the State of New York pays is not relevant to Federal taxation.

Mr. CELLER. Is not the justification for the inheritance tax the fact it is an indirect tax and need not be apportioned?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The justification for the inheritance tax is that it was levied over 100 years ago in the days of Alexander Hamilton on legacies, and in the time of the Civil War as a necessity, and the Federal Government was in that field of taxation long before the States and now has a right to be there. But why compare what one State pays with another when the levy is upon individuals and the exemptions that are allowed are not according to States but to individuals, because the 80 per cent is not allowed on the theory of a State law but on the theory that the individual has paid an inheritance tax and therefore rather than have double taxation upon that individual the Federal Government is willing to make this concession, although it has a right to retain it all.

Some one has said it ought to be repealed because it is not popular. Who ever heard tell of taxes being popular under any circumstances. The question is, Is it just? If it is just then the Federal Government ought to remain in this field, a field it has been in for over 100 years.

I say it is one of the most just laws that is levied by the sovereignty of either a State or a nation. Why? These gigantic estates are not accumulated within the precincts of any one State. These gigantic estates of above $100,000 are generally accumulated because such men have been in the banking business or in the merchandising business or in the transportation business, or have exploited natural resources and gathered such estates from the four corners of our Nation. Why, then, is it not just that at the end of life, when there is to be a distribution of these accumulations under the beneficent provisions of our Government, that the Federal Government, which has furnished stability and protection throughout all these years under the commerce clause, under the banking clause, and under the various provisions of the Federal Constitution, should say to this man's beneficiaries at the end of his life, "The Federal Government expects you to reimburse it by a certain portion of the estate for the benefits that have been conferred"?

There is a social phase to this as well. Over 100 years ago Thomas Jefferson made a fight against the laws of primogeniture in the State of Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GREENWOOD. May I have two more minutes, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana requests unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GREENWOOD. As the laws of primogeniture perpetuated——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman realize there is very little time left?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Well, there was not anyone asking for time on our side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state there are quite a number of requests for time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. If the gentleman from Iowa objects——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall not object.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I thought I had received the time before the gentleman from Iowa rose, and I do not know why the gentleman rose, unless he wanted to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREENWOOD. As the laws of primogeniture perpetuated these large estates and kept them in certain people's hands out of the avenues of trade and out of the distribution of wealth that ordinarily comes, so these large estates are perpetuated by wills and by trusts in the hands of certain families, and therefore there is a social phase in the dissipation of these estates by permitting the Federal Government to retain this power that shall say to a man, regardless of what States he lives in, "When the hour comes you shall die; we propose that rather than perpetuate and pass on this estate a portion of it at least shall go to the Federal Government, under which you have lived throughout these years to accumulate this estate and receive during your life the benefits of it."

So, my friends, I think it is a most just law. I think the Federal Government has been in this field of taxation long enough to say that it is not trying to rob the States, and I think any State has a similar right to exercise its sovereignty, and under the present situation I believe both the Federal Government and the States are exercising this sovereignty, and there should be at least no argument about coercion on the part of one as against the other. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to this side of the House that it seems perfectly regular to-day not to be with the committee, but I am glad to be with them on this matter. I differ from the other two speakers from the State of Massachusetts, speaking as individuals but not for the legislature of the State.

Inheritance taxes are so lacking in uniformity to-day that we must be sure to die within the confines of our own State, all our property owned within our own State, all our securities deposited within our own State; such securities must be in corporations incorporated in our own State, and all property owned by such corporations located in our own State to avoid serious expense and delay in settling the demands of many different States. If there is anything that can be done toward uniformity, we should welcome it.

I had the pleasure, like the gentleman from Tennessee, of attending the National Tax Association meetings, where able men were pleading for reciprocity among the States. We have not got very far. If a State passes a constitutional amendment guaranteeing 20 years' immunity from either an income tax or an inheritance tax, it appears to be done as a deliberate invitation rather than as a principle of State rights.

When our State had a general property tax wealthy men moved from town to town until we made it uniform. There was a case of a man coming from Illinois, where they guessed him too high on intangibles, and he brought $16,000,000 into one small community.

We who try to apply a principle think the income tax also belongs to the State.

In Massachusetts we have an income tax and have had it for a long time. Why not give us credit on the Federal income tax up to 80 per cent? The Federal Government having adopted this method, we have suffered thereby by double income taxation. We think both the income tax and the inheritance tax belong to the States.

I wish to put in the RECORD that the Massachusetts tax commissioner has written to the committee, and while he does not state his academic opinion, his practical opinion is that the act ought not to be repealed. [Applause.] One of the best-informed tax leaders in Massachusetts, the chairman of the ways and means committee, who has carefully considered this problem, has gone on record by letter against its repeal. However, other prominent tax experts of our State differ, and as yet none of us from Massachusetts know what our legislature may determine in the future. However, in the face of the State of Connecticut's flirtation with our citizens, and Florida with wide-open arms, we must try and restrain our wealthy citizens from leaving our Commonwealth.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, just a word in concluding this debate. The debate, I think, has been interesting. One of my objects in offering the amendment was to have the question discussed in a broad way. Before the discussion is closed I should like to point out that many of the arguments have, to my mind, missed what I think is the principal point of this amendment and in the legislation that I am trying to repeal.

Much of the debate has been with regard to inheritance tax as a tax. I think no one objects to that; but in its present form it is a Federal tax designed, as gentlemen say, to equalize taxation. If a man has got his money by doing business with the whole United States, then the whole United States should get the benefit from his estate; but, as a matter of fact, what happens is that the United States insists on taking a certain amount of money and then returning 80 per cent to the State. The whole objection I have to that is that it does result in coercion of State legislatures.

I think one of the great dangers we have had, and which continues in the Congress of the United States, is the increasing tendency, especially since the war, for the United States to take part in all the activities of the States and in all the activities of the citizens, and I for one am desirous that this Federal interference shall not be increased but rather curtailed. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1, the revenue bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COLONEL LINDBERGH'S FLIGHT TO MEXICO CITY

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we have just received a report that Colonel Lindbergh arrived in Mexico City at 1 o'clock today. [Prolonged applause.] I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to send a telegram of congratulations to Colonel Lindbergh on behalf of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further considerartion of the bill H. R. 1, the revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition for two or three minutes. I do it for the purpose of directing the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to one aspect of this matter which has not been referred to. I agree fully with the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] as to the inherent wisdom and justice of this tax and as to the reason why the tax is used by the Federal Government at this time instead of the subject being left to the States.

When the plan was devised originally 80 per cent was fixed as the figure of the credit to the States. That was an arbitrary figure, but gentlemen said, "We will reserve a substantial amount to the Federal Treasury, since we have doubts about the constitutionality of the law we are enacting." You know when we have no other ground for criticizing a proposal we are apt to suggest that it may be found unconstitutional. However, since the legislation was enacted all misgivings as to its constitutionality has been disposed of by the Supreme Court. If we really believe that ordinarily the States should be left unembarrassed and that under the present plan the States should be given all of the benefit possible, why not increase the credit from 80 per cent to 95 per cent? That is my question, and it is hardly necessary to say that 5 per cent would more than cover the cost of administration.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is giving a reason that I never gave. I was always confident that the provision was constitutional and I have always believed that by reason of the fact that these great fortunes were not made in the various States where these men have lived who accumulated them, but were made from the whole country at large, that they ought to contribute something to the Federal Government, and I think the amount of 20 per cent is not unreasonable. That was the reason, or one of the reasons, given by the Delano committee, whose report we followed.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The commission mentioned by Mr. HULL said "we should maintain the normal tax for six years, with the hope that in that period the States will smooth out their conflict and discriminations." Most of us seem to agree that we should do what we can for the States in respect to this matter. Why do we not do what we can by raising the figure of 80 per cent up to 95 per cent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A great many gentlemen think that it is too high now. It is fixed on a middle ground between varying opinions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not think so. I would like to see the entire revenue raised by the tax less the cost of administration given over to the States, and I would do that for the reason that everyone knows—and I do not think that point has been stated more clearly than by the Undersecretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, who was on the floor a few minutes ago—that many of the States are so tremendously burdened at this time by local taxation as to be almost in a condition of revenue exhaustion.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Those States are greatly aided by the Federal law. Of course they would get more at 95 per cent, but the National Government ought, in my opinion, to receive at least 20 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa for nine and a half minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I did not understand that there was so much time left, and I do not think that I shall consume those nine minutes. I ask that the Clerk read the part of the President's message, which was delivered a few days ago, which I have marked.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any bill for tax reduction should be written by those who are responsible for raising, managing, and expending the finances of the Government. If special interests, too often selfish, always uninformed of the national needs as a whole, with hired agents using their proposed beneficiaries as engines of propaganda, are permitted to influence the withdrawal of their property from taxation, we shall have a law that is unbalanced and unjust, bad for business, bad for the country, probably resulting in a deficit, with disastrous financial consequences.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just exactly to whom the President refers, but I know that every word of that sentence from the message applies to this case. We have had the most extraordinary, highly financed propaganda for a selfish purpose—notice that I use the word "selfish" and not "moral" or "public"—that has ever been known in the whole history of this country. I wish I could tell you the story here, but I have only a few minutes, and it would take me several hours to tell you how they have been working with these various State legislatures in order to get these resolutions passed which have been presented here at this time, and of how witnesses who appeared before us were paid expenses, $2,500 from this State, $2,800 from the other State, and how $500 bills were flourished around in the hotels of this city. I have no accusation to make against the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT], who has always taken the same position that he does now—that there ought not to be any kind of an inheritance tax. He was not influenced by any propaganda of that kind, and he has been actuated as he always is by high motives.

Mr. MERRITT rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MERRITT. Oh, just for a word. Was the President influenced by the propaganda when he advocated the repeal of this tax?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, the President does not advocate anything of the kind. That is where the gentleman is entirely mistaken. If the gentleman will read the corrected report of what the President's interview was, as published in the United States Daily, which is a recognized journal of authority, he will see that the President is not in favor of a repeal of this tax at all. What he said is simply that he was not going to go back on his secretary, but so far as he is personally concerned he is not in favor of the repeal of this tax.

A number of years ago President Roosevelt said there were a great many objections to a government by an aristocracy, but there was every objection to a government by a plutocracy. That is true at this time. If we permit this highly financed propaganda to control legislation in the Congress in the manner condemned by the President in his message, and contrary to an interview he gave out subsequently, we will have a government by a plutocracy. Let me say this: Some say this is a nonpartisan measure. In one sense it is. No Republican convention, no Democratic convention ever put a plank in its platform declaring for a repeal of the inheritance tax. The matter has been discussed for years. There has been abundant opportunity, and no one has dared even to suggest on the floor of those conventions that this tax should be repealed. Those who have been working this propaganda have preferred to work in the dark where there was no controversy made, working with members of the legislatures, numbers of whom have written me that if they understood the question they would not have voted as they did, and that they got caught not understanding what the real situation was.

Now, gentlemen, these great estates of this country are growing by leaps and bounds. This tax which we propose is so moderate that the income from the estate alone, within the time that may be obtained in which to pay, will pay the tax. Florida says we are coercing her. I say that Florida is undertaking to coerce the other States. Repeal this tax and no other State can maintain it, because if you do your wealthy men will go to Florida, as they have been going, and avoid the tax by saying they have a Florida residence, and large numbers will go there if that is done. The ultimate object of nearly all who favor the repeal of the Federal tax is to get the State taxes repealed also.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Does the gentleman favor the 80 per cent provision and believe in it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think it is about as fair as we can get it, as far as that is concerned. It was approved by the Delano committee——

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Would the gentleman favor a reduction in that amount?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not. The intention is to permit the States which desire to get the benefit of an inheritance tax to make use of it. If we abolish the 80 per cent provision, the law in this respect would become a farce. Partly for this purpose we fixed the exemption at $100,000, so that the States could use the lower brackets, and with the 80 per cent provision we do away with double taxation.

Florida, as I say, is undertaking to coerce these other States. That is what it amounts to. No other State can maintain this tax, when a rich man has only to move to Florida, with its delightful climate, salubrious air, and all the other attractions which naturally tend to make them choose it as a residence.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I am glad the gentleman admits it. I hope he may come there.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like to go down there. Most of these men of great wealth have houses there, and all they have to do if this tax is repealed is just simply to lean back and say, "My residence is in Florida, where they do not impose an inheritance tax." That is all there is to it. The other States can not maintain their tax in such event. Some gentlemen say the other States will not levy the tax. They can not. Some of the other States want to levy more inheritance taxes than they have, but they can not. Now, you will get $81,000,000 next year out of this tax. You get $63,000,000 in 1929. The very lowest amount you can get out of it is $33,000,000 if all the States took advantage of the 80 per cent provision; but they will not, and the receipts probably will be not less than $50,000,000 after the years named. I got these figures from the State division, from the gentlemen who audit the returns and who know just exactly what they are taking in. They are accurate in every kind of way.

We have already taken off $24,000,000 beyond the amount in the bill. Do you want to take $33,000,000 at the very lowest, and in all probability $50,000,000, off of this bill? I say it ought not to be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The debate is closed.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. That is the same amendment, except that it is an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: On page 184, line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Paragraph (b) of section 301 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The tax imposed by this section shall be credited with the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession taxes actually paid to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, in respect of any property included in the gross estate. The credit allowed by this subdivision shall not exceed 25 per cent of the tax imposed by this section, and shall include only such taxes as were actually paid and credit therefor claimed within three years after the filing of the return required by section 304.'"

Mr. LAGUARDIA. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I have already made a point of order against the amendment. It is not germane to anything contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to sustain the point of order. It is the same amendment as was offered a few moments ago.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: Page 184, line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Paragraph (b) of section 301 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The tax imposed by this section shall be credited with the amount of any estate, inheritance, legacy, or succession taxes actually paid to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia in respect of any property included in the gross estate. The credit allowed by this subdivision shall not exceed 25 per cent of the tax imposed by this section, and shall include only such taxes as were actually paid and credit therefor claimed within three years after the filing of the return required by section 304.'"

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I make a point of order against that. I make the same point of order that I heretofore made against the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is to repeal the entire estate tax. Therefore the entire question is before the House. Certainly it is germane to offer an amendment to repeal a part of that. I would prefer, however, that the other amendment should stay in.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, for the present it seems to me it is clear that all of these amendments are out of order as amendments to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT]. I think that is all that needs to be disposed of at this time.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, could not the amendment be offered when the other amendment is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule on that question when the question arises.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment for the present. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for. The question is on agreeing to the Merritt amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 55, noes 191.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the vote which was just taken indicate that the Merritt amendment was wholly without merit? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to pass upon that question.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS of Florida: "Paragraph (b) of section 301 of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I must object to the introduction of these amendments. These are merely parliamentary maneuvers. I make the point of order that the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Florida is not germane to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida is not germane to this section.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I think it is unfair for the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] to make that statement. This amendment is offered in good faith, as is shown by my remarks. The entire repeal of the inheritance tax is before the House.

I am going to confine myself to the point of order, because I do not want to take advantage of the House, even if the Chair would permit me to. The entire repeal of the inheritance tax is before the House for consideration. That opens up the entire subject. Certainly it is germane now to repeal a part of that tax. When the entire proposition is voted down, then the House has a right to vote on any section or subsection of section 301. You will find by consulting the precedents that these amendments are germane. I refer to volume 7 of Hinds' Precedents. You will find there that numerous Speakers and Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole have agreed that where you undertake to repeal a certain section of a law, an amendment to perfect it has been held to be germane.

It is certainly in order. If you can repeal the entire section—and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole let that question go in—then unquestionably it is germane to repeal a part of that section. I do not believe that this House or the Chairman will hold that the Members of this House can vote on the one proposition—that is, the repeal of the estate tax—and that we shall not be permitted to strike out the part or all of section 301.

I move to strike out only paragraph (b) of section 301. The other amendment was to strike out paragraph (a). The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means should have made the point of order if the amendment was subject to the point of order, but the gentleman did not make the point of order then, and it is not in order to make it after the question has been debated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to suggest this to the gentleman: The provision of the bill pertaining to the estate tax as reported by the committee to the House and by the House to the Committee of the Whole only amended the estate tax in one very minute detail. That pertained to the question of deductions. Now, there was offered yesterday afternoon by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT] an amendment about which there might have been some question as to its germaneness, but after a discussion the chairman of the committee reporting the bill decided not to make a point of order against it. That particular amendment has just been rejected by the committee, and it is not before the committee for consideration at this time. The Chair understands the gentleman's amendment to go to the measure as it was originally reported by the committee and as it is pending before the Committee of the Whole, and the Chair has the impression that the gentleman's amendment, wherein he seeks to amend this provision in one detail by another detail, has no relation whatever to the provision of the bill as originally reported and which has been read.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Then the Chair holds that because the chairman of the committee stated he would not make a point of order, and the Chair not having ruled upon it, that a point of order could not have been made and that does not leave it open for discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not passing upon the action of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. I was simply quoting the Chair. I do not want to take up your time, but certainly that matter is before the House, even though it was voted down. We have discussed it, and it has been before the House. It is true that where a bill proposes to amend a law in one particular it is well established that amendments seeking to repeal the law or relating to the terms of the law rather than to the bill are not germane. But it has been held that the rule of germaneness applies to the relation between a proposed amendment and the pending bill to which offered and not to the relation between such amendment and an existing law of which the pending bill is amendatory. It is also held that where such amendments are so comprehensive as to practically repeal the law, unrelated amendments have been admitted. It has been held that such amendments as I have offered are germane. I contend that, notwithstanding the action taken by the Committee of the Whole, this amendment is germane. It would repeal a part of section 301, while all the committee has done is to decide it would not repeal the entire section.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I correctly get the significance of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, I believe this is likely to be a rather important ruling.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa (interposing). Rather than to have this extended debate I withdrew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 402. SUSPENSION OF RUNNING OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

(a) Section 310(b) of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The running of the statute of limitations provided in this section or in section 311 on the making of assessments and the beginning of distraint or a proceeding in court for collection, in respect of any deficiency, shall (after the mailing of a notice under subdivision (a) of section 308) be suspended for the period during which the commissioner is prohibited from making the assessment or beginning distraint or a proceeding in court (and in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the deficiency is placed on the docket of the board, until the decision of the board becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall apply in all cases where the period of limitation has not expired prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Gentlemen, I am making this pro forma amendment so that gentlemen may be thinking about the substance of an amendment I propose to offer at the appropriate place. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to compel a complete separation of the ciriminal machinery of this internal revenue law from the civil liability to pay taxes under it, the purpose being this: To prohibit and make legally impossible the use of a threat of criminal prosecution in order to collect money.

Let me show just exactly what I am driving at. A gentleman of the highest character—I think with a character as high as any American—relying upon his accountant and upon the administrator of a large estate of which he was a beneficiary, made his tax return by merely signing a return prepared for him as to what his income was. He signed simply where his auditor told him to sign.

As a matter of fact, the administrator of the estate of which he was a beneficiary had made a mistake. The administrator unintentionally concealed a part of the assets. However, it put my friend in the attitude of concealing a portion of his income, a portion of the interest he derived as one of the heirs at law of this estate. The revenue officers went to him and said, "Did you sign this return?" He answered, "Yes." They replied, "Now, we have found out that you have collected more interest from your portion of that estate than this return shows. Now, then, you not only must pay the tax that is due this Government on this excess portion of this estate, but you must also pay a penalty of 50 per cent, and if you do not we will prosecute you and hold you up before your fellow countrymen as a criminal."

Now, there was no jury in the United States that would have convicted that man. His case was as clear as your case or my case so far as moral turpitude or criminal liability was concerned, but he knew this: That if an indictment were ever returned against him and a true bill found there would be a stigma and blot upon his name that no amount of knowledge of his high character on the part of the general public could ever eliminate and remove. Therefore, rather than see his family humiliated and embarrassed by reading in the morning papers the glaring headlines that he had been indicted, irrespective of his criminal liability or actual guilt or the possibility of convicting him, yet he paid into the Treasury of the Government, my recollection is, about $14,000 of penalty that the Government was not entitled to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, we do not need that sort of money, extorted by virtual blackmail, and I say we ought to write an amendment into this bill to the effect that whenever they say there is criminal liability they must go to the end of it, and that they can not compound a criminal liability by accepting penalties through private negotiation. We should provide that they must go to the legal end of it; that if they have charged a man with evading the payment of his income taxes they can not compound the offense, but must go to final judgment in open court. If they start it, they must carry it out. Civil and criminal liability must be kept separate and distinct. All taxes can be collected by assessment and levy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

If the gentleman's line of thought were to be followed out and the law were to be amended to take care of the cases such as his friends, we might as well repeal every income-tax penalty, because any tax dodger or evader who willfully or any person who inadvertently violated the law would only have to say that his stenographer made an error in his income-tax return and thus avoid any penalty.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. But the gentleman understands that merely saying so does not prove it. It is a fact that must be tried out in court, because we are all not guilty, according to our own statements.

Mr. SCHAFER. The gentleman seems to be worrying about a true bill being returned and his friend being put in a bad light with his people. If legislation such as the gentleman advocates were in effect, a true bill would have been returned against this man whether he made the refund or not.

This is all I have to say on the question, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 403. SAME—TRANSFEREE CASES

(a) Section 316 (c) of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The running of the statute of limitations upon the assessment of the liability of a transferee or fiduciary shall, after the mailing of the notice under subdivision (a) of section 308 to the transferee or fiduciary, be suspended for the period during which the commissioner is prohibited from making the assessment in respect of the liability of the transferee or fiduciary (and in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the liability is placed on the docket of the board, until the decision of the board becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall apply in all cases where the period of limitation has not expired prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at the appropriate time I propose to offer an amendment to the section of the bill with reference to tax on admissions and dues. I shall, of course, refrain from such action if a member of the Ways and Means Committee shall suggest such amendment. In support thereof I desire to point out that the Committee on Ways and Means to my mind has been woefully lacking in its appreciation of the American drama, or rather drama in general, and by maintaining an admission tax of 10 per cent has sought to discriminate in favor of movies as against the spoken drama.

I am informed, as I read the statements made by those who are in a position to know who appeared before the committee, and particularly the representative of the International Theatrical Association, that whereas there were in this country some 500 theaters where there was spoken drama, since the enactment of this admission tax the number has been reduced to 400. There are large territories where the overhead costs to produce spoken drama have become so great that no traveling dramatic attractions will be booked. This is practically true of the States of Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, and most of the South. It was testified to in the hearings that a booking agent cannot even book a theatrical traveling attraction, particularly in cities like Norfolk, Richmond, Omaha, Toledo, Wheeling, Muncie, Scranton, St. Joseph, Wilkes-Barre, Marion, Harrisburg, Binghamton, Grand Rapids, Battle Creek, Zanesville, Flint, and a great many others. While it is true that the movie is crowding the spoken drama to the wall, we, at least in this House, should not give an extra kick; on the contrary, we should help.

There has been a falling off in this tax collection of $6,000,000. This indicates that there has been an absolute loss of $60,000,000 due those who are interested in the production of American drama. The drama can not long endure with such losses.

Now, gentlemen, what does that lead to?

It strikes me that we have not treated the drama or, for that matter, the opera or music properly. We have no right to tax any medium that seeks to develop esthetic values, that seeks to develop the plastic arts. I am sure all right-thinking people feel that it is proper to encourage the drama and not to hurt or hamper it. But do we not hurt and hamper it by taxing it? We do not tax the novel or other forms of literature. Is it not true that many of the best gems in our own literature have been the result of dramatic writing?

I have just returned from a trip to Europe and had ample opportunity to see the generous treatment accorded drama, opera, and music by European countries. There they subsidize the drama and opera and here we seek to subvert it. In Paris there are five large national theaters supported by the Government—the National Opera, the Opera Comique, the Theatre Française, the Odeon, and the Athens. The director of the opera is an official under the French Government. It was a rare pleasure for me to attend productions in three of these houses. It is interesting to note that the cost of admission to the Paris opera, where the finest operatic productions are given, was trifling; in other words, the Government desires to instill in the hearts of its nationals a true appreciation of the arts of music and drama. Even in war-stricken Germany the theater is a national institution. Practically every large city subsidizes its theater. I attended a number of productions in Viennese theaters, all of which were subsidized by the Government. The Burg Theater there is one of the show places of the city, as is the opera house. Both are encouraged and subsidized by a government which has suffered much as a result of the war. That Government has always felt that despite insurmountable difficulties its peoples' thirst for music and drama must be satisfied—war or no war. The same conditions obtain in Prague, in Budapest, and in Berlin. Even our neighboring Republics in South America generously contribute to the support of national drama and music. In Brazil and Argentina there is absolute subsidization.

The mere mention of the names of dramatists, both ancient and modern, must needs awaken us to a sense of our responsibilities in this regard. The drama will fast disappear in this country and become as extinct as the dodo unless we lend some modicum of assistance. In the rural sections and small cities the rising generations will never be able to see productions of Shakespeare, Sheridan, Galsworthy, Shaw, Arnold Bennett, Clyde Fitch, or Eugene O'Neill. These young people will know nothing of the spoken drama. The door to the Hungarian Molnar; the Austrian Schnitzler; the German Schiller, Goethe, Lessing, and Hauptman; the French Rostrand and Voltaire; the Belgian Maeterlinck; the Italian d'Annunzio; the Norwegian Ibsen; and the Swedish Strindberg will be closed to them. The noble tragedies of Æschylus and Aristophanes will become meaningless, while the Elizabethan drama of Beaumont and Fletcher and Jonson and the comedies of Congreve and Prior will grow musty on the shelves.

Shakespeare is frequently quoted in this House; we frequently apply his old saws to modern instances; yet, this very night there is being produced in New York his A Midsummer Night's Dream. This is a very elaborate production. The players are under the supervision of the famous Max Rhinehart. In Germany the Government conceded that his players produced entertainment that did not come under the head of a taxable performance. Yet in New York those who wish to go must pay a 10 per cent extra tax on the admission charge. That burden comes out of the pockets of students and liberal-minded New Yorkers. Many of them can ill-afford this extra charge. We show very little reverence for Shakespeare when we tax him.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Will not the gentleman point out also that the producers who produce the drama are ordinarily not large corporations like the movie interests, and the men who put these shows out, like A Midsummer Night's Dream, and almost all dramatic productions, are men who put their all into their productions and who stand to lose everything if they fail.

Mr. CELLER. I quite agree with the gentleman.

We should give them encouragement and not do as we are doing in this bill—tax them to the extent of 10 per cent and discourage those who seek to go to these theaters.

Miss Jane Cowl, an eminent actress, is reported to have exclaimed recently:

> Our beloved theater is foundering—a broken ship on a stormy sea.

Its competitor, the movie, is fast attaining the ascendancy, and here we are helping in the "foundering" by taxing the theater out of existence.

The drama originally grew out of the church. The miracle plays were always given under the auspices of the church. It is interesting now to know that the Federal Council of Churches of the United States has come forward with a desire to help the drama. This council represents 20,000,000 adherents. This council realizes that the drama can serve a mighty purpose and through its medium can strengthen a feeling for greater religion amongst the people.

I have just received a telegram from the Actors' Equity Association which I desire to insert in the RECORD. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., December 14, 1927.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Actors and authors and better element of managers for two years have been developing constructive program to eliminate just causes of criticism of theatrical methods and to remedy pitiful situation whereby whole States and scores of important cities are without legitimate drama. A removal of tax would be very helpful to us. Hope for your sympathetic consideration.

ACTORS' EQUITY ASSOCIATION.

We hear much about encouragement that should be given to American opera, yet here we tax to the extent of 10 per cent all admissions to opera. It costs a stupendous amount of money to maintain the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. Were it not for the generosity of a handful of philanthropists, who make up the yearly losses, the Metropolitan would close its doors and the light of opera in this country would go out. I attend the opera every Saturday evening, and although I can afford to pay the 10 per cent tax, there are many music lovers who can not and therefore remain away. We have very little opera in English. How can there be? No encouragement is given to it. The English opera company that is playing in Washington this week has a difficult time making ends meet. I am of the opinion, though I am not certain, that Mr. Eastman is supporting it and is making up the deficit. Knowing that opera deficits always occur, why should we continue the burden of the 10 per cent tax?

There was produced at the Metropolitan last year the English opera called "The King's Henchman," written by Edna St. Vincent Mallay, with music by Deems Taylor. It was a very beautiful but costly production. It should never have been produced with a 10 per cent tax. It should rather have been produced with a 10 per cent Government subsidy.

With one breath we seek to encourage American singers and musicians, like Marion Talley, Albert Spaulding, and Percy Grainger, and with the other breath we frighten the audience away with a 10 per cent tax. Permit me at this point to insert the very interesting remarks of the producer Arthur Hopkins on the importance of the theater and the part it ought to play in our daily life:

We believe the theater to be an important part of social life. That belief is not novel. It has been held for centuries by wise governments, which saw the importance of mental and spiritual relaxation for great multitudes who are doomed to humdrum, mechanical lives. Certainly life in America is not getting less mechanical. The whole industrial tendency is toward regimentation. The great problem of the future is to make a man a machine for eight hours a day and a human being for the balance.

Since this is necessarily an industrial country, the tendency of legislation is to build up and fortify the working hours of the day and all who are connected with it in this period.

Wise legislation of the future, I believe, will take into account those hours in which a man should return to his individuality. In our short lives we have seen a distinct lessening of individuality. Perhaps that is the price we are to pay for the very rich ground upon which we live.

The theater is a part of man's dream life. There he may vicariously be a king, a Don Juan, a bandit, a burning apostle. There he has unlocked for him the repressed and clamoring part of his unconsciousness. There he soars far from machines and drudgeries, heartaches, and disillusionment. There he truly lives.

The theater tax is deplorable, not because it is unjust and discriminating, but because it expresses a Government policy.

We, the United States, say to you, our people, that we are not concerned about your relaxations. We not only will lift no finger to foster them but we will maintain to the last those barriers which have long since been raised in other fields.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

PART II.—TAX ON ADMISSIONS AND DUES

SEC. 411. ADMISSIONS TAX

(a) The first two paragraphs of section 500 of the revenue act of 1926 are amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 500. (a) There shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid—

"(1) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission; except that in case the amount paid for admission is $1 or less, no tax shall be imposed, and except that in case of admission to a prize fight, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition, for which the amount paid for admission is $5 or more, the tax shall be 25 per cent of such amount."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 186, line 2, before the semicolon, insert a period and the following: "Amounts paid for admission by season tickets or subscription shall be exempt if the amounts which would be charged to holder or subscriber for a single admission is $1 or less."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is offered for the purpose of clarifying the provision of the law, as it is especially important to the Chautauqua, which is obliged to sell season tickets.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. CELLER. Why did the committee put it at $1 and not $1.50? What was the purpose of increasing the exemption only from 75 cents to $1?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We had to set the limit somewhere. The committee was of the opinion that this would take care of those who wanted to get into the shows.

Mr. CELLER. Those going to the spoken drama or the movies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To any of them.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman knows that in his State he can not go to a theater and hear a good production of the spoken drama for $1.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; but not in the orchestra seats.

Mr. CELLER. To such productions as Eugene O'Neill or Shakespeare?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The trouble with the spoken drama is that you have the speculators.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Would this interfere with the ownership of boxes in the opera?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This will not affect them at all.

Mr. KETCHAM. With reference to this particular amendment that the gentleman has offered, what does it do with reference to the Chautauqua season ticket?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It exempts these tickets unless the single admission is more than $1.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 185, strike out lines 20 to 26, inclusive.

Page 186, strike out lines 1 and 2, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "a tax of 25 per cent on the amount paid for admission to a prize fight or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition for which the amount paid for admission is $5 or more."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to eliminate from the bill all admission taxes except the taxes on the important prize fights like the one we had in Chicago last fall for which the admission is over $5.

We have had the admission tax proposition up for some considerable period of time. We have raised the exemptions, and every time we have raised them we have benefited the movies, but we have not done a thing for the spoken drama. This will have the effect of reducing the revenue probably $25,000,000 or $26,000,000. But it leaves a revenue of perhaps $800,000 which we expect to get from this Dempsey-Tunney prize fight we are preparing for next year. This continual raising of exemptions has proven of no benefit whatever to the spoken drama, and the spoken drama is rapidly disappearing. We have repealed all the war taxes on ice cream and similar articles, soft drinks, but we leave the tax on the spoken drama. We have repealed the tax on art, jewelry, bronzes, and paintings of every description. We have taken the tax off of Bowie knives, daggers, sword canes, brass knuckles, stilettos, and daggers, but we leave it on these cultural things.

We have taken the 10 per cent tax off of picture frames, valises, umbrellas, boots and shoes, smoking jackets, but we leave it on the spoken drama.

We have taken the tax off from films to help out the movies—5 per cent of the rental on the license value of the same—and we now exempt admissions to the movies from all tax, but we leave it on the spoken drama.

Mr. CELLER. And we leave it on music and opera.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; we leave it on music; in other words, the effect of the legislation has been to relieve such articles as Bowie knives, stilettos, brass knuckler—we relieve them from all taxes—but we leave it on music and the spoken drama.

Mr. SCHAFER. We leave it on near beer, too.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; some is left on near beer. It seems to me that we ought now to do something along cultural lines. For that reason I have offered the amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not a fact that unless we do something for the spoken drama, the younger generation of our country growing up in the rural sections and in the far West will know nothing about our dramatic literature.

Mr. RAINEY. They do not know much about it now and they will know still less in the future.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] gave you a very clear description of the condition of the spoken drama of this country to-day. The last time we had a tax bill under consideration in the House the committee voted to take off the tax on the spoken drama. The bill went to the other body and that body claimed that they could not interpret what the "spoken drama" was, and so they eliminated the exemption at that time. The situation is simply this. At no time has anything been done to help the theater in this country.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] asked the Chairman of the committee where he goes in his own part of the country when he wants to attend the theater. Outside of the cities of New York and Chicago there are not 75 theaters in this country where the drama is performed. The gentleman from New York a few moments ago spoke about the theaters in this country. In 1918 there were 900 theaters in this country. To-day there are 200 where the spoken drama is performed. At no time has the committee done anything for the theater. The committee has taken off the tax on the movies up to 50 cents, up to 75 cents, and now up to a dollar. That would mean a reduction in revenue of about $8,000,000. Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking for New York City alone. I am speaking for the drama throughout the country; I am speaking for the intellectual lecturer, such as Burton Holmes, who has still to pay this tax.

What you are giving to the people to-day in the way of relief from admissions is only to the moving-picture people when you raise the exemption from 75 cents to $1. You are exempting them from the payment of $8,000,000 of tax. In 1921 this country took in $89,730,000 in taxes from this source. That was $90,000,000 in amusements, and it was reduced last year to $17,900,000. The difference between 1926 and 1927 was $6,000,000. That means $60,000,000 in amusements taken off the theater in this country. According to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], we are only asking to take $8,000,000 off this tax and restore the spoken drama, the theater, to where it belongs in the field of education and art in this country.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. The gentleman has spoken about the number of theaters throughout the country that have been closed in the last five years. Is not that largely the result of the talent being controlled by booking agencies, who send that talent into certain theaters and will not send it into others?

Mr. BLOOM. Oh, no. The booking agents control no talent of the theater. The booking agents control talent of the vaudeville houses and such entertainment, but the theater itself is not controlled in that way. There are no booking agents, unless you refer to the booking agents that book shows throughout the country.

Mr. LOZIER. Do not booking agencies control these favorite theaters and keep all nights occupied, so that legitimate drama does not have a chance to get into those theaters?

Mr. BLOOM. No; the gentleman is wrong. That contention is entirely wrong.

Mr. Chairman, in this connection I wish to call your attention to the fact that the theatrical industry deserves some relief at the hands of Congress. Of all the industries that have been taxed at one time or another as a result of the war, relief has been given every other industry. Peculiarly enough this business is least able to afford it. And that is the theater. To prove this, I would like to offer a brief comparison:

Under the revenue act of 1918 the tax on soft drinks, ice cream, and similar articles was 1 cent for every 10 cents or fraction.	This tax has been repealed.
Art, jewelry of every description, bronzes, paintings, were levied with a sales tax. In 1924, for example, the rate on jewelry was lowered to 5 per cent of the sales price.	In 1926 this tax was finally abolished.
A 10 per cent tax of the selling price was imposed on carpets, rugs, picture frames, trunks, valises, purses and hand bags, lamps and shades, umbrellas, fans, robes, kimonos, furs, neckwear, stockings, boots and shoes, hats, caps, waists, smoking coats, etc.	This tax has been repealed.
The tax on films was equivalent to 5 per cent of the rental or license value. There was also a tax of one-half cent a foot on raw film.	Both of these taxes have been removed.
There was a tax of 5 cents on telegraph, telephone, radio, and cable messages up to 50 cents and 10 cents on charges in excess of that amount.	This tax was repealed in 1924.
Articles taxed by the revenue act of 1921 were: Bowie knives, stilettos, brass knuckles, daggers, sword canes, dirk knives, yachts, and motor boats not designed for trade or fishing.	Stilettos, brass knuckles, Bowie knives, daggers, sword canes, and these other articles mentioned to the left are no longer taxed.
On admissions and dues the tax of 10 per cent was imposed. Under the 1921 act a slight concession was made exempting 50-cent tickets from tax, and under the 1926 act the exemption was raised to 75 cents.	?

You will see that the proposed exemption of $1 does the theater no good. Later I will quote editorials from various parts of the country in proof of this contention; but let me tell you here that the purchasers of theater tickets from a dollar up constitute practically all of the patrons of the legitimate theater. They have had no relief from Congress. Such relief as has been given has been given chiefly to motion-picture theaters.

Figures supplied by the Treasury Department on the revenue from admission taxes bear me out. For example, the high-water mark of taxes collected on admission was in the fiscal year 1921, when a total of $89,730,832 was collected. In that year the exemption on tickets was raised to 50 cents, effective for 1922. This resulted in a drop of $16,500,000, in round figures in revenue from this source. Once again the movies were favored when the exemption was raised to 75 cents, effective for the fiscal year 1925. This resulted in a further drop of $47,000,000, showing very clearly to what extent the movies benefited by this reduction; but the legitimate theaters benefited not at all. As a matter of record, the collections on admission for the last fiscal year were only $17,940,636, a drop of $72,000,000 from the peak of 1921. And still the legitimate theater had received no relief. Now the committee proposal is to exempt all theaters charging up to $1, which will relieve substantially every movie house in the country from this tax. I heartily approve of this relief being given, and so do the representatives of the legitimate theaters and their allied associations, which include around 500,000 men and women who are actively employed in this business, and who are represented by the following organizations now petitioning Congress for relief: Theater Owners of America, Producing Managers' Association, Actors' Equity Association, Authors' League of America, Dramatists' Guild, Society of American Authors and Composers, Federation of Musicians, and International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees.

Mr. Chairman, I insert at this point a number of editorials from leading newspapers bearing on this subject. The public resents paying this unnecessary tax. Thousands stay away from the theater because of it. These editorials prove this. I am inserting only a few of the hundreds that have been published voluntarily.

THE TAX ON THE THEATER

Eight national organizations connected with the spoken drama have appealed to Congress to remove the admissions tax. They argue that of all the nuisance taxes imposed to pay for the war the theater ticket tax is the only important one that is left. The bill which the Ways and Means Committee has presented to the House raises the exemption from 75 cents to $1. But the defenders of the spoken drama make the point that while such a change would help the motion picture houses it would be of slight aid to the "legitimate" show business, the overhead expenses of which are immensely greater than those of the cinema, which has 48 audiences a week to the spoken drama's 8, and which, outside of the studios, has practically no expenses in the way of railroad fares. It is now hazardous, says the appeal, to send a company on tour; people stay away from the theater, resenting a ticket tax long after the war.

There is a good deal in the argument. The "show business" should not be thought of entirely in terms of $15 seats—white light luxuries which the customer will buy, whatever the tax. Notwithstanding the popularity of screen plays, there is still a very large public which refuses to accept a substitute for the spoken drama. It is not a public that buys $15 seats, or even $5 seats. For the sake of these lovers of the stage, as well as for the benefit of a business which honestly feels that it has been discriminated against in a rival's favor, Congress might well raise the exemption to $2.50. That should aid alike the average theater goer and the average producer. (New York Sun, December 9, 1927.)

The bill for tax reduction of the Ways and Means Committee is, on the whole, politically and economically sensible, but in one respect it perpetuates an unfair discrimination against an important national industry and profession. It continues to tax theater tickets which cost over a dollar, and this is a gross discrimination in favor of moving pictures and against the spoken drama. There is no reason for such a discrimination. Moving pictures can be sold cheaper than spoken dramas, but that is only because the one photographed performance can be more widely distributed. A spoken drama which costs $3 to see and hear is being sold at a much smaller margin above its cost of production than is a moving picture which costs 25 cents to see. If amusements are to be taxed, they should be taxed at approximately the same rate. It may be sound public policy to impose a tax on tickets which cost $5 or more on the score of their being luxuries, but a $3 seat at a theater is not a luxury or an extravagance. It is a fair price to pay for an article which is one necessity of an interesting life for many people, and there is no reason to select it, as compared to cheaper forms of amusement, for peculiarly burdensome taxation. (The New Republic, December 14, 1927.)

SAVE THE PLAYHOUSE

An evidence that the situation regarding the Playhouse is serious is the calling of a meeting by the chamber of commerce for Monday evening to devise ways and means for stimulating interest in this legitimate theater.

No so long ago warning was given that the Playhouse would possibly be closed if more patronage were not forthcoming.

Robert W. Priest, the very capable manager, has informed the board of directors of the chamber of such a possible outcome. Our representative organization will, beyond doubt, do everything it can to avoid the calamity that the closing of the Playhouse would be.

Apart from other considerations, our civic pride should be sufficient to sustain this theater and the Messrs. Shubert, who control. When very much smaller in population Wilmington kept going a couple of legitimate theaters and a large vaudeville house. True, times have changed and the moving-picture places appeal to multitudes, but there should be room for at least one high-class theater of the spoken drama.

Our population is much larger than ever, and by all indications the desire for amusement is stronger than ever. The point is to get this desire into legitimate channels such as the handsome Playhouse, which should be the pride of the city, winning and holding the support of our people.

Lack of sufficient support is all the more odd when it is considered that the Playhouse is directed by such capable and high-class theatrical people as the Shuberts. It would indeed be a bad blow to the city, a black eye, if it should be scattered throughout the country that Wilmingtonians would not patronize, cared nothing about, the handsome Playhouse, which was constructed in the belief that it would be a permanent institution, commanding at least fair and paying support.

It would be a dismal end of such a vision if what is now the Playhouse should eventually be converted into office rooms, for which there is a demand. Let the chamber of commerce therefore do all it can to summon help and patronage for the Playhouse and appreciate what has been done for the city in a theatrical way. (Wilmington (Del.) News-Journal, December 1, 1927.)

THE THEATER

If the Nation's financial condition permits, an end should be made of the war-time taxes now imposed upon theaters. The present tax of 10 per cent is a heavy burden upon a business which needs prosperity as much as any other business does, and which should not be lightly disregarded merely because it supplies what is roughly called "pleasure."

And the 10 per cent tax is not only a burden upon the theater business but is also a burden on the theater goer. It tends to keep him away from the theater. And thereby it deprives him of something that he ought to have.

Secretary Mellon, in his recent presentation of his tax-reduction opinions to the House Ways and Means Committee, expressed the view that the theater tax should remain. He pointed to the sale of $40 seats in the Dempsey-Tunney fight as a fit object for the application of a 10 per cent tax. And in the same way, he said, a tax of 30 cents on a $3 theater ticket was commendable. He holds that the 10 per cent tax should be maintained on the luxury of theater going.

But theater going is not a luxury, can not be a luxury, in any civilized country. A Dempsey-Tunney fight is a luxury; but not so the theater. The theater is a necessity for the civilized mind.

The theater, in some of its forms, provides only enjoyment and laughter, and who shall say that enjoyment and laughter are not desirable? The theater, in some other forms, provides meat for the mind; it provides sauce for the intellectual taste; it satisfies a deep emotional instinct. The theater is thousands of years old. It is as old as all real civilization. It will last as long as civilization lasts. As long as human beings are human beings, nothing can ever be devised that will fitly substitute for the theater.

Mr. Mellon's belief that the theater is a luxury can be easily accounted for. Mr. Mellon during nearly seven years has lived in Washington. For 60 or more years before that, his home was in Pittsburgh. Neither Pittsburgh nor Washington knows what the theater is.

The theater does not exist in either of these cities. A man's mind could starve to death if it waited for sustenance during the long periods between the visits of two worth-while plays to Washington or to Pittsburgh. These cities are deserts, as far as the theater is concerned. Mr. Mellon is a denizen of the desert. He has a natural aptitude for cultivating civilized tastes; but as far as the theater is concerned, he has never had the opportunity to exercise that aptitude.

Government should encourage the theater, not stifle it. The 30-cent tax on a $3 ticket means a tax of 60 cents on a man going to the theater with his wife. This is heavy taxation. It is bringing a relatively small amount of revenue to the Government, and it is stifling the theater in America. (Chicago Journal of Commerce, November 29, 1927.)

THE DRAMA REACHES AN IMPASSÉ

The theater which puts forth spoken drama has reached its greatest crisis in many years. It is literally fighting with its back to the wall. Columbus happens to have a special interest in this situation, inasmuch as in one of its theaters is playing this week What Every Woman Knows, one of Barrie's best plays, and with a thoroughly adequate cast, and because next week The Silver Cord will be playing, one of the supreme attempts of Sidney Howard, a playwright of whom America has a right to be proud.

We happen to know that patronage on the Barrie play has been slim, and these words are not written because we are sorry for the managements of theater or company. But we are sorry for a part of the public which will soon be deprived entirely of these visiting dramatic companies unless they manifest their approval in the only speech that really counts—the tinkle of dollars over the box-office till.

The costs of production have been mounting for years. Salaries of players are high, and yet these financial troubles have occurred in "art for art's sake" companies, where salaries were little more than a living wage. And other costs are on the ascent, with employees asking still more money. If the public were increasingly loyal these demands might be met. With a diminishing patronage they can not. The result, therefore, is not far to see.

There is a disposition among cultivated people to lament the decadence of the drama. Columbus, however, usually gets the cream of Broadway, except for a few Pulitzer plays and others which could not weather the storms of the Provinces. Furthermore, these same cultured people sit passively at home and otherwise amuse themselves while they could help to keep worthy plays alive by their patronage.

The drama has reached a cul-de-sac from which there is no escape. Either the public must patronize good plays or the exposition of that type of entertainment will be limited very soon to performances by selected amateurs in the little theaters. (Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch, October 27, 1927.)

TAXING THE THEATER

In all of life's activities there is nothing quite like the theater [says John J. Daly in the Washington Post]. It is everything or nothing, a necessity and a luxury, a hope and a disappointment, a business and an art, an inspiration and an illusion, an influence for good and a purveyor of evil, a sanctum for spirituality and a den of iniquity, or, as Phœnicians say, what have you? It is the paradox of paradoxes, is this theater that humanity has clutched to its heart since man first took to play acting and set up a land of make-believe.

With the newspaper, the theater is always with us and, like another old friend, the water is never missed until the well goes dry. If by some strange streak the theater were to close its doors to-morrow—here and everywhere—there would be weeping and gnashing of teeth. It has come to be a part of life. As such it must suffer a certain amount of neglect, as all component parts of life must, in season and out, merely to prove that human nature is what it is.

When the theater begins to die the death there is never a hand raised in its behalf. When the theater is alive and bustling all hands rush to its relief. This gesture betokens again the paradox that is the theater. It is dying when it's alive and alive when it's in the sepulcher; for there are always willing hearts to resuscitate it when it is perfectly able to get along by itself and a million friends to kick it into eternity when it is enjoying the fruits of a benevolent existence.

One of the best friends the Government has is the theater. One of the best friends the theater has is the Government; likewise, one of its worst enemies. In time of war, when there is need to put over propaganda, the theater finds itself called upon by the Government to lend a helping hand. It is so here and in other countries. In time of peace a good government generally forgets—and so the war-time services of the theater are forgotten.

Up on the hill the other day, where a highly trained economic body got together to discuss ways and means of saving the taxpayers of this country a few dollars per capita, the theater came in for its usual consideration. It seems that during the war the theater was branded a luxury and so taxed. Ten per cent of the gross receipts on theater admissions were placed on the theaters. It is paid out, and has been paid out, for some nine years by those who go every now and then to see what the theater has to offer. Though the war has been over a goodly nine years, the theater tax persists, and probably will continue another nine years and another until some mighty man arises in his might and shows the inconsistency of such a tax.

Of all the institutions in the world the theater is man's friend when he needs a friend. It is the place he goes to forget his troubles; the place where he checks his mental worries with his hat and coat, at the door; the place where the imagination is permitted to hit the heights, to roam, to ride, or to fly away to fields afar. In peace or war the theater and those who are part and parcel of it contribute their time and talents to the general all-round good of their fellows. In turn they get the kicks and cuffs if kicks and cuffs are the order of the day; getting the handshakes and the plaudits when they are needed not.

In the course of the considerations the committee balloted, 15 to 3, to increase the exemption on admission tickets from 75 cents to $1. A move to raise the exemption to $1.50 was rejected 12 to 8, and another proposal to exempt admissions up to $3 was defeated 15 to 5. It is estimated that the loss from collecting the smaller fees under the dollar will amount to $8,000,000. Over and above that, the loss to the Government might have been doubled. So, not to cause the Government embarrassment, the theater tax stands; that is, all tickets sold for more than $1 must be taxed at the rate of 10 per cent.

One of the reasons there is no theater out where the West begins is that high costs of living have driven the theater out of business. The high rates of railroad transportation, the costs of production, and a host of relative interests, all recited numerous times by those interested in the welfare of the theater, have put it on a permanent footing on Broadway and taken it off the dusty roads. A tax added to the theater is just so many straws on the camel's back.

In Washington and Baltimore and Boston and Philadelphia and Chicago, Cleveland, and a few of the remaining strongholds of the theater there are those who want to see the old institution rock along with the ages; but then there is the tax—and so long as the tax remains, handed on to the man who appears at the box office in quest of tickets, just so long will half the joy of life be taken away from ardent lovers of the theater.

So far as the theater itself is concerned there is little or no complaint about the ever-present tax—though some manager may wonder why it is a tax levied nine years ago, when there was some reason for its collection, might not now be conveniently lifted—when the Government is looking for a way of relieving pressure on the taxpayers' pocketbook. The jolt thus handed out by the Treasury Department falls on the jaw of the honest young man who wants to take his best girl to the theater to give her a real treat. It hits, likewise, the man of family, who once in a while wants to take the good wife and the children to a really good work of the theater. In the case of the ardent swain, he might get away with a straight $5 bill if there were no tax; but with the tax he must needs break into the second five spot to take out the 50 cents coming to Uncle Sam for two straight $2.50 seats. The theater ticket has not changed in price since the war. It is merely the tax that makes the difference; and the tax, along with almost everything in creation, is passed right along to the consumer. (Washington Post.)

HOW NEW TAX BILL DISCRIMINATES AGAINST THE USEFUL SPOKEN PLAY

The new tax bill exempts from the war-time 10 per cent "nuisance" toll all admissions to theaters costing $1 or less. That is eminently satisfactory to the millions of Americans who attend the movies. It is especially satisfactory to owners of film theaters who have themselves paid this tax rather than put patrons to the annoyance of making awkward change.

It is not satisfactory at all to either producers or patrons of the spoken drama. They are both at a tremendous disadvantage. In many cities they have given up the ghost. In all but a few large cities they are facing a decline in revenues which threatens at no distant time to remove them from the scene.

The spoken play is a cultural asset, distinct and unique. No other form of entertainment can fill its place. Its disappearance would be an irreparable loss to American civilization.

To some extent its plight is due to willful errors in judgment and taste among its producers. Correction of these is in process. It will be made difficult if the wholesome plays are confined by high costs, including taxes, to the larger cities. For the spoken play needs the financial, intellectual, and moral support of the mass of the people. It can not function as it should if only a few communities are permitted to see it.

National necessity laid this tax, and while that necessity was clear the tax was paid willingly. But does national necessity require its continuance? The Congress should be very sure that it does before it approves the recommendation before it. (New York American, December 10, 1927.)

ABOLISH NUISANCE TAXES

The Government is no longer in such need of revenue that it should be necessary to continue to plague the people with Federal nuisance taxes. There are other more substantial, popular, and remunerative ways of raising money to operate the Government than to continue the tax on theater tickets, which the House Ways and Means Committee has written into the national tax bill now before Congress for action.

The tax exemption now extends to those tickets priced at 75 cents, and the new bill would raise this to exclude tickets up to $1. It has refused, however, to go above that limit, which means that practically every ticket for admission to the so-called spoken drama is under tax, which the theater goer pays. Owners of theaters are acting properly in protesting this tax and demanding that the Congress do what the committee refused to do, eliminate it.

The theater is no longer a luxury. While not a necessity in the usual sense, it plays a day-to-day part in modern American life which should not be subject to annoyances. Upon prize fights where the admission runs to $10 or beyond there will be no objection to a tax, for those able to pay such prices can well afford the extra impost.

But upon the theater, the ball park, and other amusement and sporting entertainments where the admission price is comparatively small the present tax is adequately described as a nuisance. (Pittsburgh Press (Scripps-Howard newspaper), December 8, 1927.)

REMOVE THIS "NUISANCE TAX"

The Theater Managers' Association of Pittsburgh naturally has public sentiment with it in its protesting against the continuation of the admission tax in the proposed new Federal revenue bill. Theater patrons have become very tired of finding this extra still tacked on years after the passing of the war emergency that caused the laying of such "nuisance taxes." As this admission tax is the last of the "nuisance" type, the theaters are justified in feeling that it is discriminatory against them. The theater owners say that they can prove that this discrimination is becoming deadly to their business; that thousands upon thousands stay away from such amusements through sheer resentment of being called upon to pay a war tax long after the war is over.

Justice demands the repeal of a tax that is having such discriminatory effect. (Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, December 8, 1927.)

These editorials, as I previously have said, are indicative of public sentiment generally. The war has been over nine years and relief from the burden of war taxes has been given every other industry but this. To continue to tax this business is an unjust and unnecessary discrimination. The loss of revenue to the Treasury will be negligible. To continue this tax will mean the wiping out of an art. I ask you not to tax the spoken drama out of existence, but to repeal the admissions tax entirely.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the Rainey amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the House, as a former member of the theatrical profession and manager in that profession, I am deeply interested in the question which is before the House at this time. I felt like saying, humorously, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that I had great pleasure in playing his State many years ago, and I am sure the gentleman is in error when he says that he can see a show to-day for $1 of the same quality that he could, say, about 20 years ago, before we had this tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, I did not mean that at all; but I do not think that is the main question in the matter, anyway.

Mr. CONNERY. We have taken off the tax up to a dollar on the movies. The movies have thousands of theaters in the United States to-day. The legitimate theaters are few and far between. We have taken care of the motion-picture theaters by taking off the tax up to a dollar, and yet we are penalizing the spoken drama. The people in the small towns will not pay to come in and see the spoken drama. We have actors and actresses like John Barrymore and Ethel Barrymore, H. B. Warner, and Margaret Anglin, who are actors, and producers like George Tyler and George M. Cohan, who are interested in the spoken drama of the theater almost solely because of their interest in art. That may seem a strange statement—that a man should put on a show, and that his sole interest in it was in art, but it is true. We all know that George M. Cohan, in whose companies I had the pleasure of playing for six years, can write a musical comedy, produce it, and play in it personally, and make money on it almost any time he wants to.

Then Mr. Cohan can take the spoken drama out before the people and lose half the amount of money that he made on the musical comedy. To leave this tax on the drama penalizes the Barrymores, the George Cohans, the George Tylers, the Margaret Anglins, and all the people of the theatrical profession who are trying to foster art in the United States. In almost every other country in the world the government subsidizes the theaters. In ancient Greece and Rome the theater was one of the main things in public life for the benefit of the culture of the people in raising them to a higher standard. In England, Ireland, France, Germany, Brazil, Argentina—why, in these South American Republics their opera houses are built upon a grand scale; the people of these countries adore music and art. Their Governments foster every art, everything in connection with the theater, while we, the greatest Nation on earth, are following a policy of penalizing art. It is not the rich, particularly, who want to go to enjoy the spoken drama. Some imagine that because people are rich they are cultured, but that does not follow by any means. There are poor students in the United States who know more about art than all the rich in the whole country combined could possibly know. So we are not benefiting the rich exclusively by taking off the tax on the spoken drama, but the people—all people who are interested in the arts and sciences. The Actors' Equity Association, a body of highly intelligent and able actors and actresses, favor the repeal of this tax; and they are not the rich, but are members of the profession which does so much to bring cheer and happiness into the lives of all our people. The spoken drama is their bread and butter. Let us not fall behind the rest of the world by refusing to do justice to the wonderful profession to which all these people, actors, managers, producers, and all workers of the theater have dedicated their lives in the interest of true art. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois should pass and that we should do something in these great United States to help the spoken drama. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, we have heard from gentlemen interested in the culture side of this question, with which I agree heartily, but I want to speak to you about a matter that affects the every-day boy out on the farm as well as the boy in the city. I want to urge the adoption of this amendment in order to save to America her great wild-West shows that portray the hardships of the pioneers in the settling of this great Nation of ours. Oklahoma furnishes to this Nation one of the great Wild West shows. The 101 Ranch furnishes one of the most attractive shows of the Nation, portraying pioneer life in the United States, portraying the history of this country in the making, so the rising American generation may see and understand what it cost us to develop this great Nation. Now, gentlemen, you have all been boys, and some of you no doubt have gone out and carried water for the elephants when the show came to town. There is not an American boy who does not arise long before sunrise and go out to see the circus come to town. I have had some little experience—and I still am thrilled by the sawdust ring. Give the circus a chance, give the great Wild West show a chance. Our shows out in Oklahoma last year carried a heavy burden on account of this tax, because you can never ask the farmer to pay a tax when he comes to buy a ticket for a show. Do not deprive the boys of the opportunity of seeing Colonel Miller and his great show. I want you to cut it down so the farm boy and the city boy can go to the side shows as well as to the big top. So I ask your support. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. In order that the House might have the very earliest possible information in regard to Colonel Lindbergh the whip on the Republican side of the House, Mr. VESTAL, of Indiana, called up the Bureau of Information in the War Department and received the report I gave to the House more than an hour ago. In view of the fact that the report given to the gentleman from Indiana and reported to the House by me has not yet been confirmed and that some fear is now entertained as to the safety of Colonel Lindbergh, I should like to have the gentleman from Indiana make a statement as to the information he received, so that if there be blame in connection with inaccurate reports such blame may be placed where it belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL] will be requested to make a statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, in view of the fact that this report was made to the House of Colonel Lindbergh's safe landing in Mexico City, I desire to say that the information came to Colonel TILSON through myself, I having called up the Bureau of Information of the War Department, whereupon they told me that a report had just been received by them from the State Department that Colonel Lindbergh had arrived safely in Mexico. It appears now that the report has not been confirmed.

I wanted to make the statement because of the first report that came to the House. The report now is from the War Department, from the Secretary's office, that Colonel Lindbergh had not been seen even over Tampico. It was a wrong interpretation or an incorrect reception, and there is some concern about Colonel Lindbergh's safety.

THE REVENUE BILL

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the House, I agree with the preceding speakers that the tax on the spoken drama should be repealed. I am in favor of the repeal of every one of the excise taxes levied as war measures except the tax on wine. I do not advocate the repeal of the excise tax on wine, as I believe the Volstead Act should be modified to permit light wine and beer, and one of the reasons which I have advanced in favor of said modification is that revenue which the Federal Government has lost since prohibition will be restored if the present prohibition law is liberalized.

The distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. GREEN of Iowa] a few moments ago forcefully called the attention of the House to the pernicious and insidious lobby which has been active here in behalf of the repeal of the estate or inheritance tax. I therefore wish again to call the attention of the Members of the House to the bill which I introduced (H. R. 6098) having for its purpose the regulation of lobbyists and prohibiting former Members of Congress from having the privilege of the cloakrooms and floors of both Houses during the period of time in which they are acting as paid lobbyists.

I am glad to see that an overwhelming majority of the membership of this House voted against the repeal of the inheritance or estate tax.

The reduction of the Federal corporation income tax rates is also justified, as well as the provisions of this bill readjusting the rates on small corporations, the allegations of our Socialist colleague from Wisconsin to the contrary notwithstanding. Socialist leaders in Milwaukee, particularly around election time, vociferously condemn what they term "our capitalistic system," and berate and attack corporations as being inimical to the best interests of our country and her people. However, these Socialist leaders themselves have not suffered or been downtrodden under this so-called "capitalistic system," but, on the contrary, have greatly prospered.

The automobile excise tax should be repealed in its entirety, and I shall vote for the amendment which will be presented to accomplish that end. The automobile is not merely a pleasure vehicle, but is used in all lines of business.

If one of my constituents purchases a new automobile to-day, he subjects himself to many taxes. There is first the Federal excise tax, then a license tax, a personal-property tax, a gasoline tax, and a certificate-of-title tax. He also incurs additional expense in obtaining liability insurance, theft insurance, and fire insurance; and, if the automobile is used in producing income, it is thereby indirectly subject to the State income tax and the Federal income tax.

There are hundreds of thousands of people in this Nation who would be granted substantial relief by the repeal of the entire excise tax on automobiles. I reiterate that I shall be glad to vote for this repeal, and for the repeal of everyone of the excise taxes except the excise tax on wine. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BLACK of New York rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce that one-half of the time allotted to the discussion of this question has already been occupied by those in favor of the amendment. Does anyone desire to speak in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I desire to have five minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BLACK of New York. I want to say just a word or two about this increase of tax on prize-fight admissions. I think the committee has degraded the whole theory of revenue taxation by putting in the bill this a very obviously blue-law provision concerning prize fights. The Tunney-Dempsey prize fight netted the Government a quarter of a million dollars revenue last year. It is a strange spectacle that we have of people denouncing prize fighting as a wrong thing and then voting in favor of getting as much revenue out of it as possible. I am not in favor of using the national legislative body to enforce the peculiar ideas some people may have about morality or customs on the whole people. It is wholly going out of the way to use the great revenue power of the Government to bring down upon the people a peculiar and narrow theory.

It did occur to me, when the announcement was made concerning the uncertainty of Colonel Lindbergh's flight, that at New York on the night of his flight to Paris a very wonderful scene occurred. I was at a prize fight in one of the baseball grounds in New York on the night Lindbergh flew from New York to Europe. On that occasion Joe Humphrey, an announcer at the fight, got up and asked that the audience at the fight say a prayer in behalf of Lindbergh. Fully 20,000 men got up and bowed in silent prayer for the safety of that wonderful American.

Now, it should be understood that the folks who go to prize fights are not all plug-uglies and cutthroats. Some of the leading people in literary work and science and art and in business demand places at the leading prize fights in the country, and I am rather ashamed that the Committee on Ways and Means, for which I have always had the highest respect, should stoop so low as to write this blue-law provision in a great revenue act of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, supplementing the remarks of my colleague from New York, I have been assured that when the Tunney-Dempsey prize fight took place some 19 governors were present, 20 Senators, and a large number of Representatives in this House were also there. They made a mighty official audience.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman was talking about intellectuals?

Mr. CELLER. Even intellectuals attend prize fights. Does the gentleman deny that because Congressmen were there? I think it is inconsistent that the Government should on one hand enter into a partnership with the promoters of a fight by exacting such a vast amount of revenue and on the other hand have a law which prohibits the transportation of fight films in interstate commerce, so as to prevent the movie operators from showing these films to the vast hordes of people who desire to see them, the very same people who are allowed to hear about the fight over the radio and who are permitted to read about the fight, with all of its lurid descriptions, in the newspapers.

Now, it seems as though the committee might, but not necessarily in connection with this bill, consider the question of the inconsistency of having a prohibition against the transportation of fight films, the allowing of the vast majority of the rank and file of the people to hear about the fight over the radio, and read about it in the newspapers. These radio and press descriptions are vivid and dramatic. You can almost feel the blows land and see the bloody cauliflower ears—so powerful are the interpretations of the radio announcer. Yet the folks back home can not see the fight on the screen.

To add another word, we have a very anomalous situation. A judge of the Federal court in the southern district in New York has rendered a decision which stultifies all of us if we persist in keeping that law on the books. That judge has ruled that films may be shown in theaters everywhere, but you can not transport them. Now, if you can show the films it is necessary to procure them. But how procure them if you can not transport them? You thus encourage a new industry, and that is the "bootlegging of films" from the place where they were taken to the place where they are to be shown. I point that out to gentlemen for consideration, and particularly to the gentlemen of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which has before it my bill to repeal the prohibition against transportation of fight films.

I am very glad my colleague from New York [Mr. BLACK] has adverted to the subject this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we placed this limit at $1 because we wanted to fix it so that what is commonly denominated the poorer class would not pay a tax and so that those who could afford to pay a higher rate would pay it. So far as this figure is concerned, of course it is an arbitrary figure. The gentleman from New York wants to put it higher, but the committee put it at $1 as its best estimate.

Let me say, too, gentlemen, that it is not the tax which has put the spoken drama out of existence. The fact of the matter is that the movies have put the spoken drama out of existence, as well as the high prices which are charged for special tickets, so that nobody can get a good seat for less than $6 or $8 in New York.

I have stated all there is to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—ayes 67, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: After line 2, on page 186, insert a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"(b) Section 500 (b) of Title V of the revenue act of 1926 is amended by adding, after paragraph (2), a new paragraph, as follows:

"'(3) Admissions to any place of amusement, if during the time for which the charge for admission entitles the person admitted to remain in such place, there is produced in such place exclusively a legitimate spoken drama. As used in this subdivision the term "legitimate spoken drama" means a spoken play, whether or not set to music or with musical parts or accompaniments, which is a consecutive narrative interpreted by a single set of characters all necessary to the development of the plot, in two or more acts, the performance consuming more than 1 hour and 45 minutes of time; but such term does not include a revue, burlesque, or extravaganza.'"

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will make it a little broader. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to the section close in 20 minutes.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this section close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto and to the section close in 20 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes on his amendment.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, during that five minutes—and I shall endeavor not to occupy that much time—I want to explain this amendment. In the committee and in the House in 1926, when we adopted the last revenue bill, there was a general demand for a clause in the bill which would eliminate from this tax the spoken drama. I was appointed, together with two other members of the Ways and Means Committee, as a subcommittee to attempt to draft a clause which would define the spoken drama and present it to the committee. As a result we consulted the heads of the departments of English literature in Yale University, Harvard University, and other authorities, and consulted also leading producers in the country who were engaged principally in producing the spoken drama. The result of it all was this definition. The committee put it in the 1926 bill; it went through the House without any opposition after it was explained, and now I want to see, in spite of the determination to tighten up on that side against amendments, even against cultural amendments of the character I am offering, whether the committee and the House feel about this matter as they did in 1926, when, without a dissenting vote, we put in the law, so far as we could do it, this definition of the spoken drama, prepared after consultation with the leading authorities in the country, or whether they want to leave it out of the bill. It went over to the Senate, and in the jumble of affairs in the Senate they left it out, and in the compromises in conference, in order to get what were conceived to be more important matters in the bill, this was sacrificed.

All I ask of Members of this House on both sides of the aisle and of members of the Ways and Means Committee is to be as consistent now and display as much culture and desire to aid the cultural propositions as they were two years ago, and if everybody feels now as he did two years ago this amendment will be adopted by unanimous vote.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] said that one of the purposes, as I understand it, in keeping this admission tax in the bill was to help the person who was unable to pay a larger price to see plays in theaters, but the gentleman did not mention the fact that the Actors' Equity Association, which is composed of the actors of the United States and which is the actors' union, is in favor of doing away with these admission taxes. The spoken drama is their bread and butter.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts is absolutely correct about it. This does not relieve such plays from the payment of this tax as the Follies or this Show Boat performance a week or two ago, which drew such large audiences. That was an extravaganza, a burlesque, or a revue, and does not come in here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the committee, owing to the debate being limited, I would like to have the amendment read which I am going to offer at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, for the information of the committee and in the gentleman's time, the Clerk will report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 186, line 2, after the word "amount," insert the following: "Provided also, That an equivalent tax shall be collected on all free or complimentary tickets or admissions to such prize fights or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic match or exhibition, and the tax shall be on the amount for which a similar seat or box is sold at the said match or exhibition."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Gentlemen, I seriously urge this amendment. If we are going to tax tickets for prize fights and really want to carry out that provision of the law, we will have to tax these free tickets. The wholesale amount of passes and free tickets that are handed out for prize fights is pretty well known, and if the prize-fighting game has the enormous power that it has, sufficient to make their own rules and to put up fake fights, such as we have had in the past, it is because of the power which these free tickets wield. Here is an opportunity to stop the gap caused by wholesale distribution of free tickets to prize fights.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it not the law now that the holders of complimentary theater tickets pay such a tax?

Mr. BLOOM. No; that was taken off after the first year of the tax. There is no tax on any complimentary tickets throughout the country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The thought which is running through my mind is that if there is such a tax on theater tickets, there certainly ought to be a similar provision of law with regard to these admissions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. I looked that up. There is no tax now on free tickets. So my amendment would tax free tickets to prize fights. The bill places admission to fights in a separate class by raising the tax to 25 per cent. That being so, we should certainly tax the large number of free tickets that seem to be a part of these enterprises.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. I am interested to know how that would solve the problem of faked fights.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, it would lessen——

Mr. CELLER. I am asking the gentleman for information because I do not know.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows as well as I do that it would lessen political influence, if the gentleman gets what I mean.

Mr. CELLER. I do not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman ought to.

Gentlemen, there are others who want to speak on their amendments. I trust you will bear in mind this amendment. Unless the amendment is passed, the provision in the bill raising the tax on admissions to prize fights will be absolutely futile.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman and fellow members of the committee, as a practicing physician of 22 years I have uniformly found it to be a rule that it is not what men eat, but it is what they digest and assimilate that contributes toward their health and their strength. Every economist will teach you that it is not what workingmen earn but it is what they save that contributes toward their wealth. Every educator will advise you that it is not what men learn but it is what they remember that contributes toward their education; and every minister will teach you that it is not what men preach but it is what men practice that counts in this world.

It seems to me, fellow Members, that the message we should send out from this great forum, the House of Representatives, to the people of our country should be measured and judged not by our declarations of faith but by the fulfillment and realization of American ideals, which we should always battle to conserve and preserve as a heritage from our forefathers.

To me an ideal is the place to which God descends while man rises to meet Him. Ideals are the foundations upon which our Government was founded, and it is because I believe in maintaining the dignity of American ideals that I arise to speak in favor of these amendments. It seems to me that God reveals Himself to mankind in two ways—first, through the life of the universe that we term nature, and second, through the thoughts of man that we term art, and it is the cumulative collection of these contributions of nature and art that constitutes the culture and the civilization of our Nation, that should be given an opportunity for expression through the medium of the spoken drama in the life of our Nation.

I have had the privilege, my fellow Members, to write two plays that have been produced, and I have written a third one which I expect to come here to Washington, to which I intend to invite you all as my guests. [Applause.] Perhaps within a month or two it may be here.

I want to say to you, ladies and gentlemen, that through the imposition of taxes upon all theatrical tickets you are demoralizing the opportunities we have of building up the great Nation of ours through art and through science by crippling the possibilities for artistic production and by denying to our humbler citizens the privilege of attending the masterpieces of the great authors of ours and foreign countries, by making it impossible for them to buy tickets that are beyond their financial ability to purchase.

Humanity, of which we are all members, has brought forward upon this world great men and glorious deeds. It has formed languages and reared and created civilizations, and what medium has it to express itself if it is not through the medium of the spoken drama.

The spoken drama, from my concept, is the symbolization of a conflict of basic emotions expressed through characters and reaching its conclusions through climax. The drama represents a cross section of life. It mirrors our daily conduct through our actions and through our emotions. How are we going to preserve these sublime products of the human mind? How are we going to educate our children? Are we going to educate them upon moving pictures, or are we going to open the archives and the treasuries of the great past in showing them the works of Sophocles and Æschylus and Euripides and the great writers of the past from medieval down to modern times?

I say to you, ladies and gentlemen, if you want to go back and build up the great drama that gives us a medium to express our thoughts and ideals through characterization, through dialogue, through action, and through scenery, the only way to do it is to open up the drama and remove all these shackles by which you are binding the hands and feet of the poorer elements of our community who would like to enjoy the artistic treasures that American authors can produce. [Applause.]

And so I appeal to you, ladies and gentlemen, not as Democrats and not as Republicans, but I appeal to you as Americans who are anxious to develop American drama and American art, to forget your partisanship and to go back to the home towns that you come from and open up the small, little theaters and give an opportunity for the expression of these cultural characteristics that have made America the greatest Nation in the world, the country of opportunity, the haven for culture, art, and education. [Applause.]

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order, not to be taken out of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order, not to be taken out of the time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to announce to my colleagues that I now have information, confirmed by two of the great newspaper services, to the effect that Colonel Lindbergh landed in Mexico City at 2.40 p. m. to-day. [Applause.]

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe there are five minutes remaining. I ask that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] be recognized for three minutes of that time.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have an amendment which I propose to offer read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the committee, all this talk about being willing to do something for the drama, and after the address delivered by my colleague from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] I hope that you are going to have a little sympathy in your hearts. I am not going to ask for anything extra in the bill; I am only going to ask you to do the same thing for the theater that you have already done for club dues and for the automobile tax. You have cut that in half. Why not do the same thing with the theater tax; reduce it from 10 per cent to 5 per cent? Cut it in half. The sum total of the tax received by the Government will be practically the same as what you would receive after exempting tickets up to 75 cents. According to the amount it is said will be received by the Government if you tax the admissions over a dollar, it will amount to $8,000,000. You will receive $16,000,000 in taxes at 10 per cent, so if you cut it in half, making it 5 per cent instead of 10 per cent, you will be receiving just the same as you would be by reducing the tax on tickets at 75 cents to $1 a ticket. I do not believe that statement can be disputed by anyone, because they are the figures that have been given you.

It is argued that men who pay $5 to $7 for theater tickets ought to pay the tax. They did not say that about a man paying $20,000 for an automobile against the man who pays $300 or $400; neither did they say it to the man who pays $400 or $500 for club dues against the man who pays only $50. But they cut that all in half. I am not asking the Government for one penny in return, but I am asking that if they are honest in saying that they want to do something for the drama and the theater that they cut this tax in half, as they have done for the automobile and the club dues.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will devote just one minute to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. I would be in sympathy with that if it can be carried out. We did pass that same provision once and it went to the Senate, but the congressional experts and the Treasury experts examined it and came to the conclusion that it never could be enforced; that there was no way of drawing a line between the proper spoken drama and other exhibitions.

Now, with reference to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] cutting the tax in half, it would apply not only to the lower rates but to the $5 and $10 tickets where people can well afford to pay. That would cost about $5,000,000.

Mr. BLOOM. Does the gentleman mean to say that the cost of exempting tickets between 75 cents and a dollar would be $5,000,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I got the figures from the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY]. I think he has it about right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY)—81 ayes and 124 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, now I offer my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 186, line 2, after the word "amount," insert the following: "Provided also, That an equivalent tax shall be collected on all free or complimentary tickets or admission to such prize fights, or boxing, sparring, or other pugilistic matches or exhibitions. And the tax shall be on the amount for which a similar seat or box be sold at the said match or exhibition."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCKEOWN: Page 185, line 24, after the word "is," strike out "$1" and insert in lieu thereof "$1.50."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLOOM: Page 185, line 20, after the word "of," strike out "one" and insert in lieu thereof "one-half."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PART III.—EXCISE TAXES

SEC. 421. AUTOMOBILE TAX

Section 600 (1) of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows, to take effect on the enactment of this act:

"(1) Automobile chassis and bodies and motor cycles (including tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories therefor sold on or in connection therewith or with the sale thereof), except automobile truck chassis and bodies, automobile wagon chassis and bodies and tractors, 1½ per cent. A sale or lease of an automobile shall, for the purpose of this subdivision, be considered a sale of the chassis and of the body. The tax imposed by this subdivision shall not apply to the sale or lease of an automobile body to a manufacturer or producer of automobiles, but in such case the tax shall apply to the sale or lease of the body by such manufacturer or producer."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN: Page 188, strike out lines 3 to 16, inclusive, and insert:

"Section 600 (1) of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if we can not fix on the time for debate upon this amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let us vote now.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am willing, as far as I am concerned. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, a number of gentlemen wish to speak on this, and I ask unanimous consent that all those who wish to may have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD upon this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that all Members have the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD upon this section. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. This is the automobile section to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is the automobile section, and my amendment would repeal the tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And would add $33,000,000 to the amount taken out by the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced himself in doubt.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 120.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. McLAUGHLIN and Mr. TREADWAY to act as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the committee divides, the Chair asks the attention of the committee, and especially of the tellers. The vote is going to be close, and there should be no confusion at the end to interfere in any way with an accurate count. Therefore the Chair requests that with those coming through late the vote be taken so that there will be no confusion in connection with the count.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 166, noes 142.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 422. REFUND OF AUTOMOBILE TAX TO MANUFACTURER, PRODUCER, OR IMPORTER

(a) Where prior to the date of the enactment of this act any article subject to the tax imposed by section 600(1) of the revenue act of 1926 has been sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, and is on such date held by a dealer and intended for sale, there shall be refunded to the manufacturer, producer, or importer an amount equal to 1½ per cent of the price for which such article was sold by him, or, if the tax has not been paid, an amount equal to such 1½ per cent shall be credited against the tax in respect of such article.

(b) As used in this section the term "dealer" includes a wholesaler, jobber, or distributor. For the purposes of this section, an article shall be considered as "held by a dealer" if title thereto has passed to such dealer (whether or not delivery to him has been made), and if for purposes of consumption title to such articles or possession thereof has not at any time been transferred to any person other than a dealer.

(c) Under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the refund provided by this section (1) may be applied as a credit against the tax shown by subsequent returns of the manufacturer, producer, or importer, and (2) may be made to the dealer instead of to the manufacturer, producer, or importer, if the manufacturer, producer, or importer waives any claim for the amount so to be refunded.

(d) When the refund or credit provided for in this section has been allowed to the manufacturer, producer, or importer, he shall remit to the dealer to whom was sold the article in respect of which the refund or credit was allowed, so much of that amount of the tax corresponding to the refund or credit as was paid or agreed to be paid by the dealer. Upon the failure of the manufacturer, producer, or importer to make such remission he shall be liable to the dealer for damages in the amount of three times the amount thereof, and the court shall include in any judgment in favor of the dealer in any suit for the recovery of such damages, costs of the suit and a reasonable attorney's fee to be fixed by the court.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I offered having been adopted, some material changes should be made in section 422 and the following sections. They relate to the refund of the automobile and accessory taxes. I suggest that permission be given to return to them later when opportunity is had to look them over thoroughly.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. While these amendments that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] suggests are not absolutely essential as supplementary to the amendment just adopted, yet in the reduction of taxes heretofore we have applied these provisions and I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], if this amendment is to be agreed to and become a part of the law, that the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Michigan be adopted without controversy.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know what the amendments are.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It is the floor tax. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that he let the amendment go for the moment, and before we complete the bill talk the matter over with the gentleman from Iowa and probably we can agree upon the amendment.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is the suggestion that I make, that we have permission to return to these sections later after we have had an opportunity to consider the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that sections 422 and 423 be not read at this time, and that their consideration be postponed until after the rest of the bill has been read. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me ask, Has the gentleman from Michigan any objection to their being read at this time?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. If it will do any good to read them, I have no objection, if we can have the privilege of returning to them later.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think we might as well have them read if the gentleman does not object. I shall not object.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I have no objection to the reading of them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall not object to the request to return to them subsequent to the close of business.

The CHAIRMAN. Modified, the Chair understands the request to be to continue to read the bill and to make it in order to return to sections 422 and 423, if the gentleman from Iowa should deem it advisable to do so. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair rather inaptly stated it, "If it is found desirable by the gentleman from Iowa to return." It might be found desirable by the gentleman from Michigan, who offers the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. That it shall be in order for the committee to return to the consideration of sections 422 and 423. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 424. REFUND OF AUTOMOBILE-ACCESSORIES TAX

No refund shall be made of any amount paid by or collected from any manufacturer, producer, or importer in respect of the tax imposed by subdivision (3) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1924, or subdivision (3) of section 900 of the revenue act of 1921, or of the revenue act of 1918—

(a) Except pursuant to a judgment of a court in an action duly begun prior to February 28, 1927; or

(b) Unless it is established to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such amount was in excess of the amount properly payable upon the sale or lease of an article subject to tax, or that such amount was not collected, directly or indirectly, from the purchaser or lessee, or that such amount, although collected from the purchaser or lessee, was returned to him prior to February 28, 1927; or

(c) Unless the commissioner certifies to the proper disbursing officer that such manufacturer, producer, or importer has filed with the commissioner, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, a bond in such sum and with such sureties as the commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the immediate repayment to the United States of such portion of the amount refunded as is not distributed by such manufacturer, producer, or importer, within six months after the date of the payment of the refund, to the persons who purchased for purposes of consumption (whether from such manufacturer, producer, importer, or from any other person) the articles in respect of which the refund is made, as evidenced by the affidavits (in such form and containing such statements as the commissioner may prescribe) of such purchasers, and that such bond, in the case of a claim allowed after February 28, 1927, was filed before the allowance of the claim by the commissioner.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DARROW: Page 192, line 5, after the word "to," strike out the words "February 28, 1927," and insert in lieu thereof the words "December 1, 1927," so that the same shall read: "(a) Except pursuant to a judgment of a court in an action duly begun prior to December 1, 1927; or."

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I am offering this amendment, as it seems to me, and the fixing of February 28 is an arbitrary date which makes this bill retroactive. A suit commenced after the date of February 28 in many instances would have no validity even though a judgment was obtained in a United States court, and in order to make it fair to the people to whom the refund is due, it seems to me we ought to advance that date to December 1 at least. The reason for mentioning the date of December 1 is because it is in another section of the bill, section 431, in reference to contracts on motor boats.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But the gentleman ought to understand the reason for this date of February 28. I do not know whether the gentleman understands that February 28, 1927, was the date that the provision was included in the emergency deficiency bill saying no more refunds would be made. Now, that was the reason the date was put in here, because they were then refunding to people taxes collected on accessories that the man did not buy himself, and the country was notified at that time that it was not the intention of Congress to refund any more of these taxes except to the man who paid for them and who was the ultimate consumer of the article.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I realize that that was the reason for fixing the date of February 28, and yet it does not seem to help a situation that appeals to me as being one of justice.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DARROW. Yes; in a moment.

Now, there are a good many cases, some of which I have in mind, where a suit was commenced prior to that date with the understanding with the Federal Department of Justice that if those suits were successful, they would apply to other suits of a like nature, following the judgment of the court as to the ones that were brought to trial, a gentleman's agreement; and it is true that in numerous cases where judgments have since been agreed upon and awarded in a court they are now debarred, whereas if it had not been for the agreement and gentleman's understanding between the Department of Justice and the litigants the suits would have been commenced prior to that act, and it applies to cases where it was not passed on to the ultimate consumer. It seems to me only a question of fairness and justice that we should recognize the decree of the United States court, and not make it impossible for an award of that court to be paid by the Government.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It is to limit the recovery under the act to suits begun prior to February 28, 1927. There was a decision in August, 1927, six months after this date, that was in favor of the taxpayer; and until that decision was rendered, he did not know he had a right to a refund. Therefore he did not begin his suit for a recovery or make his claim for the recovery of it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. He had no equities. He had a legal right to recover this tax, but not a moral right. The automobile manufacturer is the man who pays the tax. The Supreme Court held that that tax was illegal. Nevertheless, Congress ought not to give it back to the man when it was adjudicated by some one else. If you are going to give the commission the right to collect up to December 1 for an illegal tax it would be a strange proposition.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But it would be customary.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. You do not provide for that here, not where you have a suit.

Mr. DARROW. Take the case of a storage battery, for instance, where storage batteries are sold for all manner of purposes outside of the automobile. They were compelled to pay a tax, and under this provision they can not recover, even where it is acknowledged to be an illegal tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen understood at the time we passed the bill in February, 1927, that Congress did not intend that there should be a refund except under special circumstances.

Mr. LANHAM. The purpose of this, as I understand it, is to give relief to those concerns which do not pass on the tax to the consumer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LANHAM. And some of them refrained from instituting suit practically at the request of the commissioner, with the understanding that a refund would be made.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the commissioner could not have done that in that manner after the passage of that act. This applies to cases prior to that time.

Mr. LANHAM. The claimants who have not passed the tax on to the consumer are left largely to the provision here under subsection (b), where it is provided that—

(b) Unless it is established to the satisfaction of the commissioner that such amount was in excess of the amount properly payable upon the sale or lease of an article subject to tax, or that such amount was not collected, directly or indirectly, from the purchaser or lessee, or that such amount, although collected from the purchaser or lessee, was returned to him prior to February 28, 1927.

Now, when you put the taxpayer under the obligation of proving that there was no indirect method by which the tax might not have been passed on, you probably exclude all opportunity for him to prove his case, because indirectly they may involve many things under the interpretation of the commissioner. But, as a matter of fact, the tax was not passed on. Where does that man get his relief if he has not passed on the tax and has instituted suit since February 27, and had the matter pending before the commissioner at that time and it was not determined?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is making a speech in my time.

Mr. LANHAM. I wanted information with reference to the matter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman does not refer to the matter that is under consideration at all. He is referring to this whole provision, which, according to his argument, ought to be wiped out, but which, in my judgment, should not be wiped out.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let me explain the matter to my colleague. It was the intention of the committee to return the tax, as far as possible, to the man who paid it. Now, you have that premise.

Mr. LANHAM. To be sure.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Less than 2 per cent come within the exception; that is to say, 98 per cent of them had collected the tax from the ultimate consumer.

Mr. LANHAM. And my solicitude is for the 2 per cent

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I understand, and I am equally solicitous with my colleague. Here is the situation: Some gentlemen—not your constituents, maybe, but others—when this arrangement was made immediately did this: Instead of adding the tax as a part of the invoice with reference to an article they sold for $1, they just raised the price to $1.10. These concrete cases are in the Treasury Department, and there was no other reason for raising the price except the tax that was levied on them,. and that actually occurred. Now, if you are going to undertake to write into the law an exception for these 2 per cent, or one-half of 1 per cent of the 2 per cent, who are honest folks, I doubt whether you can reach it without opening the door for these other people to get away. I say to you, and I feel confident that you and any other Member of this House would say, that if this gentleman had manufactured an article, had sold it to me, and had added the tax, and the court held the tax was illegal, that the Treasury ought not to give it back to him.

Mr. LANHAM. To be sure; but that is not the man I am talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The whole question here is simply whether we shall refund the tax to a man who never paid it at all. As the gentleman from Texas just said, that is the rule except possibly in 2 per cent of the cases, and as to the 2 per cent of the cases the gentleman who has been interrogating me simply assumes that the commissioner is going to be unreasonable in this matter and unfair because he will require unusual proof.

Mr. LANHAM. May I say to the gentleman that my question was intended to elicit information as to the legislative intent in order that the commissioner might be guided in his determination of these cases by the understanding that there was no intention here to preclude the 2 per cent that had not passed on that charge to the consumer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is quite correct about that.

Mr. LANHAM. Because a difference in price might arise from the cost of production and things of that kind.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit, I want to ask my colleague from Texas whether he does not know of this kind of a case, where a claim has been allowed by the commissioner and the man could not get a refund because he did not file suit before February 28, 1927?

Mr. LANHAM. That is true.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And the money should go back to him and not to some one else.

Mr. LANHAM. To be sure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is very evident that tax reduction is popular. This can be seen very clearly from some of the votes that were taken Monday and yesterday and the one taken just a few moments ago cutting off quite a very large slice of revenue by the repeal of the entire tax on automobiles. The committee had decided that half of this revenue could possibly be spared, and had so indicated in the bill reported by repealing one-half of the present tax. The automobile people ought to have been content with half a loaf now and waited for the rest till the revenue could be spared. They have not done so, but upon their insistence the Committee of the Whole has now voted to repeal the entire tax. Yesterday, or the day before, it was voted to reduce the revenues some $25,000,000 by establishing a new system of graduated corporation income tax. I simply wish to sound this note of warning, that there may be such a thing as defeating the entire program of tax reduction. If anyone wishes to prevent any tax reduction whatsoever at this session of Congress, the simplest way to do it is to load this bill down with amendments of such a character as to destroy the revenue-producing qualities of the law to such an extent that in all human probability a deficit will be the result.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact, if he desires to recoup, that section 442 of this bill could be stricken out and $8,500,000 recouped to the Treasury. I merely call this to the gentleman's attention in passing so that the gentleman can take it into consideration; and I might add for the information of the gentleman that 90 per cent of that tax is paid on the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, whether it can be done, as my friend from Texas suggests, or whether the method he suggests is a good way to do it is neither here nor there.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No one will deny the statement.

Mr. TILSON. I do not know whether the amendment proposed by the gentleman will be thought wise by the membership of the House, so we may not rely upon revenue from that source; but my statement is general that we are here threatened with too much reduction, and I am simply calling the attention of the membership of the House to that fact.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. It is not the contention of the gentleman that the amendment we adopted yesterday which strikes out section 118, preventing one or more corporations from taking advantage of the loss of an affiliated corporation, will reduce the revenues?

Mr. TILSON. I have been making a study of that amendment to-day and I am not at all clear as to just what will be the effect of it; but it is my present belief that as the bill now stands it will throw the law into such confusion that it will open the door wide to wash transactions between affiliated companies, or companies owned by the same individuals, in order to equalize gains and losses, so that ultimately there will be a serious loss of revenue rather than a gain.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Would the gentleman mind giving us some particulars to support that theory?

Mr. TILSON. I have not completed my study of this provision so as to be clear in my own mind as to just how it will work and shall therefore not attempt to illustrate by instances. It is my information, however, that its effect would be to introduce into the law wide possibilities for evasion of taxes; but not being thoroughly familiar with this somewhat technical and intricate portion of the bill, I did not rise to speak on this subject.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I think the gentleman ought to say that he has only had one lesson, because the teacher has only been here this afternoon.

Mr. TILSON. I am willing to get information from the teacher to whom the gentleman refers and from anybody else who may be able to give it. If I thought that by any chance the gentleman from Texas could give me reliable information on the subject, I should be pleased to have it.

In this connection while speaking of information, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend these remarks after making a little further study of the two amendments agreed to yesterday and the day before.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is one thing certain, the amendment to which the gentleman from Texas refers will not produce any change in the next two years, because they go on under the same old law for the next two years.

Mr. TILSON. Of course, it could not produce any revenue for the next two years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And during the two years the corporations will have an opportunity to do just what the gentleman from Connecticut has suggested.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. It is agreed by all of us that section 118 will not have any effect for the next two years.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; we are all agreed as to this, but after 1929, when consolidated returns are not permitted, without the provisions of section 118 it is not clear to me just what restrictions in the law, if any, will prevent corporations affiliated by a common ownership from so arranging matters among themselves as to protect their common owners from undue exaction.

The theory that corporations are separate entities is but a convenient legal fiction. The fact is that it is the individual stockholder who actually sustains the loss or receives the benefit of the gain. The corporation feels no pain or pleasure upon sustaining a loss or making a gain. It is the individual who happens to be a stockholder who is really concerned. Let us suppose that Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith own all the stock of corporation A, and that corporation A owns all of the stock of corporation B. Corporation A is engaged in selling a particular product and corporation B is engaged in manufacturing that product. For practical purposes it is quite immaterial whether corporation B sells the manufactured product to corporation A at a profit or at a loss, for Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith actually receive in dividends only the net result of the efforts of both corporations.

Let me illustrate further: Suppose that Mr. Brown runs a business in New York as an individual and runs a second business in Texas as an individual. His income is again based upon the net results of the two businesses. As an individual he is entitled for income-tax purposes to treat the two businesses as one. If the Texas business loses money, the loss may be offset against any gains resulting from the New York business, or vice versa. This is clear and simple as to an individual, but doing business as a corporation is exactly the same as doing business as an individual, at least so far as taxable net income is concerned. I am informed that the advisory committee of the Joint Committee on Internal-Revenue Taxation recommended that consolidated returns be abolished, not because the permission to file consolidated returns was economically unsound but because of administrative difficulties in determining the net income of an affiliated group, in which there were a large number of subsidiaries, and among the members of which there were a large number of intercompany transactions. The recommendations of the advisory committee, however, permit the offset of losses sustained by any member of the group, thus carrying out the sound economic theory upon which permission to file consolidated returns was based, and at the same time eliminating the administrative problems.

Let us remember that the provisions of the bill are applicable only where corporations are, in effect, but one corporation, 95 per cent ownership being required. In most cases there is an ownership of 100 per cent. The interests are the same.

The ability to pay must be governed by the net income of the entire group. Computing the income of each separate corporation is but the basing of an income tax upon paper profits. Our income tax law should be based as nearly as possible upon income actually realized.

Group organization of corporations, all owned ultimately by the same stockholders, has been developed by modern business for perfectly legitimate reasons, among them being separate accounting for the various parts of an enterprise and the desirability, and frequently the necessity, of creating an independent corporation for the purpose of carrying on a particular part of the business, both at home and abroad. The mere fact that by a legal fiction these are separate entities should not obscure the fact that they are in reality one and the same business, owned by the same individuals, and run as a unit. To refuse to recognize this fact and to compel for tax purposes the breaking up of the single business into its constituent parts is just as unreasonable as to require a single corporation to report for tax purposes the net result of its sales department the net profit or loss on its manufacturing activities, the net profit or loss on its investments, or the net profit or loss on each and every one of its agencies. Such a requirement would be so absurd as to appear on its face ridiculous, and it is only necessary to state the case of a single corporation to demonstrate its absurdity. It is no more absurd, however, when applied to the different departments of a single corporation than it is when applied to the subsidiary corporations of a single unit. For instance, if a single corporation has a manufacturing department and a sales department, and we regard it as absurd to separate them for tax-accounting purposes, it is equally absurd when dealing with two subsidiary corporations, one of which does the manufacturing and the other one of which does the selling, to claim that theoretically they are two separate entities, when, as a matter of fact, they are both engaged in a common, inseparable enterprise.

The contention that the elimination of the consolidated return will tend to prevent unfair competition and price cutting by subsidiaries is not tenable, for it is obvious that by the employment of the simplest devices the parent company, if it desires to use the subsidiary for price-cutting purposes, can so manage the transactions between the two companies as to see to it that the loss is borne by the parent company and so be made available for tax purposes.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] estimated the other day that the gain in revenue by striking out the provisions of the bill would be approximately $25,000,000. Upon inquiry, Mr. McCoy, the Government actuary, upon whose estimates the committee and this House have always relied, states that it is absolutely impossible to make an estimate. This much, however, seems to be certain, that whatever increase in revenue may result will be based on an injustice to the individuals who own the affiliated corporations.

The Committee of the Whole has also adopted an amendment imposing a graduated tax upon corporations having small incomes, the rates being 5, 7, and 9 per cent upon incomes of less than $7,000, between $7,000 and $12,000, and between $12,000 and $15,000, respectively.

The only justification for a graduated tax upon individuals or corporations is that the tax will be based upon ability to pay. It is quite proper that an individual having a net income of $1,000,000 should pay at a higher rate than an individual having a net income of $10,000, because the former unquestionably has greater tax-paying ability than the latter.

In the case of corporations, however, the size of the net income has nothing to do with the corporation's ability to pay unless there be taken into consideration the controlling factor of the capital invested in the business. A corporation having an invested capital of $10,000 which has a net income of $15,000, will, under the amendment adopted, be given preferential treatment. It will pay the rate of 9 per cent upon the $15,000, notwithstanding the fact that it has in fact realized a profit of 150 per cent upon its investment. On the other hand, a corporation with an investment of $400,000, and with an income of $20,000, will be subjected to a tax at the rate of 11½ per cent, while its rate of profit is but 5 per cent. Is this a fair result?

The net income of a corporation is by itself not a correct basis for determining ability to pay. A corporation consisting of two stockholders with a small investment is in a much better position with an income of $25,000 than a corporation realizing the same income, but having 50 stockholders among whom its earnings must be distributed and having a large investment, upon which it is entitled to a fair return.

We all recall that the excess-profits tax was an attempt to grade the corporation tax in accordance with ability to pay, but of course took into consideration the capital factor. Theoretically it was sound, but in practice it could not be administered. With the capital factor eliminated, however, no one would contend for a moment that it is even theoretically sound. With invested capital eliminated, mere size of income indicates nothing. There is no reason why if I invest $1,000 in a $1,000,000 corporation, from which I receive only a 5 per cent dividend, the fruits of my investment should be reduced by 11½ per cent tax before I receive them, while if I invest the same $1,000 in a $50,000 corporation, from which I receive a 20 per cent dividend, my income is reduced by only 5, 7, or 9 per cent tax.

Under the bill as reported by the committee, an additional credit is given the small corporations, which favors them. The Committee on Ways and Means weighed carefully the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and decided against it. The provisions in the bill as reported are the conclusions of that great committee maturely reached. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas introduces into our corporation-tax system a new and, in my judgment, an unsound principle which in practice will produce absurd and unjust results.

Should this amendment finally become law, there will spring up, in all probability, a whole flock of little corporations created by men of wealth for tax-evasion purposes. Let me illustrate: Assume that a man with a net income of $200,000, spends $100,000 every year, but has $100,000 of income which he saves. His problem is to reduce his taxes on the second $100,000. He accordingly creates five corporations with net incomes of $15,000 each and one corporation with a net income of $25,000. The total taxes paid by these six corporations under the proposed scheme would be less than $8,000, whereas his tax as an individual on the second $100,000 would be $25,000. It is obvious that this device can be applied with even greater success by a man with an income of $400,000, $500,000, or $600,000. While, of course, it was not the intention of the gentleman from Texas to create new isles of safety, it almost looks as if some prospective tax dodger had handed him a well thought out device for tax evasion which the gentleman from Texas, with his usual good nature, has undertaken to put across.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the statement just made by the majority leader is based upon the official estimates submitted by the Treasury Department for next year and the next year.

It comes in the nature of a threat to this House. In order to determine just how much weight should be given it, I want to call attention to the official estimates of surpluses that have been made in recent years.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, on June 30, 1923, according to the official estimates made public by the Treasury Department, there was going to be a deficit. In December, 1923, the Treasury Department admitted there would not be a deficit but there would be a surplus of $329,639,000. The actual surplus, however, for 1924 was $505,366,000, a mistake of over $500,000,000 in the estimates first given out, and over $200,000,000 in the estimates given out during the latter part of 1923.

On June 30, 1924, the Secretary of the Treasury told us there would be a surplus of $24,939,000. In December, 1924, he raised this estimate to $67,884,000, and the actual surplus turned out to be $250,505,000.

On June 30, 1925, he told us the surplus would be $290,970,000. In December, 1925, he reduced that amount to $262,041,000, and the actual surplus was $377,767,000.

On the 30th day of June, 1926, we were advised from the Treasury Department that the surplus would be $186,227,000. In December, 1926, he raised that estimate and told us the surplus would be $385,079,000. It was actually $625,000,000—a mistake of nearly $300,000,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman from Illinois aware that all of these figures have been put in the RECORD?

Mr. RAINEY. It will not hurt to put them in again; they have not been assembled for the RECORD as completely as I am now assembling them. Now the Secretary of the Treasury says the surplus for 1927 is going to be $207,703,000. Based on the precedents established by the Treasury Department in making the mistakes, and the mistakes they have made in the last two years will aggregate nearly $2,000,000,000; based on precedents that they have established, we are going to have a surplus that will carry a bill of $400,000,000 reduction, and there will be a surplus after that of at least $100,000,000.

That is enough for the business men of this country to carry. [Applause.]

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the time of the committee, but I want to say that I believe my amendment is in the interest of justice and fairness to the people, and I hope the committee will see fit to adopt it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was much interested in the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]. I want to call attention of the membership of the House to this fact, that such a speech as that was never possible either during or following a Democratic administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I am sorry, but I can not yield at this time. I have studied the political history of the United States, and there was never a Democratic administration in power without the national debt was increased, and they had to borrow money for the running expenses of the country.

My colleague from Illinois thinks it is a terrible thing for the Treasury Department, under a Republican administration, to estimate that there will be a surplus of $300,000,000, and discover that by the economy program and good business judgment used in national affairs we have a surplus of $535,000,000, which has made it possible in the past eight years to reduce the national debt by $1,760,000,000.

The one danger confronting us is that through the generosity of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle they want to reduce the national income to a point where the Republican administration will find itself in the same kind of a condition that they are always in, namely, a deficit.

I do not think that the prosperity of the country hinges directly on keeping the income of the United States, in its unusual prosperous condition, down to the last penny of margin, so that if there is anything hidden in the way of a slowing up of business, that we will wake up the morning after a little short in finances to meet our obligations. I admit that that would be the finest kind of a condition for our colleagues on the other side of the aisle—if they could have it happen in the next year or two. I am sure, my colleagues, that although we may like the thought of tax reduction, they will think that over before they make the bill impossible of passing.

It is more pleasant to take off a tax than to put one on. I am wondering how many million dollars are going to be added to the charge on the Treasury by the same gentlemen that voted to take off about $57,000,000 in addition to the $235,000,000 already provided for.

That is the only comment I want to make. The gentleman from Illinois has paid to the Republican administration one of the greatest compliments that any man could pay to it, to wit, that we have succeeded in economies beyond the wildest dreams of the man who holds the purse strings, the Secretary of the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard very briefly upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. The gentleman says that in the history of this country, which he says he has read—I do not believe it—he read a Republican campaign book—never has the Democratic Party reported a surplus. If the gentleman will read the history of this country he will find that never but once since this Government was established has this Government been out of debt and had a surplus which it could distribute amongst the States, and that is in the Democratic administration beginning on the 4th of March, 1829, when under Andrew Jackson. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not the floor, the House has it. O gentlemen, laugh because a great Democrat did what the gentleman from Ohio says no Democrat ever has done. He paid the debt of the United States absolutely out, and distributed millions of dollars amongst the States which they have never been called upon to refund. That is one of the accomplishments of the Democratic Party, and that is but a small part of them; but when the gentleman undertakes to speak of the history of this country and the Democratic Party, I think he should at least read it before he perpetrates that kind of a canard upon this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was not that at the time when the Democratic Party was called the Republican Party?

Mr. STEVENSON. But it was the Democratic Party. It was called the Republican or Anti-Federalist Party, and that was before the fellows took charge of the name "Republican" who stood upon the principle that the Republican Party stands upon to-day, to wit, the principle that a few rich people should rule the country and that the great mass should not. They called our party the Republican party because it stood for the inarticulate mass, which it has always stood for, and which it represents here today. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The Jackson administration finally fixed the name of Democratic Party upon it. We have always carried it proudly, and frequently successfully, since. There were many times subsequently when Democratic administrations reported surplus funds. Grover Cleveland on March 4, 1889, turned over to Benjamin Harrison a healthy surplus, and Harrison on March 4, 1893, turned back to Cleveland a Treasury so bare that the gold reserve was depleted to the extent that bonds had to be sold to secure gold to restore the reserve and save the credit of the country. March 4, 1897, Cleveland again turned over a solvent Treasury to McKinley and so did Wilson to Harding in 1921. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PART IV.—SPECIAL TAXES

SEC. 431. TAX ON USE OF FOREIGN-BUILT BOATS

Section 702 of the revenue act of 1926 is amended by adding after the end of the first paragraph a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"On and after July 1, 1928, the rates shall be as follows: Yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, motor boats with fixed engines, and sailing boats, of over 5 net tons, length over 32 feet and not over 50 feet, $10 for each foot; length over 50 feet and not over 100 feet, $20 for each foot; length over 100 feet, $40 for each foot; except that the increase in rates shall not apply to a yacht or other boat built, or for the building of which a contract was entered into, before December 1, 1927."

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Iowa is about to move to rise, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] desires to offer an amendment and to reserve his privilege so that he can consider it in the morning.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: Page 193, strike out lines 8 to 19, inclusive.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 1, the revenue bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, in the Committee of the Whole I asked unanimous consent that Members have general leave to extend their remarks on section 421. I am informed that that request should be made in the House and not in the committee. I therefore ask unanimous consent that all Members have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD upon section 421 of the revenue bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman make it general, so that every Member can extend his remarks once on the entire bill or on any portion of it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. With the understanding that they are his own remarks.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes; and I think the time should be limited to five legislative days.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the request. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that for five legislative days after the bill is passed by the House all Members may extend their own remarks on the subject of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, for nearly a week now we have been engaged in the consideration of the general revenue bill for this session of Congress. Through the general prosperity of the country we find ourselves in the happy position of having a large surplus in the Treasury. This has enabled the committee to report for our consideration the present bill with many items of the 1926 revenue law either eliminated or reduced.

I rise to address you this morning on the item contained in the bill known as the automobile excise tax, which the committee reports as an item carrying a tax of 1½ per cent upon the price of the car at the factory.

The tax upon the automotive industry of the country was placed there as a war measure for the purpose of raising revenue to prosecute the World War. There could be no argument at that time. Money must be obtained from such sources as possible. The motorists of the Nation in the years since have paid that tax, realizing the purpose for which it was collected; but now, gentlemen of the House, they come before this Congress and ask at your hands relief, believing that their plea is one of justice and equity.

The plea will be made that already all the reduction that it is possible to make from the 1926 tax schedule has been made. The great bulk of that reduction has been upon corporations and the first benefit from such reduction will accrue to the men of means and not to the poorer taxpayer. The reduction of the automobile tax will favor 4,000,000 taxpayers and a class of taxpayers represented in the lower brackets of tax collections. I want to address myself to the fact that the complete repeal of the excise tax on automobiles is only one of justice and equity. My district is vitally interested in this matter, for within four cities of that district there are 187,034 employees receiving a pay roll of $294,907,207. These figures are applicable only to those employed in the motor plants themselves and not in affiliated accessory corporations.

While the elimination of this item in the bill will increase the deductions from the receipts from the 1926 sum additional of $35,000,000, that money paid by the individual purchasers of motor cars will go back into general industry and reflect itself in increased revenue to the Government from other sources. Thus the loss is more visionary than real.

May I now give to you my reasons for asking you this morning to support the motion for the repeal of the tax or the elimination of this item from the present bill under consideration?

First. It is a discriminatory tax. It is a tax levied on a special product for the purpose of general revenue. It has singled out and to the extent of the tax imposed penalized one line of manufactured product while virtually to-day every other product that could be placed in a like category has been relieved from any excise tax. There was no thought of such a tax upon the manufacture of automobiles until the grave demands of war called for the levy of excise taxes upon products that would not be justified in time of peace. There is no tax upon the manufacture of pianos, though in a large extent they might be termed a luxury. That is likewise true of radios and other products of a like nature.

Congress has already repealed the war-excise tax upon every commodity formerly so burdened with one or two exceptions. I desire to insert here a table of the excise taxes imposed at one time and now removed. You will notice in that list the tax still remains upon automobiles and motor cycles and firearms, while every other item has been erased. This table clearly shows the discrimination. No fair government can afford to ignore the principles of just and equitable levies. A tax program should be general in its application and not discriminatory against any one industry or any group of individuals. We contend that the excise tax on automobiles is both. The seventy-odd million dollars raised the past year by this method of taxation has been a burden upon 4,000,000 of people, while the blessings of the automobile and the industry has been of general benefit to the entire Nation.

In the second place, I want to call your attention to the further fact that this tax is not only a discriminatory tax, therefore unjust, but it is also a tax on essential transportation.

Unless one has given a careful study to the recent developments of transportation they can not comprehend to what extent the automobile to-day has become the great means of transportation for both freight and passengers. The automobile in the United States travels one hundred and seventy-five times as many actual miles and seven times as many passenger-miles as does the steam passenger train. It has revolutionized local transportation, and is destined to become a still more important means for the quick and easy, as well as cheap, transportation of freight and persons. Other units of transportation were the first to be relieved of emergency war taxes because it was recognized they were of vital importance to the economic life of the Nation.

Secretary Mellon is quoted by the papers as saying:

> The automobile is one of the railroads' chief competitors. Our railroads are paying heavy taxes to the United States Government, a part of which is being used for highway purposes.

It is well known, gentlemen, that this tax which the railroad corporations pay to the United States Government is collected in one way or another through rates on merchandise or persons from the very John Smiths and Harry Jones who are compelled to pay the excise tax on automobiles, and which they can not pass on to anyone else to pay. The Secretary in this argument of comparing the tax on the automobile owner to the tax on railroad corporations is falling into the common error of reasoning by those who desire to see the tax continued, namely, that the corporations manufacturing automobiles pay this tax instead of the motorists.

Let us carry this reasoning a step further. The present excise tax of 3 per cent on automobiles is entirely on passenger cars, Congress having exempted "automobile truck chassis and bodies, automobile wagon chassis and bodies, and tractors." This leaves the present excise tax only upon passenger cars. It is the truck that is affecting railroad transportation, but that can not be adjusted by taxation. It is a matter of the transportation system of the Nation adjusting themselves to this new system of transporting merchandise and persons.

In this connection let me call the attention of the House to the fact that at the World War's termination $2,000,000,000 worth of road-building machinery was sold by the Federal Government to France for $450,000,000. Some of this machinery was sold back by France to some of our States for 100 cents on the dollar. I would suggest that when the money is paid to us the Government should place it in the Federal good-roads fund and be used to aid the various States in pushing through transcontinental highways, not only from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but also in closing up the many highway gaps now existing between the North and the South.

We urge that inasmuch as motor-vehicle owners of this Nation have given to the Government more than a billion dollars through the Federal war tax, that the Government show its appreciation now by applying the $450,000,000 toward the building of Federal highways. Such roads will save millions of dollars in wear and tear on automobiles and will bring prosperity to every section and industry.

I want to call your attention further that this tax is only one of the additional burdens by way of taxation that the motorist is compelled to pay. He buys his car and before he can possess it he pays this Federal war tax, then he must pay a State registration fee, then he must pay a tax upon the value of the car, and then he must pay a tax for the privilege of driving it, and in 45 States of the Union a tax from 2 to 4 cents per gallon on gasoline in order to run it. In other words, in 1926 there was levied upon this method of transportation and paid by the motor public a total tax, Federal, State, and municipal, of $712,272,350. These are the figures secured from the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue, Bureau of Public Roads, and municipal statistics. In other words, the motorist who has already paid all the general taxes required of the citizen of the Nation as income tax, indirect tax, and a corporation tax, if he is in business or a stockholder in a corporation, is still further taxed for this discriminatory, unjust Federal tax. The total of all motor-vehicle taxes in 1926 of $712,000,000 plus is equivalent to approximately 70 per cent of all the annual rural highway cost. The average tax per registered motor vehicle was $32.35 and in some States much higher.

Let me call attention again to what this industry, or rather this class, of our citizenship has paid in war taxes. At present I stated the tax was bringing to the Treasury of the United States between seventy and eighty millions of dollars. On December 31, 1926, the total revenue from the war excise tax on all automobiles and equipment had amounted to the vast sum of $1,039,071,746.53. No one can argue that this industry and this group of citizens has not paid its share of the war expense, and now we pray that they be relieved and not penalized further.

I want to turn now, gentlemen of the committee, and discuss very briefly the fallacies that have been brought forth as arguments for the retention of this discriminatory, unjust war excise tax.

It is contended that the automobile is a luxury and that those who are able to afford it should not complain of this Federal tax. Gentlemen, there might have been a day when the motor vehicle could have been classed as a luxury. That day has long since passed away. It is a necessity to-day to the extent of 90 per cent of its use. The motor is foremost in the movement of food from the truck farm to the city market, from the farm to the warehouse shipping point, and has thus become an absolute necessity both as a light truck and as a passenger car to the producer of the foodstuffs of the Nation. It is also foremost in the movement of raw materials and manufactured goods, and thus becomes to the smaller manufacturers his vehicle by which he receives the raw material for his plant and then in turn transports the manufactured article to the market.

It also is readily understood and conceived how the motor vehicle is in the front rank as a necessity for the transportation of persons both within cities and between cities. In fact, it is fast taking the place of the electric car and the street railway as a method of transportation.

May I call my colleague's attention in this connection to the further fact that the cheap automobile has made possible the doing away of the tenement district of our industrial cities and enabling the workmen because of his easy means of transportation to live in the outskirts of a city in God's sunshine and clean air where his family and children are growing into better citizens than was possible under the old régime.

Gentlemen, the automobile is not a luxury. It is the necessity to the farmer, the business man, the professional man, and to-day is the essential in the activities of our modern life, whether we are thinking of the farm or the city.

Another fallacy often heard and argued is that this tax should remain as long as the Federal Government gives financial aid to the States for Federal roads. Secretary Mellon calls attention in this connection to the Federal appropriation for good roads that in the fiscal year 1928 will run as high as $71,000,000 and for the fiscal year 1929 he estimates it will be $75,000,000. The Secretary then says:

> These expenditures by the Federal Government are for the direct and immediate benefit of automobile owners. They should make some contribution in return.

We desire to take issue with our most able Secretary of the Treasury when he states that the above expenditures by the Federal Government for good roads is for the direct and immediate benefit of automobile owners. There is no Federal expenditure for specific purposes that is so general in the application of its benefits as is that expended for Federal roads. May I call to your attention one illustration of that truth? It is entirely changing the isolated, small, illy furnished schoolhouse to the centralized, well-equipped school buildings in charge of trained, competent teachers. This is only one instance of a hundred ways whereby our highways are for the direct and immediate advantage of the entire communities and States affected. Surely Congress will not give any weight to such an argument, for I am sure that my colleagues readily recognize that it has never been the Federal policy to tax any one group of its citizens for a specific purpose of benefit. We do not tax the farmer to-day with a specific tax for the support of that great activity of our Government which we call the Department of Agriculture. While its benefits may seem on the face of it to be for one class of citizens and one industry, we all recognize that the work of the Department of Agriculture is for the general good.

May I cite a specific instance of the reason? The Sixty-ninth Congress, in view of the alarming devastations of the corn borer, appropriated $10,000,000, to be met by a like amount by the States affected, in an attempt to stop the ravages of this pest. We probably will appropriate a like amount, if not double, in this Congress for this purpose; but no one will advance the argument that the farmers directly concerned and receiving an immediate benefit should bear a specific tax to meet the expenditure.

The shipping industry of the Nation is not taxed with a specific tax or the money appropriated by this Government for the development of our river transportation, our harbor improvements, or our Lighthouse Service, while the benefits of the money thus appropriated seem to be for the benefits of our transportation and shipping interests, yet the Government recognizes that adequate and continuous transportation is a vital necessity of the Nation's life. There is no connection, gentlemen, between the principle of the excise tax on automobiles and aid given by the Federal Government for the building of highways. While the man who possesses the automobile will travel with greater comfort and deliver the products of his industry with greater dispatch because we possess adequate and well-built highways, the benefits accruing from these highways are to all the people and not to any one class or industry. The Federal highway act was passed in 1916, a full year in advance of the war tax levied on motor vehicles. Further, there is no provision in the act, and none was contemplated in its passage, that the cost of Federal aid toward these Federal highways should be levied upon the motorists or upon the industry. Let me repeat that Federal aid represents Government participation in an enterprise for general good.

One more argument that is advanced by some as an excuse for not removing this unjust tax is that if the tax were removed the motorists would not profit by its repeal. This is an argument that is one and the same as the argument that the excise tax on automobiles is a tax on the industry and paid by the manufacturers. Of course, there is no reason or excuse for my answering such an argument before this intelligent group of men. You all understand very readily that this excise tax is attached to the price of a car and paid for by the purchaser when the car leaves the factory or sales station. The manufacturer is simply the tax gatherer for the Federal Government. The tax has always been added and billed separately.

Gentlemen, my district, which I have the honor to represent in Congress, is perhaps the center of the automobile industry of the Nation, and I am here to say to you that the automotive industry has been a leader in the industries of the Nation in constantly seeking to reduce the price of its manufactured product to the consumer. Through mass production and efficient methods the automobile industry has constantly been increasing the value in efficiency of its output by reducing the cost to the purchaser. Practically every manufacturer in the industry, and especially is this true of the producers in quantity cars, has put himself on record that the prices will be reduced instantly to the consumer to the amount of the tax.

The average retail price per car is $825; eliminating the tax would mean a saving of approximately $18 on every purchase.

Gentlemen, the motoring public believes it has a right to the relief it is asking for at your hands to-day. The fact that 4,000,000 of these motorists would benefit from this item of tax reduction ought to be of great interest to you if the principle of unjust taxation does not seem an issue at this time. We are asking that this House stand upon the sound principle of Federal taxation—no class legislation, no discrimination, but justice and equity in general levies.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, the people who pay the automobile excise tax are long-suffering in their appeal for relief They are now almost alone in paying a war tax, when the war which made it necessary has been ended more than 10 years.

The automobile tax was originally created as an emergency tax. It was imposed upon 45 commodities which were grouped together as semiluxuries. Forty-three of these commodities, seemingly the least luxurious, have been relieved of this abnormal burden, leading logically to the conclusion that the automobile is the least necessary of all. Whether such is the case can best be answered by those millions of people who depend upon the automobile for daily transportation in every kind of business.

Successive revenue acts have removed this excise from all but 2 of the 45 kinds of goods originally included. In time of war no one of these 45 industries singled out to pay this tax was slacker enough to raise any protest. And in the uncertain days of reconstruction, when the Congress was striving to bring things back to normal, these industries and the country at large were willing to accept the mandate of Congress as to the order in which these taxes should be repealed.

But now that the Treasury Department comes out flat-footedly and asks Congress to retain the automobile excise as a permanent source of revenue, the automobile users of the country, of whom there are 22,000,000 or more, and the automobile distributors, manufacturers, laborers and people in allied industries, the farmers, and many other groups dependent upon automobile transportation have protested vigorously, and rightly so, against being thus discriminated against.

If it is proper to retain the automobile excise as a permanent revenue source, then it is equally as justifiable to restore the excise tax on the whole list of 45 products originally included. I should say it would be more justifiable. We might then even have a general sales tax. The fact that all but two of the commodities have already been exempted only serves to emphasize the discrimination.

Gentlemen who support the Treasury viewpoint, and I favor conservative reduction, will say it can not be abolished now because the surplus in the Treasury is not sufficient to justify it. Assuming these to be the facts, which I do not grant at this time, then I would say that some other reduction ought to be sacrificed and the automobile tax repealed now, because, in view of the expressed intention of the Treasury Department to make this remaining excise tax a permanent one, Congress can not leave even a vestige of it without seeming to approve that indefensible policy of the Treasury. Nothing Congress might do with respect to this tax bill, in my opinion, could be more unfortunate or more unjust.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the bill for tax reduction now under consideration is a good bill and will afford considerable relief to many who are now carrying the burden of excessive Federal taxation. However, it can be made a much better bill by the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, as well as other amendments which will doubtless be offered later.

In my opinion one of the greatest impediments to prosperity and happiness to-day is the excessive and most unbearable burden that the people throughout the entire country are carrying in the various forms of taxes; heavy Federal taxes, heavy State taxes, heavy county and local taxes, heavy municipal taxes, taxes galore of every form and fashion.

This tax of 3 per cent on automobiles is a relic of the war and was never intended as a peace-time measure. This tax should be promptly and completely wiped out, and by so doing we would afford relief that would be more generally and widely diffused and benefit more people who are heavily burdened than anything we can do at this time.

First. This tax should be removed, because it is unnecessary and an unfair and discriminating war-emergency tax on a special class. I say it is unnecessary, because I maintain there will be ample revenue for the proper and safe administration of the Government if this tax was all taken off. The 1½ per cent now left in the bill produces about $33,000,000 annually. If this amount is removed, the total reduction in the bill would amount to only about $263,000,000, provided the Garner amendment remains in the bill.

So long as we do not go over three hundred million in our reduction, I have no fear of a deficit. True, the Secretary of the Treasury cries, "Danger" and "Deficit," but when we recall that in every tax bill since the World War he has cried "Danger, danger," and "Deficit, deficit," and that none of his alarming predictions have been fulfilled we cease to be alarmed at his cries. Notwithstanding the fact that in each tax-reduction bill we have made a much heavier cut than he has said it was safe to make, still we have had a surplus, above necessary revenue, of from one hundred million to six hundred million dollars per annum. The people have at last become deaf to his cries of "Deficit."

The tax should be removed, in my opinion, because of the unparalleled burden the automobiles are carrying in the way of State and local taxes. It has been stated that the motor-vehicle taxes now amount to $712,277,350, or did amount to that for the year 1926, in Federal, State, and local taxes. In many of the States the cost of highway construction is being largely or entirely placed upon motor vehicles. They not only pay general property tax but gasoline tax, license tax, and many other special taxes, such as license fees, and so forth.

In the State of North Carolina, which I have the honor to partly represent, we are nearing the completion of a marvelous highway-building program. To this program the Federal Government has up to date contributed about $16,000,000, while the State has expended of its own money around $100,000,000 on our State highway system. We are levying and collecting for highway purposes around $14,000,000 per annum entirely by tax on gasoline, automobile and truck license, and title fees. Out of this huge sum we are able to pay the interest on our road bonds, set aside a sufficient sinking fund for the retirement of the bonds, bear the expense of maintaining the roads, and pay for the administration of the law.

It has been stated that the Federal excise tax paid by the motorist up to the present amounts to $1,060,000,000, this in addition to all State, county, and municipal taxes. This is about four hundred million in excess of the contribution thus far made by the Federal Government to the national highway building program. So it is certain that if the building of Federal highways or roads is in any way chargeable to the motor industry, that obligation has long since been more than discharged. By the removal of this unjust tax and gross discrimination all classes of our people will be benefited. We have reached the point in our national progress where the automobile is no longer a luxury or semiluxury, but one of the indispensable necessities of everyday life. There are now more than 19,000,000 passenger cars in the United States, and are being sold at the rate of about 4,000,000 per annum. And 28 per cent of all the cars in the country are owned by farmers, and they are an essential instrument in their daily occupations.

This tax bears heavily on the small merchant, the clerk in the store, the wage earner, physician, preacher, lawyer, and, in fact, all classes of people in all conditions of life.

Here is an opportunity to bring farm relief which should not be overlooked. Something like one-third of all the cars in the country are owned by farmers. This tax is not paid by the manufacturer or the dealer but only advanced by them, and every dollar of it is paid by the user of the car. It is passed on from manufacturer to the dealer, and from the dealer to the consumer as a separate item on the bill or invoice. Sixty-eight per cent of the cars sold last year went to towns of less than 25,000. The average retail price of a car is $825, wholesale price about $600, and 3 per cent of this would mean a saving on each car of $18.

There is no more justification for a tax an automobiles than there would be for a tax on plows, threshing machines, or any other kind of farm implement. The automobile is used by the farmer in transporting his produce and crops to market. Every farmer uses them for this purpose. Millions of pounds of tobacco have been transported to market in my State this year in automobiles owned by the farmers. The farmer sadly needs this relief.

Practically all the cheap cars that are sold to-day are sold on time and often when the car is worn out and no longer suitable for use all the purchase price of the car has not yet been paid. So far as I know, no one has protested against the removal of this tax save and except Secretary Mellon, and I do not believe anyone would consider him qualified to speak for the great masses of the people. In many respects Secretary Mellon is a great man, as no one of ordinary ability could have built up the powerful organization he owns and controls; neither could they have amassed the great fortunes he has amassed; but one element of true greatness he lacks. He certainly knows nothing of the hard road traveled by the great body of the American people.

The taskmasters of Egypt had more sympathy and consideration for the children of Israel, who were the bondslaves of Pharaoh, than Andrew Mellon has for those who earn and eat their bread by the sweat of their faces. Secretary Mellon believes in a sales tax. He believes people should pay taxes in proportion to what they consume and not upon their ability to pay.

You all doubtless received a letter this morning from the National Grange. From that letter I quote the following:
